Cream of Potato Soup.—Pare four small potatoes, cover with boiling water and boil rapidly for five minutes. Throw the water away and cover with a pint and a half of boiling water. Add a slice of onion, a bay leaf and a few celery tops chopped fine. The green leaves of the celery will answer the purpose. Cover and boil fifteen minutes or until the potatoes are soft. While these are boiling put a pint of milk in the double boiler, add a tablespoonful of butter and one of flour rubbed together; press the potatoes through a fine sieve, using the water in which they were boiled; add this mixture to the hot milk in the double boiler. Stir until thoroughly heated and serve.

Stands For Spools of Cotton.

Women who do a great deal of sewing will find a little stand to hold spools of cotton a great convenience. The only materials required are a solid piece of wood perhaps an inch thick and either round or square for the base and either a knitting needle or a round piece of wood some six inches long for the upright piece. If the needle is used it can be forced into the wood of the base, but in case the slender round piece of wood is preferred it can be kept in place with a screw or long tack. This holder has place for three or four spools of cotton, which revolve freely when you take hold of an end of the thread and begin to draw it off. The point of the holder makes a convenient resting place for a thimble. Of course if you are of a decorative turn of mind you will sandpaper your wooden base and then paint or stain it.

Comfort and independence abide with those who can postpone their desires.—Success Magazine.

TIMELY TOPICS.

WHEN I HAVE TIME.

(Providence News-Democrat.)

When I have time, so many things
I'll do
To make life happier and more fair,
For those whose lives are crowded
now with care,
I'll help to lift them from their low despair,
When I have time.

When I have time, the friend I love
so well,
Shall know no more the weary,
toiling days;
I'll lead her feet in pleasant paths always,
And cheer her heart with words of sweetest praise,
When I have time.

When you have time, the friend you hold so dear,
May be beyond the reach of all your sweet intent,
May never know that you so kindly meant
To fill her heart with sweet content,
When you had time.

Now is the time. Ah, friend, no longer wait,
To scatter loving smiles and words
of cheer,
To those around whose lives are now
so dear,
That may not meet you in the coming year,
Now is the time.

A United States census report just published, gives the population in 1905 of the republic, including Alaska and outlying insular dependencies, as 93,184,240. The continental population in the same year was 83,941,510, an increase since the year 1900 of 7,946,935. Thus it appears that there are between nine and ten million people under the flag who are not citizens of the republic, but governed as subjects having no voice in the government, in plain violation of the principle laid down in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the constitution, that that government derives its just authority from the consent of the governed. By a decision, based on a legal fiction, the Supreme Court decided that the outlying possessions were not part of the United States. Thus the boasted first universal principle of American liberty, that 'all men are born equal,' was set aside and the narrow doctrine, that only those born in the U. S., and those of a certain complexion, are free and equal, substituted. A nation, like an individual, has a right to revise and change its principles. The fact that the United States has done so only shows the fallibility of human institutions.

CANADA AND THE COUNCIL.

Do Citizens Favor Closer Ties With the Mother Country?

It was thought at first that Sir Wilfrid Laurier would either not care to go to the great inter-colonial conference in London, or that his Parliamentary duties would not let him go.

The Premier will be present at the council board; but Canada has been strangely silent in respect of the questions which the conference will discuss. It would be a nice question whether this is due to the indifference of pre-occupation, or to the fact that the Dominion has still to find a large and commanding and united voice upon vital questions. The Premier is loyal to British connection, but he is, as he himself would confess, a somewhat cold Imperialist. He would allow the present relations of the Dominion with the Mother Country to go on as they are.

He is content to await the processes of national evolution, which makes no noise and accomplish themselves slowly. Above all, Sir Wilfrid has never disguised his fear that closer relations with the heart of the Empire might involve us with British militarism, with which, as he contends, Canada should have nothing to do—her mission being one of peaceful development, detached from the complications or the passions of the great powers of the world.

Free Trade Impossible.

A majority of Canadians could probably be found who would be heartily in favor of closer relations with the Motherland, but they have not been brought together under the stress of earnest feeling. Sir Wilfrid has said that free trade within the Empire is impossible, and that nothing else would avail. Many think that it is not beyond the bounds of possibility to bring about a genuine free trade between all parts of the Empire, as in the case of the United States, which, however, are more homogeneous than the widely separated parts of the British Empire, and that, at any rate, a carefully adjusted fiscal arrangement, thought out to meet varying needs, and yet which would have the preferential feature for all the colonies, might well be a result of the forthcoming conference. Some go further, and look to the establishment of a great Council of the Empire, in which all the sister nations and colonies would be represented, and which would deal with all large and commanding questions of an international character. Nor need this be thought an iridescent dream.

History is made rapidly now, and concentration of power is the law and custom of the age. Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, seem to be more interested in the work of the conference than the Dominion, which—unless the latter have the ultimate thought of an independent existence—is vitally concerned in this meeting of the representatives of all parts of the Empire.

ONTARIO'S DEATH RATE.

Rate Was 15.0 Per Thousand In February Last.

Returns from 765 division registrars to the Provincial Board of Health show that out of a population of 2,128,320, or 98 per cent. of the inhabitants of the province, the total number of deaths during February were 2,760, or a rate of 15 per thousand. The number of cases of contagious diseases reported is 93 less than in February, 1906, and the number of deaths are 32 fewer. There was a reduction in the number of deaths from scarlet fever, diphtheria, consumption and whooping cough. Of typhoid fever the number of cases reported was 277 less than in 1906, but the number of deaths was the same, indicating that many cases were not reported. There were 21 more instances of smallpox brought to the attention of the department.

	Cases.	Deaths.
Smallpox	76	0
Scarlet Fever	150	3
Diphtheria	156	20
Measles	337	5
Whooping Cough	34	8
Typhoid Fever	34	8
Tuberculosis	170	170
	1,077	251

Black kid gloves generally wear out at the finger tips and then assume a rusty brown tint, which is anything but pleasant, although the other part of the glove may be perfectly good. When this happens, take a little black ink, mix it with a small quantity of olive oil and apply it to the finger tips. Leave it until dry, and the gloves will be very much improved in appearance.

TRAPPERS WEND HOME

BACK FROM SOLITARY HAUNTS OF FUR-BEARING ANIMALS.

Collecting of Valuable Furs a Hazardous Business—Some Articles of the Trapper's Outfit—The Home of the Musk Rat—A Tit-Bit for Minks—Over Hundreds of Miles of Snow—Traveling at Night.

One by one, always one by one, the worn out trappers are trudging back to civilization after their winter labors, tugging at their rude sleds, piled high with the pelts for miladi's furs and milord's coats. Every spring, when the thinning coats of the fur bearing animals give the unmistakable signal that it is high time to get away, that same dreary procession begins.

The collecting of valuable furs from the woods is a hazardous business, such as nobody but men of tried courage and perfect constitution can well undertake. But as the reward is seldom large, and oftener meagre, those who follow the business are, as a rule, either past the prime of life or are maimed in a way to unfit them for earning good wages at other occupations. Of the two or three score of men who went into the woods last fall, with scanty provisions and all the traps they could haul, seventy-five per cent. were past fifty years of age and more than fifty per cent. of mixed French and Indian blood, the Indian element furnishing the woodcraft and the French giving the necessary physical vigor and tenacity of purpose.

The one indispensable article in the trapper's outfit is the long and high posted frame sled, or "snow yacht," as it is called. It is a light and loose jointed construction of hard wood, having broad and thin runners of polished sapling beech. The sleds are wide enough to hold up a load of 600 pounds on soft snow, and can coast steep and bushy hillsides with the speed of steel shod toboggans.

Going in, this sled is laden with Indian meal, prepared flour, molasses, black tea, fat salt pork, a blanket, an extra pair of woollen socks and all the new traps that a strong man can haul. Packed under the bag of meal and away from the wet is a single shot rifle with a short barrel, and on top of the load and ready for use at short notice is a light axe, with a short handle. A paper of salt, a box of matches, a strong clasp knife, a small file for sharpening the axe and knife and a bountiful supply of tobacco complete the outfit for a stay of four or five months.

Traps for mink are placed near shallow and muddy ponds, where the number of conical houses made from flags and dead grasses indicates that muskrats abound. Mink feed upon muskrats, and the presence of the muskrat homes means good trapping.

The stouter otter traps are set near open holes in the ice and close under sunny clay banks, where the otters take winter exercise in sliding. For the taking of the valuable fisher cats the traps are set among hummocks and seams in the ice, close inshore, and are baited with fish on the trencher and lines of frozen minnows or shiners strewn from open holes in the ice in the direction of the traps, to lead the wily beasts to destruction.

A trapper must start early and work very hard to set out a fresh line of traps for twenty miles along a stream in a day. At night he seeks out a thick clump of fir or spruce on the southern slope of a steep hill, and, having shovelled away the snow with his snowshoes and grubbed out the stumps, surrounds himself with three thick walls and a roof of evergreen boughs. Filling the inside deeply with hemlock or fir brush for a bed, he kindles a big fire in front of the southern opening or "door" and sleeps soundly until the crimson bars above the eastern hills mark the coming day. Then, putting his tin dipper over the coals to draw a strong brew of tea, and eating some cold roasted muskrat from the pocket of his hunting coat, he takes his remaining traps on the sled, crosses the divide to the parallel stream and returns to the home camp, setting his traps on the way and reaching his starting point at nightfall.

The concentrated essence of joy in the trapper's life is when, with traps oiled and hidden away, with sled loaded with furs and belt buckled up tightly, he finds himself facing south and east and feels the tug of the sled rope pulling from behind. At times he travels more than one hundred miles over melting banks of snow that clog his snowshoes and cause him to ache in every joint. Though the going may get so bad that, except for a few hours after midnight, he can make no progress at all he is never depressed, for he knows that somewhere "away over there," out and beyond the interminable woods, outside the clustered mountains and hills that fence him in, is a fur buyer who will pay him money for what he has earned so hardly and after the money come the bathroom, the barber shop, the clothing store and then—ah, then! a warm and cosey seat in front of some bar, where the fluids he likes comes to him at the wave of his hand.

Raising Oysters.

R. H. Bryce of Vancouver, who is deeply interested in the oyster industry on the coast, explains that the oysters which will be propagated are of a very choice character.

The sheltered waters in which they are found afford splendid opportunities for propagation, and the company is concerned now in thinning them out so that they may have a chance to develop to their fullest. The inlets are so perfect in configuration for the purposes intended that it would be difficult to arrange an artificial bay better adapted for the raising of oysters.

CHAPTER XV.

e great historical buildings in bear witness with eloquence and y to the genius and ambition of many royal rulers who during centuries of a wonderfully dra- history have led a nation itself with genius and ambition. Ver- alone is the exception, for in illes even the most ignorant and looded of modern sightseers feels ry step that the years have van- that he breathes the air of the age, that he is face to face with nonument of one historic figure ne alone—Louis XIV. Gone is the memory of 1870; gone is the dy of Marie Antoinette. Alike in tately splendour of the Galerie Glaces, in the cold loneliness of the chapel, in the ordered magnificence of these haughty gardens, most of all in the imperial pomp of the royal bedroom, dominates the spirit of the Roi Soleil—the King who made kingship the art and the science and the creed of a nation's life.

As one steps to-day into the empty stillness of that memorable Oeil de Boeuf the light from the oval windows seems to fall only on those white and gold doors beyond which lies the state bed-chamber. But wait in patience and the loneliness will vanish; the room is now crowded with the courtiers awaiting the grand levee of majesty; a hundred tongues are discussing eagerly the events of the hour, a hundred eyes watch with feverish eagerness all who have the right to pass and repass those jealously-guarded portals, behind which monarchy, on whose caprice turns the fate of ministers and nobles, is dressing.

"The King," said Mont Rouge to St. Benoit, "is as playful this morning as he was last night. Ah, you have not heard?" he added. "Well, when the Duke de Richelieu was pulling off His Majesty's boots, 'How many times, by the bye, Duke, have you been in the Bastille?' asked the King. 'Three times, Sire,' Richelieu replied stiffly. 'Odd numbers are unlucky,' said the King in his slow way, and even Richelieu was annoyed."

"A pretty plain hint," St. Benoit remarked. "What has Richelieu been doing? Another love affair and a duel?"

"Oh, no; he was only saucy to the Pompadour at supper. That woman is itching to show that dukes can be treated like kitchen wenches."

"Perhaps. But she doesn't get her way with everyone. De Nerac has positively refused to enter her service, and the King is more pleased with him than ever."

"It is true, then, that he has been given the Cordon Bleu?" Mont Rouge demanded with a flash of jealousy.

"Quite true, the lucky dog," answered the Duke of Pontchartrain, who had joined them, "and the extraordinary thing is that the Pompadour, who was very angry with De Nerac, jested about it last night."

"But what has De Nerac done to get the Cordon Bleu?" Mont Rouge growled.

The Duke shrugged his shoulders. "Have you forgotten the night before Fontenoy, my friend?" His voice dropped. "This mysterious affair of yesterday in the woods, too," he whispered, "is all part of the same infernal business."

"You don't mean it?"

"I do. The King and the ministers are convinced that the Vincennes business, this affair of the woods, and that Fontenoy treachery all come from the same hand—a hand near at home."

Mont Rouge and St. Benoit drew the Duke into a corner.

"The traitor then is here? In Versailles?" St. Benoit asked.

"It is the only explanation."

Mont Rouge passed a perplexed hand over his chin. "Good Lord!" he ejaculated. "Think you that woman has—"

"No, no," replied the Duke with sharp conviction. "The Pompadour is as anxious to discover the traitor as the King or d'Argenson himself. You may take your oath of that. Heavens! man, if she can lay bare this inscrutable mystery she will earn the King's gratitude for the rest of her naughty life."

"And what has De Nerac to do with ——?"

"What De Nerac discovered last night," St. Benoit interrupted, "is known only to the King and himself. You will get nothing from him; he is pledged to secrecy. But"—he paused to beckon to the Abbe de St. Victor to join them—"but it makes it more necessary than ever for us to have De Nerac on our side."

"I do not see that," Mont Rouge objected.

St. Benoit's foot tapped impatiently. "If our scheme," he urged, "to persuade the King to expel the Pompadour is to succeed, De Nerac must be our ally. It is as clear as daylight."

"Of course," said the Duke, "of course. Drive De Nerac into the Pompadour's arms and together they will discover the traitor, and the Comte de Mont Rouge will presently be compelled to prefer the village wenches on his estates in Poitou to the ladies of Versailles."

"Yes," the Abbe assented. "We must have De Nerac, for he knows more than any of us, and he has courage. Courage is a rare thing in Versailles."

"I agree," Mont Rouge said slowly. "But if he won't join us in getting rid of that detestable woman then he must share her fate."

"There is Andre," St. Benoit gladly remarked. "Let us congratulate him on his refusal to stain his honor by obedience to a wanton of the bourgeoisie."

But they were anticipated by the Chevalier. "My felicitations, Vicomte," the young man was saying, "for you are the first to teach our new and high-born marquise her place."

"You are very kind," Andre replied sweetly, to the disgust and astonishment of his friends.

"Mon Dieu!" Mont Rouge growled as the Chevalier smilingly left them to pass into the King's bedroom, for, as a royal favorite he had that privileged entree, "I would sooner pull that coxcomb's ears than accept his congratulations even if I were a Cordon Bleu."

"My dear Mont Rouge," Andre answered, "the King will not permit us now to pull a coxcomb's ears, but some day I hope to have that pleasure."

"Oh, to be sure, some day?" Mont Rouge sneered.

"To be sure. When you have turned out our mistress, Madame la Marquise de Pompadour, you shall help me to pull the ears of the Chevalier de St. Amant."

Andre in fact was in a rare humor. His plans were now arranged to a nicety. With the Pompadour's help "No. 101" was to be discovered and Denise won. The mystery of last night had suggested half-a-dozen clues. His star was once more in the ascendant. The great game to be played required courage, resources and Machiavellian cunning. This was the beginning. The rest would follow. Ah! the white and gold doors were thrown open; hats came off; the King had entered, and all eagerly surveyed his bored, inscrutable countenance.

"Is the Vicomte de Nerac here?" Louis demanded presently, and Andre stepped forward to kiss his hand. "Monsieur le Vicomte," he proceeded in his slow, soft, yet clear voice, "you will bear my humble salutations to her Majesty the Queen and say that I offer her Majesty, for the vacant place of the captain of her guard, the services of the bravest officer in the Chevaulegers of my Guards—yourself."

A loud hum, partly of warm approval, partly of excited and jealous comment, drowned Andre's thanks.

"By G-God," stammered Des Forges, "another s-slap for the fishy g-grisette —eh?"

"She's going, yes, she's going; God be praised!" muttered the Abbe St. Victor.

"What did I tell you?" St. Benoit cried, "more than ever we must keep De Nerac on our side," and Mont Rouge sulkily assented.

The Duke de Pontchartrain thoughtfully stroked his lace ruffles. "I am puzzled," he remarked aside to St. Benoit; "I wonder if it really means that the King has thrown over the grisette, or whether—" he paused.

"Well?" St. Benoit demanded impatiently.

"De Nerac is deep, devilish deep," the Duke mused, "and so is the King. If De Nerac is not on our side it will play old Harry with our plot to have him ruling the roost in her Majesty's apartments."

But his friends laughed his suspicions away. De Nerac had insulted the Pompadour and he had been rewarded with the captaincy of the Queen's Guards. What could be better?

Meanwhile Andre, having executed his commission and been flattered by the joyful reception of the news by the Queen's ladies, was somewhat grimly reflecting in the Hall of the Queen's Guards on this new turn of fortune's wheel. Truly the Pompadour was a wonderful woman. She had promised to arrange and she had kept her word. To be placed in an office which must daily bring him into touch with Denise was better than he had ever dreamed. A genius the Pompadour as he had said, and this was the woman whom the priests and ministers and courtiers hoped to expel. Poor blind fools! They little knew the whole truth. Yes, his star was in the ascendant. The Machievellian game must be played out; it promised victory and Denise.

The rustle of a dress roused him. It was Denise, and surely that was the Chevalier de St. Amant parting from her.

"You have heard the King's will, Mademoiselle," Andre said quietly.

"Yes," she answered. Very lovely she looked at that moment, though her manner was strangely cold.

"You do not congratulate me?"

"No."

Andre glanced at her with sharp surprise.

"After your kind words on my return," he began, "I had hoped, Mademoiselle, more for your congratulations than for those of any other in Versailles."

Denise made no reply; she quietly moved away.

"Denise," he broke out passionately. "Denise——"

"Mademoiselle la Marquire, if you please, Monsieur le Vicomte," she interrupted with her head high in air, and Andre could only gaze at her in mute astonishment.

"Yes," she continued, "Mademoiselle la Marquise for the future. And if you would know the reason ask your conscience, the conscience of one who was once a noble and soldier of France." Andre would have spoken, but she made a peremptory sign with her hand. "It is the second time," she resumed, "I have been bitterly disappointed. Our world believes that you have had the courage to refuse the temptation of that woman, that the King's reward was due to your courage and you loyalty. Unhappily I know better. You are Captain of the Queen's Guards because it is the wish of the Marquise de Pompadour."

"Mademoiselle!"

"You deny it?" She paused. "That, Monsieur le Vicomte, unfortunately does not make it less true. But do not be alarmed. I shall not betray your secret. And if you will, let my silence be due to the friendship of the past, a friendship that you yourself by your own act have severed."

She turned her back on him. But Andre had swiftly opened the door for her.

"It would be impertinent for me to ask for a hearing," he said slowly. "That you will not betray my secret as you are pleased to call it is very kind. In return, Mademoiselle, I promise that I will not betray yours."

Their eyes met. Andre faced her unflinchingly.

"My secret?" Denise demanded, but she could not quite control her voice.

"Your secret, Marquise." He bowed low.

He had the bitter satisfaction, if satisfaction it was, to see a faint thrill of fear—or was it trouble?—pass into her eyes. And now that he was alone he strode about the room letting his anger master him, once more a prey to all the black doubts and fears. There was only one explanation—that the Chevalier had wormed out the truth, and for his own purposes had hastened to share his knowledge with Denise. The Court was hoodwinked, but they were not. Cruelest of all, he could not deny it, and the disdain in the face and figure of the woman he loved had cut more sharply than her words. He clenched his fist. He could not go back now—no, he had chosen his path; but the day would come, he swore, when he should prove that it was his love and the ambition that it inspired which had driven him to defy the Court, his class and herself.

There was work to be done which could not wait. He galloped away into the woods. "Yvonne," he called out, dismounting at the stables of "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold."

"Monseigneur," she exclaimed, flinging back her matted yellow hair and springing up. He had surprised her with skirt pinned up to the knees milking her sleek cow. She was indeed Yvonne of the Spotted Cow, Yvonne of the Spotless Ankles. Bah! it was a pity her face was so smudged, her bodice so ragged and dirty, for her figure was excellently straight and supple. "Monseigneur!" she humbly kissed his hand.

Andre felt strange qualms as he surveyed her in silence. Something inexplicable in this peasant wench seemed to make the task he had undertaken disagreeable, almost revolting, yet she was only a farm servant and he was a noble. And the secret perhaps of "No. 101" was the prize.

"I want your help. "I want your help, Yvonne," he said abruptly.

"My help?" she repeated as if she did not understand, but there was a momentary gleam in her eyes. "My help? He is not happy, Monseigneur? Ah," she gave a little cry, "the lady that he loves, the Marquise, is faithless."

"No," he interrupted fiercely. "No, no! It is——"

She put her finger on her lip. "Some one is coming," she whispered. "Monseigneur has enemies, many enemies. He must not be seen here. Come, quick, quick!"

She half pushed him into the stables, closed and locked the door and left him. Andre from within could hear steps coming to and fro on the stones, could hear voices. They ceased. The door opened.

"Who was it?" he demanded.

"Monsieur the Chevalier de St. Amant," she replied quietly.

"Name of a dog!" he ejaculated. He drew the girl into the stables, put his hands on her shoulders. Such firm, well-shaped shoulders under her dirty, ill-laced bodice. "Now tell me," he said peremptorily, "what you know of the Chevalier de St. Amant."

Yvonne faced him with a humble simplicity. Involuntarily Andre dropped his hands, mastered by that indefinable feeling. "Monsieur the Chevalier comes here from time to time," she answered; "he inquires for the wise woman who lived here, but he also would know if Monseigneur visits the inn and why?"

"Ah! And your answer?"

"That I know nothing."

Andre scrutinized her remorselessly. Either she told the truth or she was a consummate actress.

"Did I do right, Monseigneur," she asked in her simple way, "to say what was not true?"

"Yes," he replied quickly, but not without a stab of shame. "And my enemies, Yvonne, what of my enemies?"

"They are great gentlemen of the Court. They and their servants come here, too, they watch Monseigneur. They seek a traitor, so they say."

Andre reflected. It was what he feared. "I also seek a traitor, Yvonne," he began quietly, and I am in great trouble. I need your help."

"Monseigneur is pleased to jest. My help—the help of a peasant girl?"

"Yes, your help, Yvonne. The King, my master, is betrayed. The traitor is unknown, but at this inn perhaps one may learn what will reveal the truth. You are here, you have eyes and ears. Will you promise to tell me all that you can learn?"

The girl was looking at him, but her smudged face disclosed nothing save a natural fear.

"Some might promise you," he pursued, "money, wealth, love. Money I have not got; love is not mine to give ——"

"It is an honor for a peasant girl," she interrupted softly, "to be loved by a noble who can give her jewels and fine clothes and pleasure. And then when his love is cold, as needs must be, he can make her happy with a good dowry."

"Oh, yes, that is so. But," he took her hand, "I will not——"

"I am not pretty, alas!" she interrupted again, but the coquetry in her figure was strangely provocative.

"Peace, child, peace! and listen. I cannot and will not treat you as others might. Love it not mine to give. But I ask your help, although I promise you nothing in return save the grateful thanks of a soldier of France."

"I would be your servant," she whispered, "your servant, Monseigneur."

Andre felt her hand tremble. For the moment swift passion tempted him, and Yvonne was watching him closely though he did not know it.

"Yes," he said brusquely, "you shall be my servant, but nothing more." She was silent, and he feared he had made a fatal mistake. "Your help, that is all I ask, and I ask it because I trust you."

"I will help," she said in a low voice. "I will help."

He raised her hand to his lips as if it were the hand of a gentlewoman. Why he did so strange a thing he could not have explained.

"No, no," she cried. "I am not worthy. Ah! Monseigneur is not as other nobles. He has pity and respect even for a peasant wench. He shall not dishonor himself, and I—I will help because I am grateful, yes, grateful." For a moment she hid her face overcome.

"Adieu, Yvonne," he murmured, almost tenderly. "Adieu, and remember!" He mounted and rode away. As he turned into the woods a man rapidly crossed the bridle track and disappeared, but not before he had caught a sight of his face. Somewhere in the past he had seen that face—when? Where? He knew he was not mistaken, though in vain he racked his brains. And with this fresh torturing thought he rode into Paris.

Yvonne had stood like one in a dream long after he had disappeared. Now she surveyed with ill-concealed disgust her pinned-up skirt and clumsy sabots, now impatiently brushed a tear from under the matted hair over her eyes. "Dieu le Venguer!" She suddenly threw up her arms with a gesture of pain. "Dieu le Vengeur!" Then furtively glancing round she walked slowly towards the house. On the threshold some one met her and for a half-hour she might have been heard conversing earnestly, almost pleading. The voices ceased. A moment later the Chevalier de St. Amant stepped out from the inn, jauntily flung his gay cloak about him, and galloped swiftly in the direction of Versailles.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS LOIS MAY ALDEN.

A Woman to Start Farm School For City Waifs.

To reclaim city waifs by transplanting them from the vitiating atmosphere of the city streets into a farm school is the attractive plan of a young New York woman, Miss Lois May Alden. If she is successful, hers will be the first farm home school in the country. In Warwick, England, such a home has been started, and it has succeeded remarkably well, drawing its pupils from the worst sections of London.

In order to become thoroughly conversant with farming in all its branches Miss Alden has enrolled herself as a member of the State Agricultural school at New Brunswick, N. J., where free courses in agriculture have been recently instituted. She is registered both for the animal husbandry and the market gardening and fruit growing courses and so far is the only woman in these classes. For some years there has been a government experiment station at this point, but not until now have the special courses for students been offered, and when several fine buildings now under process of construction are finished the plant will be quite complete.

Miss Alden has had this idea in her mind since she was a small child, and as she grew older it seemed to her the only practical solution of the problem of what to do with the children of the city's streets.

"I have always cherished a passion for farming and also for helping friendless and homeless children. To combine the two seems the most delightful thing I could do," she said in speaking of her plans. "Nature will do more in a minute for these children than stereotyped book instruction in a month. In learning to love nature they will learn to love one another. It is my plan to secure a plot of ground somewhere near a city where produce can be raised and disposed of easily. There farming and market gardening will be taught. This will not only give the children a home, but it will give them a vocation. There is money in wholesale gardening for those who prepare for the work scientifically.

"There will be, first of all, an attractive home life. Boys and girls will be equally divided in numbers. They may enter the home anywhere from twelve to fifteen years old. A regular schedule will be carried out. There will be studies in the morning and afternoon relating to the agricultural course, with practical demonstrations. They will make their own gardens and take care of the dairy, and there will be instruction in animal husbandry on the side. There will also be the household duties, each child doing his or her own share, in order to give them the idea of the domestic side of farm life."

How to Treat Sunless Rooms.

No one wants a gloomy room, but what to do with such a room is a problem that has bothered more than one of us.

Many a woman has foregone inside curtains and even sash curtains to allow all the light possible to come into the room, but still it looks dreary. It is not as much the light that we need as the sunshine, and when this cannot be had we must make it, or, rather, get the effect of it.

A room with a northern aspect should not, of course, be papered in blue or some such cold color, but rather in rich, warm tones of olive, green, brown, red or yellow. If the room gets but little light and sunshine, yellow should be our choice. Not only should we have yellow on the walls, but also on the ceiling, for the sake of the reflection. A pretty treatment is to have a light pumpkin yellow on the walls as far as the picture molding and a lighter shade above this and on the ceiling. Then yellow silk sash curtains, pulled back, tend to make a room sunny.

Brass can make a wonderful difference to a dreary room. A large jardiniere with a plant in it placed in a dark corner will lighten up most marvelously. The andirons, too, will give a cheery reflection. Even candlesticks help and little trays and bowls, be they ever so small. The importance of brass in a sunless room cannot be too strongly emphasized. Mirrors brighten up, and so do some pictures, with well polished glasses and gilded frames, but these little points are too seldom taken into consideration.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Is acknowledged to be the most successful remedy in the country for those painful ailments peculiar to women.

For more than 30 years it has been curing Female Complaints, such as Inflammation, and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and consequent Spinal Weakness, Backache, and is peculiarly adapted to the Change of Life.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Records show that it has cured more cases of Female Ills than any other one remedy known.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound dissolves and expels Tumors at an early stage of development. Dragging Sensations causing pain, weight, and headache are relieved and permanently cured by its use.

It corrects Irregularities or Painful Functions, Weakness of the Stomach, Indigestion, Bloating, Nervous Prostration, Headache, General Debility; also, Dizziness, Faintness, Extreme Lassitude, "Don't care and want to be left alone" feeling, Irritability, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Flatulency, Melancholia or the "Blues." These are sure indications of female weakness or some organic derangement.

For Kidney Complaints of either sex Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a most excellent remedy.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. for advice. She is the Mrs. Pinkham who has been advising sick women free of charge for more than twenty years, and before that she assisted her mother-in-law Lydia E. Pinkham in advising. Thus she is well qualified to guide sick women back to health. Her advice is free and always helpful.

The Secret of Good Coffee.

The real secret of having good coffee lies in two things—buy the best and make it carefully, and the best way to make it is the simplest. The following is perfectly simple and satisfactory: Get a pint measure or larger tin, heat it with boiling water, put in one large heaped up teaspoonful of ground coffee to each person. Nearly fill with boiling water, place the tin on the fire and stir slowly until a creamy froth comes to the top. Have a warmed jug or coffeepot ready, into which pour the coffee slowly through muslin, even straining through a thick sediment which remains with the grains. Your coffee is then ready for immediate use and may be boiled up repeatedly without being renewed. A very good tip when making a new brew is to pour on the grains the sediment and a little of the cold coffee usually kept in the coffeepot and thrown out by the maid. Even the grains should not be wasted, as they make excellent mold for delicate plants.

Macaroon Whip.

Macaroon whip is simply and easily made. Soak one-quarter of a package of gelatin in one-quarter of a cupful of cold water. Grate or crumble one-quarter of a pound of stale, dry macaroons. Cut very fine one dozen candied cherries. Stand the gelatin over hot water until dissolved, then add to it one cupful of very heavy cream with half a cupful of sifted powdered sugar, two tablespoonfuls of sherry and a few drops of almond extract.

Watch closely and as soon as it shows signs of thickening whip the whites of two eggs to a froth, add them to the cream and whip the mixture until it is a solid froth. Lightly mix in the macaroon crumbs and half of the cherries.

Turn into a serving dish and sprinkle the remainder of the cherries over the top. Keep very cold until served.

Do You Know—

That you can make a faded dress perfectly white by washing it in boiling water?

That salt, dissolved in alcohol, will often remove grease spots from clothing?

That two potatoes grated in a basin of water will give better results than soap in washing delicate flannel and woolen goods, ribbons, etc.?

That piano keys can be cleaned, as can any old ivory, by being rubbed with muslin dipped in alcohol?

That a little thin cold starch rubbed over windows and mirrors and then wiped off with a soft cloth is an easy way of producing most shining results?

That hot milk is even better than boiling water to take out fruit stains?

A Clotheshorse Hint.

Where there is very little room the following suggestion will make a very good substitute for that domestic animal, the clotheshorse, which is easily carried out by the home carpenter: From the carpenter obtain several dowels or white round sticks. At the hardware store get some brackets. Place the brackets in a manner to bring the dowels across a corner of the kitchen, and on them the clothes may be hung to air. During the week the dowels may be removed and put away in a corner or may be used to hang dish towels to dry. This arrangement does away with the dangling line that is of great annoyance to the taller members of the family.

The Dressing Table.

Simple little covers for the dressing table are made of the mercerized chambray that comes in such pretty shades of pink and blue, and they make an agreeable change from the white ones in such constant use.

The cover is made just the size required, with the addition of four inches all round, which is turned up on the right side and hemmed down by the means of further stitching done in heavy white mercerized cotton. The corners are mitered carefully so as to be quite flat and are blind stitched down.

Hair Sachets.

Scent sachets for use in the hair may be easily made, and in this respect it should be borne in mind that in shape they should be very narow, not wider than a finger, to allow them to be pinned beneath the coils before the hair is dressed. They should be covered with lace net so that the hairpins may go through them. In the center of each place a tiny roll of cotton filled with the favorite sachet powder.

A Dry Shampoo.

Orris root powder dusted over the hair is often a substitute for frequent shampooing. Sprinkle the powder into the hair and rub it well into the scalp; then brush it out. Orris is one of the few powders which may be used for this purpose, as it will not stop the pores. It is cleansing and will give a faint sweet odor to the hair.

KILLED BY A LOBSTER

A Chicago chef has just died from blood poisoning following upon a nip from a lobster. Zam-Buk applied immediately after that trivial accident would have saved that man's life! Zam-Buk is just as fatal to poison and disease germs, as these are fatal to us, and a little more so; because, while we sometimes get germs into our system and still live, when those germs get Zam-Buk they give up the ghost without a struggle. One of England's leading analysts has proved this. Write to us for his report. Meanwhile, when you sustain a cut, a burn, a bruise, a scratch, or any injury, just apply Zam-Buk. Two processes right away—cleanses the sore, thus preventing blood poison and suppuration, and commences to heal. Incidentally it takes out soreness. Soreness is not necessary to Nature's healing processes. See free sample offer in adjoining column. All stores and druggists sell at fifty cents a box. Nothing like it.

THE MAGISTRATE IS RIGHT

Magistrate Perry, of Goldfields, B.C., believes in making a good thing known, and we do not blame him either. Writing of Zam-Buk, he says: "After a very fair trial I have proved Zam-Buk eminently satisfactory. In my case it cured a skin rash of five years' standing which no doctor had been able to do any good for. I would certainly encourage any person to keep Zam-Buk in his home." He is quite right. Every home needs it. Is it in your home? If not, why not? All stores and druggists sell at 50 cents a box.

A GENUINE OFFER

Test Zam-Buk at Our Expense

We appreciate the position taken by the man or woman who says to us: "If your preparation is what you claim, you should have no objection to letting us try it before spending money on it." To every person taking this view we say, "We agree!" Send us one cent stamp (to pay return postage) and name and date of this paper, and we will mail you a free trial box of Zam-Buk.

TWO STRINGS TO HER BOW.

Canada May Be Found Under a Flag of Her Own.

Canada's future is a topic for endless discussion and speculation. Perhaps that is an indication that her career is not fixed by the fates. In this vein a contributor to the Monthly Review looks at the subject from a British point of interest and concludes that Canada has the decision largely in her own hands. The Americanization of Canada, this writer holds, is not threatened by an invasion of settlers from this side of the line. There are more native Canadians in the United States than there are immigrants from this republic in the Dominion. Canadians in this country learn from us, and some of the Americanization talked about comes through him. But their influence at home is not hurtful to Canada in the long run.

American Influence.

American ideas are distributed throughout Canada by books, newspapers and periodicals printed this side the line, but this writer asserts that it is futile to attempt to counteract the American influence exerted by this means. Canadians, as a rule, are not sufficiently interested in English affairs to prefer home literature to the productions of New York and Chicago. The effect of all of this on Canada's political future is the inculcation of Dominion patriotism. "The painter has not yet been cut—may, quite probably, not be cut during the present generation—but it has been pretty badly frayed." In this connection the writer cites the fact that the feeling in Canada is acute that the Dominion should make its own treaties, and this feeling led to the suggestion both in Canada and in England that the new British minister in Washington should have been a Canadian.

No Army and Navy.

Canada has no army and navy to enforce treaties, but this is no drawback, because it enables her to devote her cash to industrial purposes and "keep it there, because she is in the happy position of having two strings to her bow, the mother country, or, as an ultimate resort, the Monroe doctrine." In other words, Canada will stick to the British realm if she has to save herself or resort to annexation with the United States to save herself, meanwhile growing in strength and independence. If neither of these alternatives is forced upon her, she may be found, not many years hence, neither under the Union Jack nor under the Stars and Stripes, but under a new heraldic combination of the two. Such deep interest in politics among all classes as Secretary Root noted during his recent visit to Canada usually springs from aspirations toward national individuality.

FOR HUDSON BAY.

Character of the Country Between Prince Albert and the Pas.

Mr. Thomas Bell, an assistant superintendent of bridges on the Regina and Prince Albert branch, who is now stationed in Saskatoon, returned recently, says The Saskatoon Phoenix from a spell of work on the projected Hudson's Bay line running out from Erwood to the Pas Mission.

Mr. Bell told The Phoenix reporter that the line runs largely through a country of muskeg, alternated by slumps of good timber. Asked if muskeg made a good foundation for a grade, he said it was all right. There is a certain spring with it as the heavy trains moved over the surface. The sensation was not unpleasant. He had heard people talk about it as if the whole swamp could be seen rolling like the waves of the sea with the vibration of the engine, but had never seen anything approaching that. It was difficult stuff to work, but the graders had got used to it and kept the edges of their scrapers so sharp that they could cut through any roots and scoop it out like cheese.

There are no big bridges on the line so far, but quite a number of culverts and small crossings. If the line goes further, however, the biggest bridge in Western Canada will be required to cross the lordly Saskatchewan, which at Pas is a wide deep river on which the steamers in the fish business ply regularly to Prince Albert.

There is some good timber on the route of this line, and one lumber company built a mill last fall and promise to take out an enormous quantity of lumber.

As to most people, the idea of muskeg suggests unhealthy conditions. Mr. Bell was asked about the health of the workmen engaged along the line. He said it was a remarkable fact, and one which had been commented on frequently, that there had never been a single case of typhoid in the camps on that line. There was a stench came from the muskeg all fall, but it never seemed to sicken any one.

The Pas Mission has a settlement of half-breeds clustered around it. It has a pleasant situation near the river. The population, Mr. Bell thinks, will be about 200.

Bryce as a Mountaineer.

Prior to his departure from England to take up the post of British Ambassador at Washington, Right Hon. James Bryce was appointed by the King a member of the Order of Merit.

Mr. Bryce is one of the few who have ever climbed to the top of Mount Ararat; and it is a testimony to his extraordinary vitality that, although seized with the mountain sickness and enveloped in a mist so dense as to cause him to stand and gasp for breath, he struggled on amid the intense cold, with a big icicle completely covering the lower half of his face, until "suddenly, to my astonishment," he says, "the ground began to fall away to the north. A puff of wind drove off the mists on one side, and showed the Araxes plain at an abysmal depth below. It was the top of Ararat!"

However, after he had accomplished the return journey in safety, the archimandrite at an Armenian monastery on the plains refused to believe his story of the climb. The old priest smiled and shook his head. "No one has ever been to the top of Mount Ararat," he said. "It is impossible!"

A Romance of the Peerage.

Lady Ernestine Hunt, eldest daughter of the Marquis of Ailesbury, has taken up an entirely new vocation for women. She has started a horse-breeding ranch near Calgary, where she controls about 40,000 acres of grazing land.

Lady Ernestine was well known some years ago as an intrepid yachtswoman, with much more than a superficial knowledge of navigation and kindred matters. She applied to the Board of Trade for examination, with a view to obtaining a master's certificate, but was rebuffed, on the ground that a woman could not qualify as a master, though it is difficult to see why, logically, a woman should not become a sailing-master as much as a Master of Arts—a qualification now open to her in many universities.

Lady Ernestine has been a nurse as well as a sailor and a horse-breeder; and she married, at the age of 27, the second mate of a merchant vessel.

Photographs that have become soiled or that are mounted on cards the edges of which are broken may be soaked off by placing them in water. This cleans them, but does not injure them in the least, and after drying thoroughly between blotters they may be mounted again on new cards.

Kerosene rubbed into boots and shoes which have been hardened by water will soften them. Rubbing with a woolen rag saturated in kerosene will also brighten tin and granite ware.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found It at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me.—ELDER JOHN T. THE CANADIAN BEAVER.

Qualities Which Should Win Him Friendship and Protection.

It will be a triumph of civilization, or over-civilization, if white men can make friends with this most wary, cunning, and complacently industrious native on his forest watercourses. The beaver is first to retreat from human barbarism, but when men become civilized he cautiously returns, responding with confidence wherever respect is shown for his natural rights and the priority of his claims. In Algonquin Park the patient watcher may sometimes see a beaver, brown-black and dripping, slowly rise from the open water by a dam, clamber out on the ice, waddle through the snow, nip off a shrub of white birch and return with it to the water, quietly mounting on the ice again to feast on this new season's delicacy.

Grows Weary of Poplar.

The beaver seems to grow weary of the poplar and birch that have lain under water all winter, for he is ready to venture out in search of fresh twigs and bark. In climbing on the ice he uses his teeth, then his hands, for it would be misleading to call them feet, and his short, elastic legs make it easy to get a hold with his big, webbed hind feet, and these he brings up under his body to stand upon. His flat, paddle-like tail makes a substantial support as he shakes the water from his coarse fur, hunches his rounded back, closes his hands idly against his breast, and looks about with small, beady eyes, his drooping, indolent, inquisitive mouth maintaining an almost ludicrous expression.

Keep the Water Open.

There is always some open water by a well-ordered beaver dam, for the sticks, twigs, vegetation and rubbish thrown about and left to decay create sufficient warmth to resist the frost. The beavers also help to keep the water open, and where a hole in the ice is not sufficiently large to allow one to crawl out he will try to enlarge the edges by striking them from below with his arched back. The current generally helps to keep the water open and give the colony a means of access to the star-lit world, while their dome-topped house with submerged entrance against the bank is surrounded by immovable ice.

Nips Off Small Twigs.

It is fascinating to watch a beaver feasting on new bark when the night is so silent that every crunch of his long yellow teeth can be heard distinctly, while his rounded outlines are shown as black as the open water against the snow. He nips off the small twigs one by one from the bush he has cut, holding each in turn in his hands with the quiet relish of a boy eating a sugar-stick. When the main stem becomes too thick and woody he turns to the larger end and proceeds systematically to strip off the bark. Whether to facilitate this operation or to flavor the food, he steeps over and keeps the stem and also his mouth submerged while stripping and eating. Another beaver coming out on the ice shows a communistic disregard for the rights of property. While the encroachment is resisted, there is not the slightest tendency toward antagonism.

The Beaver's Sagacity.

The beaver is credited with many wonderful acts and achievements, such as the planting of seeds to strengthen the walls of his house, the enslaving of otters to keep his house clean, the building of useless dams to teach apprentices the trade, and the springing of steel-traps with sticks. He is even said to sleep with his tail in the water to detect a break in the dam. A stick carried or floated by a beaver may get into a trap, thus saving a threatened life. An otter may find good fishing where the vegetarian beaver has made the fish familiar with his harmless movements. Vegetation from scattered seeds may strengthen the beaver's house, and he may build dams, both useful and useless, wherever rapids reveal the shallow places on streams.

Should Win Our Friendship.

But, without venturing into the field of conjecture, we know that the beaver cuts down trees and floats them to his dam, makes it watertight with mud, builds a house with a submerged entrance, and fixes a winter supply of food in the bottom of the stream. The peace that pervades his colony suggests a rudimentary patriarchal organization, and his confidence when unmolested, even in the open day, shows that his fear of man is modified by the wisdom that comes with experience. These qualities should win him our friendship and protection, even if he should lack the depths of insight with which fancy has delighted to endow him.

Leave Out Great Britain.

The annual report of the Executive Committee of the British Empire League in Canada, adopted at its recent meeting, contains the following recommendations.—

"Your committee are gratified that another Imperial conference will be held in London next month in accordance with the resolution of the conference of 1902 in favor of periodical meetings, and they express their satisfaction that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be in a position once more to press upon the Imperial Government his offer of mutual preferential tariffs. The offer so wisely made in 1902 by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and held open by him for the last five years, apparently has not met with any response by the Home Government, but we earnestly hope that at this coming conference something may be accomplished in that direction. If, however, the Imperial Government is still unprepared to do anything, your committee would urge upon our representatives at the conference to use every effort to secure an agreement for a system of mutual preferential tariffs among all the colonies—leaving Great Britain out of the arrangement until she expresses a willingness to unite with the outer empire in such a policy. This would be the most dignified course for the colonies to adopt, in view of the fact that 274 members of the House of Commons have petitioned Australia not to give any preference in her tariff to the Mother Country."

His Clever Ally

...By...

W. CRAWFORD SHERLOCK.

Copyright, 1907, by Mary McKeon.

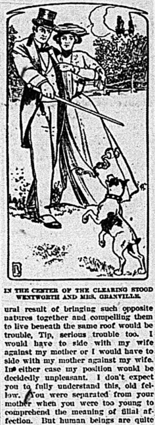
"Now, Tip, something must be done, but how I'm going to do it is more than I know."

Jim Granville stretched his great length on the grass beneath an old oak tree and addressed his fox terrier, who surveyed his master with evident interest and understanding. There was a frown on the broad forehead of the young man and a troubled look in his big brown eyes. Tip sat on his haunches, wagging his diminutive stump of a tail vigorously, one eye fixed intently on his master's face, while with the other he watched the movements of a squirrel on an overhanging branch.

"I'm in love, Tip," continued Granville, flicking the ashes from his cigar with an impatient gesture. "You know what that means, old fellow, since you've been paying your addresses to that little spaniel of Miss Browning's. Yet you can't understand why I don't ~~tell the girl~~ so and settle the whole matter, do you? Tip, canine affairs are different from human affairs. Men have responsibilities, and dogs don't. That's the whole difference in a nutshell."

Tip gave a short bark, as if he fully comprehended the distinction, and Granville went on: "I have a pretty good income, Tip, but it is not big enough to support two establishments. If I get married, my mother would have to live with us, and you know from your own experiences that she is a woman of decided convictions."

Tip shuddered at the remembrance of a whipping he had received for the slight offense of chewing up one of Mrs. Granville's gloves in a moment of absentmindedness and then hung his head.



IN THE CENTER OF THE CLEARING STOOD WENTWORTH AND MRS. GRANVILLE.

"Well, Miss Browning also has decided views on certain questions of life, and she and my mother disagree upon almost every subject. The natural result of bringing such opposite natures together and compelling them to live beneath the same roof would be trouble, Tip, serious trouble too. I would have to side with my wife against my mother or I would have to side with my mother against my wife. In either case my position would be decidedly unpleasant. I don't expect you to fully understand this, old fellow. You were separated from your mother when you were too young to comprehend the meaning of filial affection. But human beings are quite different and have a certain duty to perform in looking after their maternal relations. Now, these are the facts in the case, Tip, and something must be done, but I don't know what it is to be."

The squirrel had disappeared from view, and Tip fixed his undivided attention upon his master, evidently meditating deeply over the perplexing problem. The stumpy tail ceased its pendulum-like motions, and his sharp ears were pricked up in an attitude of earnest attention.

"This crisis has come upon us suddenly, my boy," pursued Granville after a few moments of silence. "Things were running along all right, and there was no necessity for immediate action until this big fellow from California—Wentworth's his name—came upon the scene. He's been showing Miss Browning the most decided attention. Took her out three times last week in his auto and twice to the theater. In fact, every time I went there she was out with this confounded Wentworth, and I haven't had a chance to say a word to her since he came."

"He's twice as old as she is, Tip, but that doesn't make any difference in these days, when men of seventy marry women of twenty. There ought to be a law passed that would prevent people from marrying when there is more than five years difference in their ages, and if I ever go to congress I'll introduce such a measure. That won't help me now, though, and if I don't make a move he'll win out and leave me at the post. There you are, Tip. I've unbosomed my secret soul to you, the only friend in whom I can co and I look to you to straighten tangle out for me."

If the fly that hovered about head had been Wentworth, Granv anxiety would have been at an After making sure that his winged mentor would worry him no more glanced around and espied the squ several rods away, engaged in ma his morning meal from some cru that had been left in the woods. getting his master's troubles, Tip d ed off in pursuit, leaving Granvill solve the question that so greatly plexed him. The calculation was interrupted series of ear splitting yelps, and G ville, fearing his pet had come to g arose and hurried down the path a which Tip had disappeared. As reached a clearing a hundred yard so away he stopped short, his resting upon a curious scene.

"It looks as if I'm around at wrong time," grimly returned young man as he proceeded to c the excited Tip. "I don't quite un stand what it all means. I didn't k you knew Mr. Wentworth."

"Not know Tom Wentworth!" claimed Mrs. Granville in surp "Why, I've known him ever sin was a child. He's Catherine Bro ing's uncle, you know, and while was looking up his niece he found out, and we've renewed our old fri ship. Tom tells me"—a pretty f had crept into Mrs. Granville's che and her forty-five years of life see to dwindle perceptibly—"that he cared for me ever since he has kn me, and he has persuaded me to back to California with him if have no objections, Jim. What do say?"

"I won't stand in the way of y happiness, mother," declared Gran with an emphasis that Mrs. Gran did not understand until Wentw enlightened her.

"I knew Jim would be all right," served the big Californian jovia "He's been making some plans himself, and I think we'd better m a double wedding of it."

"You're a clever ally, Tip, eve you're only a dog," remarked G ville as he walked toward Miss Bro ing's home. "That wild bolt of yo brought about a solution of the w matter."

Marsh Cup Water Plant.

The plant that I found in the H son bay region which is most wo of notice grows in the mossy m kegs, in places where there is l or no grass. EYE STRAIN IN CHILDREN.

Is often neglected until permanent injury is done to one or both eyes. The parents often object to put glasses on their children. thinking as long as they can see apparently well there is nothing wrong; yet there may be a great deal of trouble present and the child have normal vision, with one or both eyes. I frequently find in children that one eye is of very little use to them, they have been doing all their work with one eye, and in most cases the parents or child did not know this until after consulting us. Some of the symptoms of E. S. in children: May be dull in studies; health may be below normal, redness of lids or twitching of same; the eyes may be hot and painful at times, scowling, or blinking, headache, etc. If, any of these symptoms present themselves in your children, you had better bring them for free consultation, and find out before it is too late if anything is wrong.

Board of Trade Elected New Officers Last Night.

MANY MATTERS TALKED ON, INCLUDING THE POWER QUESTION — COMPETITION IN TELEPHONES — HON. ADAM BECK MAY COME — FINANCES ARE IN GOOD SHAPE.

Although the attendance at the Board of Trade meeting, held last evening, was not large, considerable interest was taken in the proceedings and matters of importance were discussed.

Those present were Messrs. F. S. Deacon, J. E. Parks, W. B. Deacon, C. M. Reid, C. B. Scantlebury, J. H. F. Young, W. Dickens, T. Blackburn, Ald. Ackerman, Rev. A. L. Geen, H. C. Hunt, S. E. Lennox, J. A. McFee, E. P. Frederick, J. Elliott and D. Carlaw.

In the absence of the President Mr. R. J. Graham, Mr. C. M. Reid, one of the vice-Presidents, was voted to the chair.

HON. ADAM BECK MAY COME.

A communication was read from the Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, stating that it might be possible for him to be in Belleville between the 16th and 19th of April, and deliver an address in reference to electric power.

The Toronto Board of Trade wrote asking the co-operation of other Boards of Trade in reference to petitioning the Dominion and Provincial Parliaments to make a change in civil service appointments, and asking that they be made non-political. This, it was submitted, would ensure a better service.

Mr. Ross, of Ottawa, postal superintendent, wrote, asking to be kept informed as to how the Belleville post office was being conducted.

Mr G. S. Scott, of Stirling, wrote in reference to a meeting to be held in the city re establishing a telephone line. One meeting had been arranged for but was cancelled. A meeting might be held later on and the objects of the company explained.

Mr. Hunt moved, seconded by Mr. Blackburn, that the Board co-operate in petitioning Parliament relative to changing the basis of making civil service appointments.—Carried.

POST OFFICE AFFAIRS.

Messrs. F. S. Deacon and C. B. Scantlebury stated that there was a marked improvement in the post office since Mr. Ross had been here. There was, however, still room for more improvement.

TELEPHONE MATTERS.

Mr. W. B. Deacon said every effort should be made to have competition in telephones. In other places, where there was competition, the rate was lower. The Board should do all in its power to induce another telephone system to come into the city. He moved that the communication of Mr. Scott be acknowledged, and that this Board of Trade views with gratification the efforts of the Stirling Telephone Company to install a system of telephones in the County of Hastings, and wish to encourage their endeavors in the same.

Mr Scantlebury stated that we were paying a rather high rate for a telephone service, especially for long distance. It was a matter that should be carefully considered by the Board. He seconded the motion.

Mr. F. S. Deacon said the town of Port Arthur had an independent service and it was a cheap service, and was also a paying concern. He did not think the Bell Telephone Company paid our City Council enough for their franchise, namely $300 per annum.

The motion was unanimously adopted.

RAILWAY SHIPPING.

Mr. Scantlebury moved, seconded by Mr. J. Elliott, that a committee consisting of Messrs. R. J. Graham, H. C. Hunt, W. J. Wardrope, I. Cohen, and Ald. Ackerman be appointed to take in hand the communications regarding railway shipping and its conditions therein related, and to act for this Board by way of consideration and the answering of communications and taking any such action as they desire.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Mr. Blackburn, treasurer, presented his report for the year, which showed there were 85 members and that the total receipts for the year were $261. After all liabilities had been met there was a balance on hand of $163.21, which included a balance from the year previous.

On motion the report was adopted.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The election of officers for the year resulted as follows:

Hon President — John Parker Thomas.

President—R. J. Graham.

First Vice-President — Mr. C. M. Reid.

Second Vice-President — Mr. H. C. Hunt.

Secretary—Mr. F. S. Deacon.

Treasurer—Mr. T. Blackburn.

THE NEW COUNCIL.

On motion a committee consisting of Messrs. H. C. Hunt, W. B. Deacon and T. Blackburn was selected to prepare and present to the Board eleven members as the Council of the Board. The committee presented the following members:

Messrs. J. W. Johnson, S. S. Lazier, D. V. Sinclair, W. Alford, D. Carlaw, W. N. Ponton, J. W. Wardrope, A. McGie, P. Wims, C. B. Scantlebury, and J. Elliott.

The report of the special committee was unanimously adopted.

The same committee were appointed to strike the various standing committees of the Board and present the same at the next meeting.

NORTH HASTINGS MARBLE.

Mr. Morrison, of Bancroft, addressed the Board briefly in reference to marble and sodolite properties in which he and other parties were interested, and which were situated in the vicinity of Bancroft. He referred to the material there as of a superior quality, in fact the best of the kind in Canada.

THE POWER QUESTION.

Mr. D. Carlaw stated that if Belleville was going to prosper and have manufactures come here it was necessary to have cheap power. This, in his opinion, could be obtained from the river Moira and near the city. Between the city limits and the Lazier mill there was a fall of between 15 and 17 feet, and if the water was harnessed it would provide ample power without going to Healy Falls or any other place. He would strongly urge the formation of a company to develop this power.

Mr. W. B. Deacon asked Mr. Carlaw if he had any idea what the cost would be.

Mr. Carlaw said a dam could be built to preserve the water which is at present going to waste and he was certain there would be power enough to run a lighting plant for the city, and also supply power to a few manufacturing concerns.

Mr. W. B. Deacon said the Hydro-Electric Power Commission's report was not very favorable as to power on the river Moira.

Mr. Carlaw said if such a dam as he referred to was built at the place mentioned it would stop the formation of anchor ice, which would be of great benefit to the city. A company might be formed and a loan might be secured from the Government. The cost would probably be $35,000 or $40,000.

Mr. Scantlebury stated that he knew the site well and there was quite a drop. If power could be secured for electric lighting and to run a few manufacturing concerns it would be of great advantage to the city.

Mr. Lennox stated that it might be possible to secure power if the water from the back lakes could be brought here.

Mr. W. B. Deacon was of the opinion that the power question was not so much at issue at present in Belleville as cheaper freight rates and the labor problem. Cheaper rates, he believed, would bring more manufacturers here than even cheaper power.

This ended the discussion, but, as the chairman intimated, the matter could be taken up and discussed at the next meeting or at the public meeting when Hon. Mr. Beck was in the city.

The Board then adjourned.

OFFICERS OF FLEETS WHICH HAVE TO DO WITH BELLEVILLE — COAL COMING FROM OSWEGO TO THIS CITY.

The schooner New Dominion has cleared from Kingston for Oswego, with coal for this city.

Six schooners in the harbor have already been fitted out, or are doing so.

The sloop Gull left for Deseronto yesterday.

Considerable ice was encountered off Nine-Mile Point, but this was the only sight of ice floes. The vessel's arrival at Oswego resulted in an accident that cost Abram Emlaw his life. Emlaw was aboard the tug Tonawanda, towing the schooner into the harbor. A sudden roll pitched Emlaw into the waves and he was drowned between the two lighthouses. A line was thrown to him, and although he is said to have caught it, he was unable to hold on.

Amendments to Fish and Game Laws—Automatic Guns Are Barred—Natural Gas Plant Exempt From Taxation—Supply of Electric Power by Municipalities—County Road Systems—Bills Passed.

Toronto, April 12.—The Legislative session yesterday was a day of hard work. Morning, afternoon and night sittings were held and a large amount of work covered. Hon. Mr. Whitney has wisely demanded the fullest consideration to every measure and nothing will be permitted to be "rushed through" in the dying hours of the session.

To Hon. Mr. Cochrane's bill imposing the mining taxes a clause was added on the motion of the Prime Minister providing that the natural gas plants of municipalities shall not be subjected to taxes.

Electric Power Bill.

Hon. Mr. Beck introduced a Government measure to amend the act providing for the transmission of electric power to municipalities, which was given its first and second readings. The amendment is to give municipalities power, having obtained the consent of the commission, to supply power to consumers in adjacent municipalities. Mr. Beck cited the case of London which could not sell power or light to the London asylum because that institution is outside the municipal boundaries. Other sections make it clear that a municipality contracting with the commission may go into the business of supplying electrical energy for power purposes. Authority is also provided to enable the commission to take the product of a power company developing power outside of the province, if such power is brought into Ontario. Clauses confirming bylaws already passed authorizing municipal corporations to contract with the commission are included in the bill, in order to obviate any technical objections to the contracts. The council of a municipality so authorized to enter into such a contract, must still submit the necessary money bylaw to the ratepayers for establishing or taking over a distributing plant.

Bars Automatic Guns.

Mr. Dunlop (North Renfrew) made a protest against the ruling illegal of automatic guns in Hon. Dr. Reaume's bill on fish, game and fur-bearing animals. He moved that this clause be struck out. Mr. McGarry seconded and Mr. Hoyle spoke in support of the motion.

Hon. Mr. Whitney said the Government had an open mind on the subject, but he was under the impression that the House had fully considered and dealt with it.

Hon. Mr. Hendrie considered the gun a cruel weapon, injuring more than it killed.

After a sharp debate Mr. Dunlop's resolution was defeated by 39 to 34, but a subsequent amendment by Mr. Eilber to change the time of the deer season back to the existing dates, carried. The dates will accordingly be from the first to the 15th of November, instead of from the 6th to the 20th, as proposed.

Hon. Dr. Pyne's amendments to the Public Schools Act passed their committee stage after a brief discussion.

Hon. Dr. Reaume's measure for the improvement of the public highways was also taken up in committee and approved by Hon. Mr. Graham. It enables county councils, as now constituted to enter upon the construction of county road systems, without having to refer the necessary bylaw back to the township councils for approval. It also enables incorporated villages and towns to take advantage of the act.

Mr. Preston (Brant) was of opinion that the Government would have to make up its mind to contribute more than one-third of the cost of county roads systems. It was essential that the province should have more good roads.

County Road System.

The evening session opened with an interchange over this proposed county road system, and the Opposition scored. While providing for the county to establish the system of roads, the bill set forth that when constructed it could be handed over at once to the townships for maintenance. In discussion it was held that the counties should be responsible for maintenance, which was a vital consideration. The Prime Minister and Minister of Public Works readily admitted the strength of the contention and amended the bill to read that the county must maintain the system for at least three years before turning any of the roads over to the townships.

Hon. Dr. Reaume's bill respecting the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway was given its second reading, and the House went again into committee on Hon. Mr. Foy's measure to consolidate and amend the act respecting voters' lists.

Sadie Holmes Wins.

The third readings were as follows:

To encourage the refining of metals—Mr. Cochrane.

To amend the Mines Act — Mr. Cochrane.

Respecting the form and interpretation of the statutes—Mr. Foy.

To authorize Sadie Holmes to practice dentistry—Mr. Sutherland.

To authorize Jerry Brisson to practice as a veterinary surgeon — Mr. Racine.

Respecting joint stock and other companies—Mr. Hanna.

To amend the surveys act—Mr. Foy.

Authorizing Thomas Johnston to practice as a veterinary surgeon—Mr. Ferguson.

To amend the act respecting pawnbrokers—Mr. McNaught.

Respecting the agreement between the University of Toronto and the City of Toronto—Mr. Whitney.

To incorporate the Owen Sound, Shallow Lake and Wiarton Railway Co.—Mr. Mackay.

Respecting the Nepigon Railway Co.—Mr. Gamey.

Respecting the Ottawa River Railway Co.—Mr. Preston (Lanark).

Respecting the Windsor and Tecumseh Electric Railway Co. and the Sandwich, Windsor and Amherstburg Railway—Mr. Bowyer.

Mr. Duff (West Simcoe) has put the following question on the order paper: Is there any truth in the report that the judge of the County of Prescott decided a suit entered in the Division Court by a clergyman against a parishioner on the Parish or Ecclesiastical law or on laws or customs of another province?

ARSENIC IN PORTER.

Mrs. Gregg of Saintfield Dies After Taking Beverage.

Saintfield, Ont., April 12.—The coroner's jury on the death of Mrs. Homer Gregg, an aged lady, who died on March 15 shortly after drinking a cupful of porter taken out of a gem jar, found that death was the result of arsenic in the beverage. By what means it came there is unknown.

The verdict was based on the evidence of Prof. Ellis of Toronto, the analyst, who declared that he found arsenic and copper in one of the jars of porter sent him, and that his conjecture as to the poison in the stomach was that it was Paris green.

Officials of the Cosgrave Brewery, Toronto, testified that it was impossible for arsenic to have got into the porter while being bottled.

Mrs. Gregg was over 80 years of age. She lived with her daughter and son-in-law, John T. Doble, a prominent citizen, about two miles from here.

The case is causing a lot of talk, and County Constable McCully is investigating.

BOUNDARIES IN LAKES.

Buoys Placed By Revenue Cutter to Keep Fishermen In Place.

Washington, April 12.—Reports from the revenue cutter officer, who last summer made a test of the system of marking the international boundary lines in the Great Lakes by buoys, indicate that the experiment has resulted successfully.

It will be continued during the coming season, and if it works as well in confining the fishermen of America and Canada to their own waters as it did last year much friction will be avoided.

Owing to the heavy ice formation during the winter, it was found impossible to maintain an ordinary buoy in position in the deep waters of the lakes. Methods are now being considered to relieve the authorities of the expense and trouble of taking up and replacing these buoys every season.

HE WAS TOO CURIOUS.

Minister's Visit to Tenderloin Ends In His Disposition.

New York, April 12.—Rev. W. Howard Mears, curate of St. Matthews' Episcopal Church, who was arrested by the police at a house in the tenderloin district March 12 last, where he had gone in company with a negro woman, was deposed from the ministry yesterday.

Rev. Mr. Mears asserted that he was not actuated by any wrong motive in visiting the "Tenderloin," and that his presence there was with a view of making sociological investigations.

The magistrate accepted this explanation; the ministry didn't.

CHASED HIS WIFE.

Irate Husband Follows His Eloping Spouse Across the Atlantic.

Halifax, April 12.—An eloping couple were captured on board the Allan liner Carthagenian, which arrived Wednesday afternoon from Liverpool. They are William H. Black, grocer, and Mrs. Frederick Anstey, who are now in the custody of the immigration authorities, and will be deported by the next steamer.

Frederick Anstey, the husband of the woman, was on the pier when the steamer tied up, waiting to confront her. He had come over on a faster steamer, the Virginian. She had her two little sons.

Expects to Reach Pole.

New York, April 12.—Walter Wellman bade his friends in America farewell yesterday morning when the steamer Touraine sailed, and said when he greets them again he hopes they will hail him as the discoverer of the North Pole.

He expects to leave for Tromsoe, Norway, about June 1, and before the middle of the month to be at his winter quarters in Spitzhergan.

It will not be possible, however, to begin the trials of his airship before the second week in July and it is likely to be the last of July or early in August before a start can be made for the Pole.

Banished to Siberia.

St. Petersburg, April 12.—A train bearing 340 political exiles left here Wednesday for Siberia.

This is the largest consignment of political prisoners sent to the far east for several months past, and is the result of efforts to clear the prisons in view of the expected raiding of martial law.

Ashore In a Fog.

London, April 12.—The Great Eastern Railway Co.'s steamer Brussels went ashore in a dense fog off Harwich Wednesday night while outward bound for Antwerp. She remained fast all night.

Veneer Factory Burned.

Sunbridge, April 12.—The veneer factory of Mulholland & Co., was totally destroyed by fire Wednesday night. The cause is unknown. The value of the plant was $16,000; insurance $4,000.

Destroyers In Collision.

Dover, Eng., April 12.—The British torpedo boat destroyers Colne and Falcon put in here yesterday, having been badly damaged in a collision off this port.

C.P.R. TRAIN DISASTER

Fifteen Passengers, Mostly English Immigrants, Killed.

Train Was Derailed—Cars Rolled Down Embankment — Wreckage Caught Fire and Victims Were Cremated—Chiefly Women and Children—Broken Rail the Cause—Impossible to Identify the Dead.

Port Arthur, April 12.—The most disastrous wreck the Canadian Pacific has experienced on the north shore section, so far as loss of life and injury to passengers is concerned, occurred Wednesday near Chapleau, when a broken rail caused the derailment of No. 1 express, with the loss of 15 lives and injury of 34 passengers on the train.

Within a few seconds after the accident the cars were in flames, and four were destroyed, together with 15 unfortunates, who were unable to escape.

Doctors Worked Nobly.

Noble work was done by doctors from Chapleau, aided by passengers who had escaped injury, in affording such relief as circumstances permitted.

By superhuman effort and undaunted heroism, they chopped and tore timbers apart, taking out men penned underneath timber, and others who had already felt tongues of fire on the bare flesh.

The accident occurred on a curve. Fortunately the train was running at slow speed. The locomotive and express car passed over the broken rail all right, but the baggage car and colonists following left the rails and plunged down a twenty-foot embankment to the lake below.

Plunged to Death.

One woman, who had been saved from the fiery furnace, found that her children had not been saved, and she plunged into the flames and was seen no more.

One young man, imprisoned in the wreckage, was almost rescued when a mass of burning timbers fell over him, and he thrust his rescuers away and fell back into a fiery tomb.

Women and children were burned to death in sight of strong men, powerless to prevent.

One man, journeying from England to make a home in the west, lost his wife, two children and a brother.

The mail car stuck to the engine, but the baggage car turned over and over down on to a frozen lake, pulling four other cars after it. It was just at noon, and the forward cars were packed with immigrants cooking their dinner.

The Dead.

Mrs. R. B. Champion and child.
Mrs. R. Davidson and child.
Winifred and Susie Horton of Charing Heath, Kent, England.
W. N. Day, Kingston, England.
C. H. Goulding, his brother, brother's wife and two children, of Palestow, Essex, England.
Mrs. Augusus Bjerklund and two children, of Worcester, Mass.

Seriously Injured.

Charles Coleman, Portsmouth, England; hands, face and head burned.

WOMAN CREMATED IN ROOM.

Found Standing In Middle of Room With Clothing Ablaze.

Stratford, April 12.—Mrs. Harriet Dewing was burned to death early yesterday morning. In the absence of his wife, she had been keeping house the past two weeks for Leopold F. H. Koeller, 106 Romeo street. Koeller, who slept downstairs, was aroused shortly after 3 o'clock, hearing Mrs. Dewing moaning, and, proceeding upstairs, found her standing in the middle of the floor all ablaze. He extinguished the flames and called for medical assistance, but the woman died shortly after the doctor arrived. The case is somewhat mysterious, as it is understood the woman was fully dressed with an unlighted lantern in the room, though a half-burned match was found, which may account for the fire. An inquest will be held.

Trains Tied Up by Snow.

The Flames Defy Rescue.

Tales Of Horror and Heroism From the Wreck.

Agonizing Stories Told By Those Who Escaped--Passengers Caught In Their Seats--Scene Worse Than a Battlefield--Coach Turned Over Three Times --Burned In Five Minutes--Slow Speed Saved Lives.

Port William, April 13.—According to the opinion of passengers who were in the wreck near Chapleau, if the overturned car had not caught fire probably no life would have been lost.

The breaking of the gas pipes in the train caused the fire to spread with such amazing rapidity that in 5 minutes the coach was destroyed. One survivor declares that the car was ablaze before it reached the bottom of the embankment. It rolled over three times in the descent.

Inside of half an hour the flames had died away, and the work of finding the bodies was at once begun. All the bodies were charred by the flames almost beyond recognition, and the work of identification was proceeding with the greatest of difficulty. They were all pinned beneath the seats and wreckage of cars, which accounted for the fact that they were not able to make any determined effort for themselves.

Harrowing Incidents.

The stories of some of the incidents are harrowing. One man, a veteran of the South African War, said:

"I saw hundreds of dead and dying, and the scenes have faded from my memory, but the screams of those poor, helpless children and women caught in the merciless grip of the flames will follow me to the grave. I aged in a few seconds, and then forgot everything.

"I pulled a man from the window. I knew it was a man because he struggled, but all I saw was a mass of flame after we got the fire out. They took the poor fellow away and laid him on some clothing, and he was taken to the hospital at Chapleau."

V. A. Dumfries, with a party consisting of William Hamilton, Joseph Townsend and Thomas Roan, were also in one of the cars in which there was loss of life. In the seat next to them were a woman and two children and a young man about 21 years of age. All four perished, being caught in the seats and held there until the flames reached them and roasted them alive. Another man was pinned by his feet between two cars and remained conscious until death relieved his sufferings amid the cruel flames.

Had Narrow Escape.

Other men show the evidences of their narrow escape from death, by displaying badly burned clothing. One said:

"I saw a woman and a child caught in the coach, but could not lend any assistance, as I was on fire myself. I also noticed a woman and a child pinned in the wreckage, and the fire was swiftly making towards them. The flames followed me out," he concluded, at the same time opening his overcoat and showing that the back of his under coat was totally burned from his back.

James Gibson, an ex-member of the 12th Lancers, with a wet handkerchief over his face, plunged into the burning ruins, and with the utmost difficulty, rescued one of the lady passengers. The poor woman had, however, only reached safety when she discovered that her child was back in the ruins. With one agonizing cry she plunged into the burning mass, and was never seen again.

Made Desperate Efforts.

H. M. Beach of Ottawa tells of one poor fellow who was pinned by the legs under a tourist car. Three of his friends made desperate efforts to save him. The flames swept around him and scorched the faces and hands of the men and caught their clothing.

"For God's sake, boys, don't leave me!" he cried. "One more try to save me!" but nothing could be done.

Mrs. Augusta R. Jakland and two children, who were among the victims, were going west from Worcester, Mass., to join her husband, who had just settled in Western Canada. The husbands of both Mrs. Champion and Mrs. Davidson, who were lost in the wreck, were on board, and these two men are prostrate with grief.

William Day and Winifred Horton, who were both killed, were to have been married as soon as Day had located a home for her in the great Northwest. She had intended to work as a domestic in Winnipeg until the little home was prepared.

FOUND DEAD ON TRACKS.

New Yorker Meets Untimely Death Near Stratford.

Stratford, April 13.—Daniel Henderson of New York City was killed by a train on the Grand Trunk, near Gad's Hill, five miles from here. The body was badly mangled.

It is not known how he met death, unless it was by falling from the train.

He had a good appearance, was well dressed and carried valuable papers and deeds of property.

Killed by Dynamite.

St. John, N. B., April 13.—Leander Crossman of Fairview, while working in the Intercolonial copper mines, three miles from Dorchester, was getting a dynamite charge ready for firing, it prematurely discharged, blowing him over 20 feet. He was frightfully mangled and died shortly after.

CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Stratford Man Arrested In Connection With Burning Fatality.

Stratford, April 13.—Following the death by burning on Thursday of Mrs. Harriett Dewing, aged 53, Leopold Koeller, the only other occupant of the house, was last night arrested on a charge of murder.

There are several suspicious incidents connected with the case to be cleared up, and it is thought Koeller knows more about the death than he has yet revealed.

Mrs. Dewing, was an English woman, 53 years of age, who had been engaged as housekeeper by the Koellers. Mrs. Koeller and her two children had been absent in Chicago for a week, returning Thursday morning.

Found Her In Flames.

Koeller's story Thursday was that when he woke up at 3 o'clock he heard a moaning noise. He listened and thought it was the dog out in the stable. It sounded quite familiar to him, but as it continued he got up, went into the parlor and looked out the window to the stable.

He could see nothing, and he went out into the kitchen, where he could hear the noise coming from the room above where Mrs. Dewing slept. He called out: "Hattie, are you sick?" but receiving no reply, he opened the door leading upstairs.

He could then see the glow of the flames and, thinking the house was on fire, rushed upstairs and into her room to find the unfortunate woman standing in the centre of it with a look of unutterable anguish on her face. She had her hands extended as if pleading for assistance, while her clothes were a mass of flames.

He set down the lamp which he was carrying and extinguished the flames with a quilt. He then crossed the street to go to the assistance of a neighbor named Hunt and a doctor was sent for.

Alleged Discrepancies.

The arrest is due to discrepancies, between his story and what the police say are facts.

For instance, Koeller claimed that when he entered the room the woman was enveloped in fire, with flames reaching the ceiling, which is a little over 6 feet high. The ceiling is spotlessly white and shows no marks whatever, and his story in this respect is discredited.

The carpet where she stood is scarcely burned.

How did her clothes ignite when the lantern in her room had not been lit? is another puzzle.

How did Koeller extinguish flames with a quilt, which he claims he did, without scorching the quilt?

Why was she not discovered sooner?

These are some of the questions which should be brought out at a trial. The coroner's jury viewed the body yesterday, and adjourned till Tuesday next.

A post-mortem examination has been ordered.

Clothing Destroyed.

The woman's clothing was so completely destroyed that it is impossible to tell just how she was dressed. She must have been, however, in her working clothes.

Mrs. Dewing had been living in Canada about ten years and had no relatives here except one son, who is living in Winnipeg. She has been employed as a housekeeper at various places in this vicinity.

VOTES FOR INDIANS.

Deputation of Red Men Wait on Premier Whitney.

Toronto, April 13.—Chief J. H. Fisher, M. P. P. for North Brant, yesterday introduced Chief Hill and two warriors from the Mohawk Reserve, accompanied by a young Indian from the university, to Premier Whitney and Hon. J. J. Foy. They asked that the franchise be extended to Indians, and presented a petition signed very largely by members of the Dominion Government. It stated that there were 4,700 Indians in Ontario with a voting strength of 1,100. Premier Whitney promised consideration.

The Indians were disfranchised by the Dominion Government on the ground that they were wards of the Dominion. They asked to be given the privilege of voting in Ontario, and many Dominion members would like to see this.

ROBBED BY A TRICK.

How "The Squaw Man" Lost His Watch at the Station.

Kingston, April 13.—Frank Young, advance agent for "The Squaw Man," was queerly done out of a watch at the G. T. R. station.

He was about to board a train when a supposed official asked to see his ticket. It was being scrutinized when the official turned to a man and said, "We ought to put those cars on, but I do not know if we will have time to do it." The other was heard to say, "Oh, I guess we will have time, all right."

Turning to Young the last speaker enquired of him what the time was by his watch. Young pulled the watch out of his vest pocket, and one of the men grabbed it and ran.

How's your Roof?

Is it Lightning-proof, Fire-proof, Water-proof?

If not, you should learn all about our "Safe Lock" Galvanized Steel Shingles. They are proof against every element. The lock, on all four sides, makes it impossible for rain or snow to back up under the shingles and rust the nail holes and raw edges. This feature has been imitated, but is found in its perfection only in Our "Safe Lock" Shingles.

Don't use wood shingles. Nowadays, they are expensive and very inferior. They catch deposits of dust and dirt, which soon rot the shingles. Then the roof begins to leak. Patch all you like, you can't keep ahead of the leaks. There's no economy in a wooden roof.

Users everywhere are delighted with "Safe Lock" Shingles. Talk to them about the roofing question. We'll send you names of users in your own vicinity, if you drop us a card.

That cause celebre, the Thaw case, reeking with vileness and sensationalism, has come to an end, at least for a time. Looking at the matter dispassionately, as only people outside of New York city could, perhaps, it seems that the matter was very aptly and truthfully described by Mr. Jerome, when he called it a "common, vulgar, everyday Tenderloin homicide." The expression is hard, and because it is hard it fits the case. Everybody connected with the tragedy, men and women, were sensual, or evil, or vicious, or selfish, or mercenary, or all combined, and they were like their associates. If the trial has proved nothing else, it has proved that in New York ill-used wealth has begotten all the evils that ever were charged against it in any other world capital, past or present. Babylon or Pompeii never showed anything worse.

The Hon. Sydney Fisher, the Dominion Minister of Agriculture, is said to be experimenting with a view to producing a breed of chickens wearing fur instead of feathers. This statesman is doing much for agriculture. One of his earlier inventions was a squirt with which to feed hens. The hens were to stand in a row with their beaks open, and the feed was to be squirted into their crops with the Fisher Food Injector. The new idea will be exceedingly advantageous because the chickens will serve a double purpose in addition to that food value they will be fur-producing, thus the farmer will be able to grow sealskin jackets in the hennery.

It would seem that Belleville is not the only place dissatisfied with its post office service, judging by the following from the Toronto News, every word of which is true:

"It is time the Postmaster-General understood that the postal service throughout the country generally has become thoroughly unsatisfactory. The fault lies not with postmasters and postal officials, but with the department itself. In most of the cities the offices are undermanned and the delivery staffs inadequate. It has become the habit to set certain classes of miscellaneous matter aside for convenient handling. Important business interests are prejudiced by delay in despatching circulars and pamphlets. It is impossible to know when such matter will be delivered, and thus serious business calculations may be frustrated by the action of the postal authorities. With the limited staffs, however, no other course is possible, and the censure lies, as we have said, upon the department at Ottawa."

This is said to have actually occurred in one of Toronto's mammoth department stores one day last week. A lady customer stood in one of the aisles in a pensive attitude. She was perhaps meditating on the advisability of investing in some of the finery, when a short-sighted clerk taking her for one of the lay figures, threw his arms around her and proceeded to carry her towards one of the windows. A vigorous protest was instantly entered by the lady, who was rudely aroused from her reverie, and the blushing clerk, overcome with confusion, humbly apologized for his error.

M. Armand Lavergne, one of Sir Wilfrid's rebellious French-Canadian members, is of the opinion that "Cockneys" are no better than Sikhs as emigrants. M. Lavergne, no doubt, meant to be impertinent but inadvertently he paid the "Cockneys" a high compliment. The Sikhs were, before they became loyal, as gallant a foe as British troops ever met, and they are to-day among the best of India's different races. Bourassa's friend, of course, meant his remark as an insult, but it was a good deal of a compliment.

A SPRING TONIC.

DR. WILLIAMS PINK PILLS MAKE RICH, RED HEALTH-GIVING BLOOD.

Cold winter months, enforcing close confinement in over-heated, badly ventilated rooms—in the home, in the shop and in the school—sap the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes clogged with impurities, the liver sluggish, the kidneys weakened, sleep is not restful—you awake just as tired as when you went to bed, you are low spirited, perhaps have headache and blotchy skin—that is the condition of thousands of people every spring. It comes to all unless the blood is enriched by a good tonic—by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills not only banish this feeling, but they guard against the more serious ailments that usually follow—rheumatism, nervous debility, anaemia, indigestion and kidney trouble. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are an ideal spring medicine. Every dose makes new, rich, red blood. Every drop of new blood helps to strengthen the overworked nerves; overcomes weakness and drives the germs of disease from the body. A thorough treatment gives you vim and energy to resist the torrid heat of the coming summer. Mrs. Jas. McDonald, Sugar Camp, Ont., says: "I was badly run down, felt very weak and had no appetite. I could scarcely drag myself about and felt that my condition was growing worse. I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and before I had used a dozen boxes I was as strong as ever. My appetite returned and I am now able to do my housework without feeling worn-out. I think Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the best tonic there is."

It is a mistake to take purgatives in spring. Nature calls for a medicine to build up the wasted force—purgatives only weaken. It is a medicine to act on the blood, not one to act on the bowels, which is necessary. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a bloodless medicine — they make pure, rich, red blood, and strengthen every organ of the body. See that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around each box. All other so-called pink pills are fraudulent imitations. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Boers Hate Chinese.

The new Transvaal Ministry will adopt no heroic measure with regard to the repatriation of the Chinese coolies.

The Imperial Government will be thoroughly disillusioned if it expects the Boers to display any anxiety in the direction of sending the Chinamen home.

General Botha, the new Premier, and his colleagues do not love the Asiatics, but they are wise enough to approve their stay in the country so long as it is to the Boer interest.

The Boers are far more interested in farming than in gold mining, but the success of one depends on the other. If the Chinamen were sent away, the demand of the mines for Kaffir labor would be so great that the Boer farms would be depleted of their hands.

If the Radical party knew how the average colonial in that country regards them, they would understand why people say they prefer Boer rule to being left to the erratic mercies of Downing street under a Liberal dispensation.

The real cause of the distress that prevails in Johannesburg among men whose wealth ran well into six figures only a few years ago is not far to seek. There are many capitalists who have retired to Europe, and have lent money on mortgage of real estate at 7 or 8 per cent. through the medium of the bankers.

Owners of property find it almost impossible to pay mortgage interest, and the mortgagees are foreclosing in every direction. There are no buyers, and absentee lenders can become owners of first-class properties at any price from a third to a half of what they cost to erect.

School Children Boycotted.

A curious deadlock has arisen between the education authorities of Durham County and the Borough of Gateshead. Recently Gateshead took a census of the county children attending its schools, and demanded payment for some four to five hundred coming from Durham. This demand has been refused by the county, and the Gateshead Education Committee approved of a circular to send the parents of the children living over the borough boundary, informing NATURE SPARES.

The Stricken Rose From Grief.

What a fortunate provision of nature it is, that deprives the rose of mental suffering; for how poignant would be its grief to discover, in the height of its blooming glory, that a canker fed at its heart, and that its beauty and fragrance were doomed forever. Nature always spares the suffering; she is a veritable storehouse of pleasing rewards, for those who seek her aid. In the years gone by failing hair and grayness have cast a gloom over the lives of thousands of young women, but thanks to the investigations of scientists the true cause of hair destruction is now known to be a germ or parasite that burrows into the hair follicles. Newbro's Herpicide absolutely destroys this germ, thus permitting the hair to grow as nature intended.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

The Teachers' Union

Plans have been well laid for the organization of a union for the school teachers of this province. The purpose of the union is to elevate the standard of the teaching profession generally, and to place the teachers as a body in a better position to protect their own interests. While such a union may serve a good end, while it may do away with many inconveniences and difficulties that have been lying across the paths of the teachers in the past, still there are several important things to consider in perfecting such an organization, as the Woodstock Express very sensibly points out.

There may be a tendency under the existence of such a union to continue in service teachers who are not capable to discharge the duties that have been allotted to them. Under the cloak of the union these teachers might seek protection against the possibility of being released from the service. If this were to happen it would be a serious thing for education in Ontario. The profession would not alone suffer, but the interests of education would be placed in jeopardy. The union should see to it that its membership includes only duly qualified teachers, who give the fullest satisfaction to the schools they serve.

Then, too, the union should not take advantage of its strength to dictate to the Government as to the operation of the educational policy. Not only would this show bad taste, but it would be an attempt to usurp the powers that belong to the education department.

The destiny of education in this province is a serious matter. Upon it turns the status of the future generations. The present policy of the Government is one that will conduce to a higher standard of learning, that will create conditions more satisfactory than have ever before existed. Not only does the new policy deal liberally with the schools, but it enhances the value of the teaching profession and creates better conditions for the teachers.

Thus it is that the new teachers' union should co-operate and assist the Government in the working out of its education policy, and then would it be fulfilling a good mission.

THEY WOULD LAUGH

And the Tone of the Laugh Would Not Be Pleasant.

"I have never appealed to sentiment, and I never will," said the President of the Slater Shoe Company. "As a business product I contend that the Slater shoe at $5 is better value than any imported shoe selling in Canada for $6."

The extra dollar is the customs impost, and this the consumer must pay. Not only does he pay, but he gets a shoe which is not made to withstand the more rigorous climatic conditions of Canada.

That this contention for the Slater shoe is upheld is proven by its wonderful sales in other countries besides Canada. Residents of foreign countries who buy the Slater shoe would laugh at the folks who are cajoled into paying more money for a shoe when they could buy the real Slater shoe.

"Scots Wha Hae."

Some exceptionally rare books and manuscripts were recently sold at Sotheby's, the famous London auction mart, and most of them brought high prices. A second folio Shakespeare brought $1,100. King Glumpus interlude, one act only, sold for $65. Leaves by Thackeray sold for $765.

"A Prayse and Reporte of Maister Martyne Frobisher (Sir Martin Frobisher) on a Voyage to Meta incognita," date 1578, fetched $5,000. The only other known copy is in the British Museum. A rare first edition of Frobisher's second voyage, dated 1577, brought $3,800. The third and last voyage, dated 1578, brought $4,600.

A sixteenth century manuscript of "Prees Pine" was bought by Mr. Stevens for $5,850, and the same purchaser paid $1,775 for an autograph manuscript of Burns' "Scots Wha Hae," sold as the original copy.

Ranji's Message.

Prince Ranjitsinhji, the famous cricketer, and who is now the new Jam of Nawanagar, has sent the following message to the editor of The Birmingham Gazette and Express:

Many thinks for your congratulations. My message to the British public is: "God bless the Emperor King, his Empire, and his people. I hope still to retain the regard, affection, and esteem of my British friends and the British public, by playing the game on another field."—Ranjitsinhji, Perbander, India.

Queensland Fibre Plants.

Queensland is particularly rich in fibre plants, one called by the aboriginals "boorgay" being so tenacious that if the leaf is simply twisted into a rope it will bear the strain of several hundredweight. It is now found that there is growing around Brisbane a fibre plant called by botanists "murva," that will yield fibre of great value. Major Boyd of the Agricultural Department netted some "murva" leaves and sent a sample of fibre to a rope-making firm in Germany for test, and these manufacturers are now prepared to purchase it at $175 to $200 a ton.

VALUABLE MEDICAL PRESCRIPTION.

Recommended by a Well-Known Toronto Doctor, Whose Love for Humanity is Greater Than His Prejudice Against Proprietary Medicines.

The following very valuable prescription, by an eminent and successful physician, will be appreciated by many who are suffering from la grippe, cold, cough, pneumonia, or any throat, lung or stomach trouble, or run-down system, as it is a certain preventive as well; "When you feel that you are taking cold or have chilly feeling or aching in any part of the body or head, or feel weak, tired, dizzy, unfit for work, pain in the head or back of the neck, do not neglect these dangerous symptoms, but go immediately to your druggist and get a bottle of Psychine (pronounced Si-keen), and prepare as follows;

"Psychine, 2 teaspoonfuls.

"Sherry, whiskey or water, 2 teaspoonfuls.

"Choice of the latter can be made according to the judgment and preference of the patient.

"Mix thoroughly and take regularly before each meal and at bed-time." This prescription has been used in thousands of cases and has been so universally successful that a number of leading physicians regularly prescribe Psychine in their practice for any of the above troubles, or any run-down, wasting or constitutional difficulty. It is the most reliable and valuable home remedy. It tones up the entire system, giving a feeling of youthfulness and vigor, adding many years to the life of those who use it.

"Years ago I was almost a physical wreck and was suffering with troubles. Friends and neighbors thought I would never get better. I began to despair myself. Losing faith in my physician, I procured another one who recommended the use of PSYCHINE.

"It was surprising beyond description the effect it had. I seemed to gain with every dose. Inside of two weeks I was able to attend to my housework again. There are no symptoms of consumption about me now.

"MRS. HENDERSON,
"St. John, N.B."

"I had been suffering from La Grippe. My lungs were weak and I had a cough, but Psychine cured me.
"MRS. H. BEAN,
"Cheapside, Ont."

Psychine can be procured from any druggist at 50c and $1.00.

An Effective Cure.

The present crown prince of Germany had as a child a great dislike of being washed. The emperor tried various means to cure him and at last hit on the right one. The young prince came running to him one day in a great rage, saying the sentry had not saluted him as he passed.

"To be sure," said the emperor, "I gave orders they were not to salute a dirty prince, but only a clean one."

The child's pride was hurt, and he took to the bath. He never again objected to being washed.

The Good Time Coming.

(N. Y. Evening Mail.)

Complete municipal or state ownership we have nowhere, yet here and there are instructive instances from which a composite photograph may be pieced together.

Russia has 160,000 men in the government railroad service. These men went out on a general railroad strike a year ago, and pretty nearly paralyzed the state; they were disfranchised in the elections for the second Douma on the ground that they had a selfish personal interest in the result. The government employees on the Italian railroads struck several years ago and secured a rate of pay well above that of civilians. The recent electric light strike in Paris called attention to the fact that in one district of the city there is a municipal electric light plant, the employees of which enjoy two months vacation in the year with pay and another month with pay for "sickness"; this month off is always taken. The 10,000 policemen in this city swing several times that number of votes in behalf of candidates whose friendship is assured, raise corruption funds by the hundreds of thousands for use at Albany, and may prove stronger than the city and the state by defeating the pending legislation intended to reduce them to real subordination. The employees of the municipal ferries draw about 20 per cent more pay than the employees of privately owned ferries.

These disconnected items, pieced together, form one connected story, and that story spells Bureaucracy. It gives point to the statement in Robert D. Porter's "Dangers of Municipal Ownership":

In the course of time municipal employees will rule the local council, not the council the employees. They will choose their masters, who will be at their dictation. Notable supporters of municipal trading are so alive to this danger that they strongly advocate the disfranchisement of every man dependent for livelihood on his employment by a municipality.

Municipal ownership, then, means a favored class, a class working shorter hours than their fellows, drawing more pay and exercising a disproportionate influence in elections and on legislatures— all the advantages being secured at the expense of the multitudes who are not in the public service. If this city should operate the railroad, lighting and telephone services in its jurisdiction it would have a force of about 100,000 employees. This [illegible] would be large enough to dictate terms and candidates to parties, cause them to outbid each other for its support, and decide the election. Take Hearst's bid for police support in 1905 and multiply it by ten and you get the politicians' measure of the political importance of city employees, if all the public services are municipalized. Pretorian guard, bureaucracy — every term which in history has spelled a force supported by the public purse and wielding an inordinate political power at the expense of its fellows, would apply to the conditions created by complete municipal ownership.

All the failures are sure they would

How Columbus Missed the Honor of Discovering This Continent.

A flight of birds, coupled with a sailor's superstition, robbed Columbus of the honor of discovering the continent When Columbus sailed westward over the unknown Atlantic, he expected to reach Zipangu (Japan). After several days' sail from Gomera, one of the Canary islands, he became uneasy at not discovering Zipangu, which, according to his reckonings, should have been 216 nautical miles more to the east.

After a long discussion he yielded to the opinion of Martin Alonzo Pinzon, the commander of the Pinta, and steered to the southwest. Pinzon was guided in his opinion solely by a flight of parrots which took wing in that direction. It was good luck to follow in the wake of a flock of birds when engaged upon a voyage of discovery, according to widespread superstition among Spanish seamen of that day.

If Columbus had kept to his course, he would have entered the gulf stream

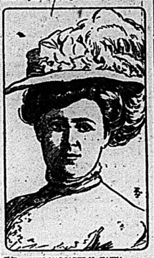
WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS MARGARET M. HANNA.

Confidential Secretary to Assistant Secretary of State Alvey A. Adee.

Miss Margaret M. Hanna enjoys the distinction of being one of the keenest diplomats in the government service.

In her capacity of confidential secretary to Assistant Secretary of State Alvey A. Adee, Miss Hanna has at her command the full knowledge of affairs which pass through the office of the assistant secretary of state, and frequently during the absence of that officer she conducts the office almost as efficiently as her distinguished chief.



MISS MARGARET M. HANNA.

She is regarded by the high officials as the most efficient woman employee in the government service.

Miss Hanna is an accomplished linguist and each year collects all the diplomatic correspondence of the year and compiles it in a book, which is published under the title of "Foreign Relations."

Too Anxious by Half.

A vast number of people are needlessly anxious about their manners. Having been "house folks" all their lives, contentedly and usefully rounding out their days among kindred and neighbors who love and understand them and share their standards, says an editorial in the Home Journal, they are prone when they make a rare excursion into another atmosphere to a painful self consciousness that spoils their pleasures.

Travel is not at all necessary to culture. Some of the finest culture the world has ever seen owed nothing to travel. But there is one comfortable result of travel, and that is the assurance it gives that people are pretty much alike. The superficial traveler may be impressed by "how different" things abroad are from those at home, but the wise observer is always being newly made aware how much the same are things the world over.

So with the gift of tongues. One of the best services it does for us is to show how much in common different people have when they can understand each other. History is another help. The deeper into the past the student delves the more wonderfully he realizes how little time has altered human nature. And as for exalted rank and superior talents, it seems as if every one ought to enjoy the advantage of informal association with at least one celebrity, if only to prove how little real difference fame or splendor makes.

Knowing these things keeps one delightfully free from that diffidence which prevents many persons from appearing well in strange society and from getting that best of the stranger which he can give only to one with whom he can be at ease. When it comes to manners there are very few things, after all, that are essential, and more people make an awkward appearance because they are too concerned about their manners than err in the other extreme. An absorbed interest in another individual, an eager desire to learn how his experience of life corroborates or transcends our own, a sweet willingness to give of our best toward the pleasurableness of the occasion—these are much better beginnings in good manners than are all the etiquette books in creation.

The way to enjoy other people is to think as little as possible of any points in which they may differ from us and as much as possible of the many points in which they must resemble us. And as for which fork to eat fish with, and whether to leave one card or two, and what to say to a hostess when presented—what folly to agonize oneself into a cold perspiration over these things when if we but knew the truth we should find that about four-fifths of those present had no more settled convictions on the subject than we. And if we could see the knowing fifth neatly roped off from the rest we should find fewer of the great, the interesting, the delightful among them than among the others. Great men eat with the wrong fork quite as often as do shy girls from the country.

Javelle Water.

Javelle water is sold by most druggists, but it is not difficult to make and is much less expensive when prepared at home. Every laundress should use it, as it is effective in keeping linen and children's dresses free from fruit stains. A small teacup of the fluid added to a boiler of water will assist materially in keeping the clothes white and will not hurt them in the least.

The most obstinate stains of fruit, tea, coffee, etc., in the tablecloth and napkins will succumb to an application of one part of javelle water diluted with four parts of soft water. If the stained article is soaked in this fluid for several hours, thoroughly washed and rinsed it will usually come out perfectly white and clean. Only white goods can be treated this way, however, as javelle water is likely to fade colors.

It is made thus: Place four pounds of washing soda in a large granite or porcelain lined pan and pour over it four quarts of hot water. Stir with a stick until the soda has dissolved, add a pound of chloride of lime and stir until this has dissolved. Allow the liquid to cool in the pan, strain the portion through a thin cloth into wide mouth jugs or bottles and cork tightly for use. The part that contains the sediment also may be bottled and used for cleaning the sink, kitchen table, etc.

The Lopsided Habit.

The girl was tugging her chiffonier across the room when a friend dropped in unceremoniously and demanded an explanation. "That's the third time you've changed that piece of furniture in so many months. I'd like to know the reason for such foolishness."

The girl gave the chiffonier a final shove into the corner and then said gaspingly: "In order that I may be beautiful on all sides. Sherlock Holmes is to blame for it. You know he pointed out that the side of the body which the light struck the most clearly is always dressed the most immaculately. He showed that on that side the hair would be most artistically curled, the powder most carefully applied, the neckwear most painstakingly adjusted.

"And I've found out a lot more things he didn't speak of. On that side a woman will pencil her eyebrows more cleverly, will massage her face more thoroughly, will put in her side comb more neatly, etc. So every month I shove my chiffonier across the room that I may not become lopsided."

About Flatirons.

Flatirons that are put away for a few weeks often get rusty, and the best way to prevent this is to rub a little warm grease over the surface and then wrap them up in brown paper. When taken out dip into hot water that has had a small piece of soda dissolved in it, rub dry and then put them to heat in the usual way. When they are ready to be used on the ironing board have a piece of brown paper with a little powdered bath brick on it and rub the surface of your iron with this. It seems rather a lengthy process, but it really does not take long to do, and housewives will be rewarded for the trouble they have taken by finding the irons delightfully smooth and easy to use, and when they are like this the work can be done twice as quickly.

The Baby Baskets.

Nothing is better for a baby basket than a wire dish drainer, either round or oblong in shape. They only cost 10 cents at any store where kitchen goods are sold. Cover the wire with blue cambric or blue satin first. Over that place white dotted or plain muslin, rather full. Make a deep ruffle edged with baby lace to fall over the outside. Cut out a piece of cardboard to fit the bottom. Cover it with a layer of cotton batting. Cover with the cambric and then the muslin.

Sprinkle sachet powder on the cotton batting if one cares to have the basket scented. Make little pockets and pincushion to fasten on the sides. Around the top edge sew beading with ribbon run through it. The wire frame is durable and light.

Introduction Customs.

In introducing a woman and a man the latter should be presented to the former, as, for instance, Mrs. Jones, allow me to present Mr. Smith. In the case of two women, one elderly, the younger should be presented to the elder as a pretty mark of respect, as, Mrs. Jones, my friend, Miss Brown. In the event of one party to the introduction being an elderly man of prominence it would be proper to show him the deference and present both a man and woman if younger to him.

A Dainty Sandwich.

A very pleasant and healthy variation of the meat, jam, egg or lettuce sandwich can be made with the assistance of the nutritious currant. Take a teacupful of currants and rub them in a cloth; then butter rather thickly some thin slices of bread. Cover the buttered bread all over with currants, sift a very little castor sugar over them and make into sandwiches. This satisfying little novelty is wonderfully appreciated and will not fail to delight the children.

To turn out a hot pudding plunge the mold or bag into cold water for thirty seconds. If it is a cold pudding, a jelly or blancmange, dip it for an instant in very hot water. If ice cream refuses to leave a mold after being loosened wrap for an instant around the mold a cloth wrung from boiling hot water.

To clean zinc dip a piece of flannel in paraffin and with it well rub the zinc, which should then be washed with hot water and soap to remove the smell of the oil and polished with a dry cloth.

When running brass rods through window curtains put an old glove finger over the end that is being pushed through the hem. Unless this is done the material is apt to tear.

KILLS HIS THIRTEENTH LION.

Explorer's Narrow Escape—Life With the Pigmies.

A Friday adventure with his 13th lion was, the superstitious will note, one of the most exciting incidents in Major Powell-Cotton's novel honeymoon.

The famous explorer has just returned after 27 months of travel in Africa. In 1905 he intended to return to England to be married, but hesitated about breaking his journey, and so his fiancee went out to East Africa, where the wedding took place. Since then they have explored together the land of the pigmies of the Ituri Forest.

It was in October last, while on the bank of the Sassa river, near Lake Albert Edward, that Major Powell-Cotton had his most exciting adventure. A lion which he had wounded sprang on him, digging its claws in the major's back and legs.

It tore its victim's coat to shreds, and then attempted to tear open the abdomen, but owing to a folded copy of Punch which Major Powell-Cotton had in his pocket, the brute's claws were unable to penetrate to the flesh. Finally an Askari shot the lion dead.

It was then found that Major Powell-Cotton had received 17 wounds. He, however, rode to the nearest Belgian camp, where he was nursed back to health by Commandant Bastien.

This incident happened on a Friday, and it was the explorer's 13th lion.

Among the Pigmies.

Speaking of his experiences with the pigmies, Major Powell-Cotton says:—

"The excitement of these little people when they first saw my wife was extraordinary, for they had, of course, never previously beheld a white woman. Perhaps the chief source of wonder was her long hair, which, for the special benefit of the dwarfs, she would let down, while they crowded round our tent in speechless wonder.

"Occasionally when away I would leave my wife alone. She had learned a little of their language, and did excellent medical work among them. In my absence she took charge of the caravan, and was always treated with the greatest respect by the people."

On the conclusion of the work in the forest the expedition proceeded to Lake Albert Edward, where the explorer visited a tribe of lake dwellers, who spend their whole lives on the water. Their houses are

In a Class by Itself

It is quite true FERROL is an emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and a particularly good one at that. But it combines Iron and Phosphorus with the Oil, and these are just what are needed to make the emulsion perfect and they are just what all other emulsions lack.

FERROL

is unique because

- It combines Iron and Phosphorus with Cod Liver Oil.
- It is pleasant to take and easy to digest.
- It holds the record for increasing the weight (95½ lbs from the use of 25 bottles).
- The formula is freely exposed and its bona-fides are vouched for by eminent analysts in Canada, the United States and Great Britain.
- It is endorsed by prominent physicians of all schools.
- It is used in all the leading Hospitals, Sanitariums and other Public Institutions.
- The London (Eng.) Lancet, after careful analysis in its own laboratory, fully endorses it.
- We are prepared to substantiate all the above statements.
- FERROL is the embodiment of health, strength and vitality, and

HE'S SATISFIED.

I ain't so rich as I might be,
But I get three square meals a day,
An' clo'es that's good enough for me,
A decent home in which to stay,
That ain't an awful lot, you say,
But I don't care for much beside,
If things jog on the same old way
I'm satisfied.

Our town, I guess, is pretty small,
We haven't got th' 'lectric light.
Our folks is plain—what you might call
Plain, jay, and probably be right,
There ain't much doin' here at night
An' joints ain't runnin' open wide,
Though that don't suit your notions quite,
I'm satisfied.

I don't know much. I've lots to learn
That you have got down pretty pat,
The most of us don't give a darn;
We take things easy an' grow fat,
But you jest paste this in your hat:
We know when we're a-bein' guyed
An' also to be thankful that We're satisfied.

The New York Herald says: "For more than a week spring has halted on its northward march and the establishment of its genial warm weather over the country. In the Northern and North Eastern States the deficiency of vernal temperatures has been especially noticeable. Twice last week the mercury fell below freezing in this section and once sharp frosts extended from New York to Virginia. Although the widespread occurrence of such frost in last Saturday's cold spell was prevented by cloudiness, the weather of the last two days has been cold and uncanny enough for March in the Atlantic States. While this regime of unseasonably low low temperatures still continues it has been generally aggravated by storms.

A BEAUTY HINT.

Oranges and Green Salads Will Clear the Complexion.

Two simple and inexpensive articles of diet that are excellent for the complexion and system generally are not eaten as much as they should be. They are green salads of any sort, with French dressing oil, pepper, salt and vinegar, and oranges. The latter cannot be too highly advocated. Occasionally there is a person with whom they disagree radically, but this is the exception, and individuals who cannot eat any other fruit will thrive upon oranges.

This particular form of fruit is nourishing, its action upon the digestion is peculiarly beneficial, and therefore it is clearing to the skin. A dozen a day is none too many to eat if a person wishes.

If, however, they have not been eating them, it would be well to begin gradually. Before breakfast take the juice of one strained. This is given to babies and is more easily digested than when the pulp remains in. If, however, the digestion is good, there is no objection to the pulp. It is better, however, always when possible to eject the fine inner skin, and under no circumstances should the tough white underskin be eaten, for it is one of the most indigestible vegetable forms grown.

Another orange may be eaten an hour after breakfast if wished, and a couple at luncheon is none too many. After that one or two at a time at intervals of two hours may be taken, with some just before going to bed. At this last time they will frequently induce sleep. It is not, of course, necessary to eat so many, but they will take the place of other food. Always buy a good quality and be sure they are not overripe.

For girls working in offices oranges are invaluable food if they did but know it. One after luncheon will piece out that meal most satisfactorily, and many times it would be possible to have one of the fruit kept in a desk drawer to be eaten in the afternoon when one is tired, at the same time not stopping work. A little food is a great stimulant when body and mind are fatigued.

Mothers With a Purpose.

A brilliant young woman was recently talking of two of the older women of her relationship whom she greatly admired. They had both aimed at the education of their children and had succeeded in their aim, sending forth from their homes men and women of a high type. They had accomplished their end by much self denial and hardship. She said of these relatives: "They both had a purpose and never lost sight of it. They carried out their purpose. The trouble with me, I think, is that I have no purpose. They wanted the right things, and they went after them and got them. I do not want the right things, though I want to want them. I suppose I do not want to want them hard enough. Grandmother and aunt wanted the right things hard, and they got them. What most of us need is more purpose." She is a good woman as well as a bright one, is a fine mother and wife, and possibly her judgment of herself was a little harsh, says Calvin Dill Wilson in the Mother's Magazine. Surrounded by luxuries, she does not have the same incentive to effort in the same direction as her relatives, who had to make a struggle for the education of their children.

Her children will be educated without her self denial. Yet in her favorable conditions she recognized the superiority of the women with a purpose and felt that in her own life and in that of many of her acquaintances some great thing was lacking—a purpose. The mothers who are struggling may be encouraged by the thought that their sisters, who seem to have so much more than they and seem to be in enviable environments, really in their hearts look with admiration and awe upon those who are struggling toward a noble end. The mothers with a purpose, who "want the right things and want them hard and go after them," command the respect of all.

How to Properly Boil Water.

When water is put into a kettle over the fire, bubbles rise to the surface. These are expanded air, and this is why the kettle "boils over" if filled to the brim when the water is cold. As the water grows hotter it changes to steam at the bottom of the kettle, where the heat is most intense, and bubbles of steam take the place of air bubbles. At 185 degrees the steam bubbles rise and drop back and the water is said to simmer. If the water rises yet higher in temperature, the bubbles escape, and at 212 degrees the water boils and steam escapes. Now, a thermometer will show that no matter how much the heat is increased under the kettle the water will become no hotter than 212 degrees, but it will be turned into steam faster, and in that way it is said to "boil away." Therefore unless food is to be cooked in steam it is a waste of fuel to boil water so fast that it disappears rapidly in steam. The violent agitation will also break into pieces whatever is being cooked.

THE DRESSMAKER.

Practical Points For the Woman Who Does Her Own Sewing.

In hemming a lot of bias ruffling there is nothing more aggravating than to have it twist in the machine. This is because there is a right as well as a wrong bias. Which is which can be determined only by testing.

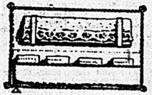
Take your length of goods and fold over your bias corner from both ends. Lay your rule parallel to this, so that you can cut off the short corner from both ends. Try these in the machine in order to discover which one it is that will run askew and produce the twisting so often seen. The other will run easily. One little idea as to the fastening of vents in dresses in the case of both wash materials and the thin, transparent laces and nets is to use, instead of hooks and eyes for the placket fastening, small lace buttons and worked loops. And then another way is to use a strip of silk cord on the eye side of the placket and small hooks on the opposite side which catch into the silk cord. This keeps the placket firmly fastened. The placket of a skirt is considered one of the most important parts of the skirt on account of its finishing, as this adds to the general appearance of the skirt. One reason why so many plackets are gaping is because the hooks and eyes are placed too far apart and insufficient room is given against the strain at this point. Care should be taken in arranging and sewing on fasteners of any kind, as a few extra stitches will help to hold them firmly in place and prevent the fasteners or hooks and eyes from falling off. A placket may be made at the back, front or side of a skirt, the location depending on the style of skirt. The skirt closes at the center of the back and forms an inverted plait, leaving an opening for placket from ten to twelve inches, which allows the skirt to be put on and off easily.

TWO USEFUL TRIFLES.

That Make Convenient Places to Keep Handkerchiefs and Veils.

Most women have odds and ends of silk, brocade and fancy material generally, which they wonder "what on earth can be done with," that perhaps the accompanying sketch may give another idea for the utilization of these scraps and unconsidered trifles.

The design shows a case combining two purposes—viz, to keep veils and handkerchiefs, the former of which will last much longer if some little care be given to them when not in use.



TWO USEFUL TRIFLES.

The sachet sketched could be made of silk, brocade or pretty cretonne, lined with pongee silk. It is twelve or fourteen inches in length and wide enough to fold over and form a pocket for the handkerchiefs and leave the flap for the veil. On the inside of this are sewed two strips of elastic, through which the folded veil is slipped, as the sketch clearly shows. The edges are outlined with cord to match the silk or harmonize with the colors if a patterned material be selected.

Small Boy Suggestions.

Give the small boys a room of their own, where they may be allowed to work, play, read or whatever the boyish fancy may dictate. If they be fond of reading, give them plenty of good books and magazines and an easy chair to sit in while they read.

A boy loves comfort just as much as a girl does, and money spent in making him comfortable at home goes a long way toward keeping him off the street.

Some boys are not content to spend a whole evening reading. They should be provided for in some other way. Let them have games and invite their boy friends into their room and feel that they have a share in the home.

If the boy wants to make money and can do it without interfering with his school work, let him do so. It will teach him to be industrious and will cultivate business habits.

Boys like to be trusted, and it makes them manly. If a boy deserves praise, give it to him freely.

There are boys and boys, but there was never yet one who was not susceptible to kindness and who could not be managed if the right course was pursued.

Laundry Suggestions.

Things to remember in washing:
That flannels are washed first.
That white things come next.
That colored things are done while white things are boiling.
That dirty kitchen aprons and cloths come last of all.
That soaking is done in tepid water.
That rinsing is done in tepid water.
That extremes of heat and cold cause shrinking.
That soap jelly is necessary for woolen things.
That soap must be thoroughly rinsed out before bluing.
That blue must be well mixed through the water.
That wringing well after bluing is most important.
Things to remember in drying:
To have the lines, pegs and clothes-horse scrupulously clean.
To hang things up wrong side out.
To hang colored things in a shady place.
Not to hang woolen things in too great heat.

[illegible]. Alleys, parterres, and walks alike were deserted save by the Fountain of Neptune, where on a seat under the sombre shadows of the stately trees a woman, cloaked to her feet and hooded, sat patiently watching the ghostly glimmer of the statues in the dusk. She had not to wait long before a man cloaked also had quietly joined her.

"I am late, Mademoiselle," he said, "but it is not my fault."

"It does not matter, Chevalier," Denise replied calmly, "the later the better for both of us."

"No doubt. Ah, it is noble of you to come here alone, you who have so much to lose if——"

"We will not talk of that, please." "I am here of my own free will and I would risk much more for the sake of the Queen, my mistress, and for France."

"Yet I would it were not necessary."

"Unhappily it is. That woman's spies have made it impossible that you can any longer come to confer with the Queen's friends by the secret passage; if we are to succeed in our plan it must not be known that you, who are in the King's private service, are an ally of the Ministers and of the Queen's party; nor can you now openly visit her Majesty's apartments as you did——"

"No," said the Chevalier, "the new Captain of the Queen's Guards has prevented that."

For a minute or two Denise was silent. "Secrecy is necessary to success," she resumed in a restrained voice; "I am here as you know on behalf of the Queen's advisers; what others may think cannot affect those who are my friends, who believe in me because they believe in my—our—cause."

"Not merely your friends, Marquise, but those who love you."

"Monsieur, up there," she pointed to the majestic front of the palace, where the lights were beginning to twinkle, "you can speak like that if you think fit. Down here I beg you to remember I am an orphan, a girl alone."

And then both were silent.

"Are you sure, really quite sure," Denise began, "that the Vicomte de Nerac owes his appointment to the intrigues of that woman?"

"I am absolutely sure."

Denise sighed very faintly. "You remember your promise not to reveal this discovery to any one else."

"Certainly. But is it necessary?"

"No, not necessary. I ask it as a favor."

The Chevalier bowed. Again there was silence, for her tone did not invite further question. "Have you discovered anything fresh of importance?" Denise asked presently.

"Several things, Mademoiselle."

"Do they concern the Vicomte de Nerac?" she demanded quickly.

"Yes."

"Then I do not wish to hear them. I cannot, I will not," she added in a low voice of emotion.

The Chevalier made a gesture of despairing dismay. "But speak I must," he said, "for things cannot be worse than they are. The King is absolutely infatuated. The Pompadour is wise enough to see that that may not last; she will not rest therefore till she has his Majesty completely in her power. This mysterious treachery is her chance. Let her discover the truth and the traitor and no one will prevail against her." He paused to add, "And the man who will discover it for her is her friend and servant in secret, the Vicomte de Nerac."

"You believe that?" she faced him eagerly.

"Mademoiselle, if there is any man in Versailles who can do it the Vicomte is that man."

Denise clasped her hands. "What can we do, Chevalier?" she asked. "What can we do?"

The Chevalier took a step or two up and down. "There are only two courses," he said very gravely. "Either the Vicomte must be compelled to break with the Pompadour—or—" he paused—"the King must be persuaded to dismiss him from Versailles—in plain words ruin him."

Denise drew a deep breath. "Ah, God!" she murmured, "that woman, how I hate her! She steals the honorable soldiers of France and corrupts them; she corrupts the King, she wrongs a Queen who has wronged no one. Yes, I hate her because I am a woman, to whom because I believe in God and my noblesse these things are hateful."

"You are right, Mademoiselle," (sincerity rang in the boyish voice) "to me, too, she is the symbol in a woman's form of all that is evil in France, and it is your France that will suffer for her ambition and her sins."

"She will be punished," said Denise, "God will punish her. Dieu le Vengeur!" she murmured.

The Chevalier had drawn a deep breath. "Dieu le Vengeur!" he repeated to himself almost mockingly. "It is a fine motto, Dieu le Vengeur!"

"It is strange," she mused, "that you, Chevalier, who were not born a French noble, should feel as we do."

"You have taught me," he answered quietly. "Yes, yes, when I entered the King's service I found a strange court and a strange master. It was you who taught me, what I could scarcely believe, that there are still in France women worthy to be called noble, aye, and men, too. It is for your sake that I work, that I would help to overthrow and punish that low-born adventuress who would ruin the King. No, Marquise," he added, "I do not forget your warning, and I say no more than this, that your love alone keeps me true to my task, to your—our—cause."

"I thank you," she answered with simple dignity. "Let us work for France, Chevalier, and for the right, and we shall win."

He bid her adieu and vanished, for ty required that he should leave t. Denise sank back into her

"Pardon," he interrupted. "The conduct of Mademoiselle la Marquise de Beau Sejour is no affair of mine. I regret, however, that as I have intruded on you I cannot offer you my escort, for it is neither in my interest nor in yours, Mademoiselle, that you and I should run the risk of being seen here by the Chevalier de St. Amant or by any one else who talks of secrets to all his friends. With your permission, therefore, I will leave you."

Denise dropped into her seat with a sob. That Andre of all men should discover her here was anguish. Nor was it only that his discovery might mean the frustration of the schemes that were being so carefully planned; it was the cruel humiliation of herself against which all the womanhood in her cried out. If he had reproached her, accused her, denounced her, insulted her! No; he had only been cold as one who was indifferent or was ready to believe any evil.

Yet Andre was as unhappy as she, could she have but known it. Purely by accident on his return from Paris had he stumbled on Denise in the dark, and torturing thoughts made him feel bitter and then reckless. Denise, his Denise! Surely there was nothing to live for now. Love was a mockery and a sham. Women were all alike, faithless, vain, frivolous, worthless. He would do the Pompadour's work without a twinge of conscience now, he would take what life had to offer of pleasure and revenge. Yes; he would revenge himself to the full on this perjured, intriguing, and immoral Court, and then he would go to die in the Low Countries.

Meanwhile Denise had returned safely to the Queen's apartments and after supper sat alone in her misery in the room which opened off the hall of the Queen's Guards. The curtains were drawn, but the door was ajar and she could hear a group of young nobles chattering as they played cards. Scattered remarks broke in on her bitter self-reproaches. Women's names, some of them her friends, some of them dancers at the opera, were being freely bandied about. It was intolerable, vile, and her cheek burned to think that it was with these men that the priests and the ministers and herself were working to overthrow the Pompadour. She rose to close the door and shut out the scandalous babble, when a remark stammered out by the Comte des Forges sent a shiver through her.

"I t-tell you it is quite t-true," he was saying. "Mont Rouge has l-learned that she m-met the Chevalier by the F-fountain of Neptune this very evening."

"Quite true," Mont Rouge assented in his most cynical tone. "But don't spill the wine on the dice, dear friend."

"But how did you learn?" several voices demanded.

"As one always does, from another woman, of course." Mont Rouge was carelessly rattling the dice-box.

"And you believe it?"

"Certainly. Your turn to throw, Des Forges. Gad! your hand is shaky tonight. Why should I not believe it? The Marquise, I suppose, is like the rest of her sex, and," he laughed softly, "the Chevalier is—the Chevalier."

Des Forges sniggered fatuously. "Sixes—s-sixes. Name of St. Denys! You speak like a m-married m-man, Mont Ro-ouge."

"What is Mont Rouge's last scandal?" Andre had entered.

Half a dozen tongues eager with malice repeated the story. There was a pause. Denise stood thrilled. Her fate was in his hands.

"This is not scandal," Andre said slowly and very clearly. "It is a lie."

Chairs were excitedly pushed back. Dice-boxes and a table rolled over. Then dead silence.

"Yes," said the clear voice. "I repeat it is a lie."

"Monsieur le Vicomte," Mont Rouge was speaking with an affectation of marked politeness but his voice shook with passion, "I beg you to remember who is responsible for the story. You will withdraw that insult."

"At half-past six," Andre proceeded calmly, "I was at the Fountain of Neptune. The Chevalier de St. Amant was not there. The Marquise de Beau Sejour was not there. The Comte de Mont Rouge will therefore no doubt see fit to withdraw his insult."

"Where is the Chevalier de St. Amant?" "Have the Chevalier fetched," suggested two or three.

"No," said Andre firmly. "This is not the Chevalier's affair. The Comte de Mont Rouge can deal with him when and how he pleases. For my part I repeat that the statement about the Marquise de Beau Sejour, for which apparently Monsieur le Comte is responsible, is a lie, and I have proved it."

"The Vicomte de Nerac talks," Mont Rouge answered fiercely, "as if his honor had been questioned."

"Yes, sir, it has until you have withdrawn what you said."

"And supposing I refuse to withdraw at your dictation?"

"It would be only what I expect. Gentlemen, I now assert in the presence of you all that the Comte de Mont Rouge is a liar, and I shall continue to repeat it until——"

"No, sir," Mont Rouge interrupted. "You will not repeat it. But at half-past six to-morrow morning you will also in the presence of these gentlemen doubtless permit me to teach you that I am not to be insulted even by a Cordon Bleu!"

Andre bowed. "The Comte de St. Benoit will make the necessary arrangements," he said quietly, "with the gentleman whom you will name."

The room slowly emptied. Andre paced to and fro. The curtain was sharply flung aside, and he saw Denise pale and trembling.

"You will not fight?" she pleaded.

"I have no choice, Mademoiselle."

"Oh, why did you say it?" she questioned passionately.

"It is surely very simple. Mademoiselle la Marquise has no father, husband, nor brother to maintain her honor. To me as Captain of the Queen's Guards belongs by right the duty of defending her Majesty's ladies from insults and lies."

"But it was true," she whispered brokenly.

"No," he answered. "What was said and implied was not true. It was a lie, and you, Mademoiselle, please God, know it as I hope to do."

The color leaped into Denise's cheeks. The thanks in her eyes were intoxicating.

"But if you are killed?" she murmured.

"Why, then, I suppose the Marquise de Pompadour will have the pleasure of appointing my successor."

Denise shrank at the remorseless taunt. Andre's face was pitiless.

"Do not be distressed," he added as if he were addressing the wall. "I have of settling it so satisfactorily. Besides it is high time that these shameless tongues should be silenced. I do assure you that after to-morrow the Marquise de Beau Sejour will have nothing to fear—but the truth."

Denise turned appealingly to him. "Andre!" she whispered softly. "Andre!"

For a moment his hands clenched. "Monsieur le Vicomte," he corrected, frigidly, "who is your servant, Marquise."

He raised the curtain with a stately reverence. In silence she walked past him, her head bowed, and in silence he saluted as became the Captain of the Queen's Guard, to a maid of honor and a marquise. The gleam of the candles in their gilt sconces fell on her hair and neck, on the jewels on her breast. Then the curtain slowly swung between them.

When the woman of the Marquise de Beau Sejour brought in the morning cup of chocolate she found her mistress had passed a sleepless night of tears; but she was able to tell her that the Vicomte de Nerac had for the fiftieth time vindicated his superb swordsmanship, and that the Comte de Mont Rouge would not use his right arm for many weeks to come. And Denise knew that the Court had heard the last of that meeting by the Fountain of Neptune.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Queen's ladies had been entertaining their friends, and the antechamber was well filled with a company of the most fashionable and powerful of the noblesse, particularly of those high-born ladies and gentlemen who devoted whatever time they could spare from breaking the Ten Commandments with a dulcet courtesy to the amusement of political intrigue. Strangely enough the Queen's friends were drawn from three very different types—there were the "devout," les devots, les rigoristes, to whom the free-thinking of the fashionable philosophers coming to be the mode in the Faubourg St. Germain was anathema maranatha, my lords of the hierarchy of the bishops, with the high-born women who were their obedient pupils; there were the "fribbles," the great seigneurs with their wives and sisters and daughters privileged morally as well as politically if only the breach were made within their own class and with due regard to etiquette and good manners, the men and women born within the purple who sincerely believed that "God could scarcely condemn a person of that quality" for what would be mortal sin in a bourgeois; and there were the "snobs," the women above all of the inferior noblesse remorselessly struggling upwards who snatched at the splendid opportunity a queen's cause and a minister's cause offered. Monsieur the Dauphin, mesdames the princesses of the blood were known to hate Madame de Pompadour, to be plotting her overthrow; that was enough. Surely with royalty lay the social future.

"Yes, to be sure," the Abbe St. Victor was explaining with the smile of the lay roue to the Duchesse de Pontchartrain, "the King's sin would be only one-half as heinous if Madame de Pompadour were simply a widow or even a demoiselle"; he took a pinch of snuff and regretfully shrugged his shoulders.

"Or if she were really vulgar, the Duchess interposed with the pouting staccato which she knew became her best. "I wonder if all bourgeoise women are like her. She is not vulgar, alas! and really it is her duty to be vulgar. Pontchartrain says she dresses better than I do."

"That is mere outward show," the Abbe remarked, "as well as being not true."

"I wonder," the Duchess asked with an air of profundity, "if a woman can be vulgar inside without being vulgar outside."

"She is not a Christian," Mademoiselle Eugenie pronounced. "That is enough for me."

"But she goes regularly to mass," objected the puzzled Duchess.

"To show her fine dresses to the Duke de Pontchartrain," Mademoiselle retorted with sour severity. "Clothes, Madame, have nothing to do with religion."

"For heaven's sake," cried the Duchess, alarmed, "don't say so to Pontchartrain. "It would put the most embarrassing ideas into his head."

The Abbe tittered into his lace handkerchief till he was checked by the ferocious glare of the devotes at his elbow. "You will see how vulgar the Pompadour can be," he said hurriedly, "when you have turned her out."

"Inside out or outside in?" asked the Comtesse des Forges to annoy Mademoiselle Eugenie.

"Oh, do let it be seen," the Duchess pleaded, "whichever way it is."

The Abbe nodded mysteriously. He was as pleased as the rest of the company that afternoon with the progress of the great plot.

"You saw His Majesty's confessor?" The Duke de Pontchartrain had drawn Denise into a corner. "Is it satisfactory?"

"Eminently so. His Majesty listened with great attention, and was much impressed, his reverence thought."

"Good." The Duke studied Denise's eyes and figure. What a magnificent coryphee she would have made, to be sure, and how the diamonds he had just given to that perfidious minx Babette would have suited her. "The ministers," he added quietly, "have followed the confessor's remonstrances up, I hear. They urged how unpopular the lady was in Paris. His Majesty likes popularity, you know, with the canaille."

"Yes," said Denise, "everything is going as we could wish."

Her eyes, like the Duke's, had unconsciously crossed the room, where Andre was talking to the Comtesse des Forges.

"We miss Mont Rouge," his Grace remarked carelessly. "He was a valuable friend to the cause." Like the rest of the Court the Duke was ignorant of what had brought about the duel, but the sudden color in Denise's cheeks and her silence confirmed his shrewd suspicions. "And," he added with the same carelessness, "I am not sure that De Nerac is—what shall I say?—altogether a friend."

"Why do you think that?" Denise asked almost proudly.

The Duke shrugged his shoulders. "My fancy, I suppose," he answered lightly. "Perhaps, however, our dear, captivating friend yonder will convert him. She could convert St. Anthony if she really tried, eh?"

Denise knew that under this persiflage the Duke was studying her closely and she was greatly relieved that he now bowed himself away. For all his affectation of being a man of pleasure and nothing more she had divined his keen ability and wide knowledge of life. He had talked to test her and she was angry that she could not meet his searching gaiety with the polished impenetrability that was his unique gift. She bitterly resented, too, that Andre should stand there basking in the languishing eyes of the Comtesse des Forges, who was never happy save when she was making her stammering nincompoop of a husband unhappy. Two days had passed since that painful evening when he had parted from her in the Salle des Gardes de la Reine. He had proved his chivalry; he had triumphantly vindicated her honor; why did he not give her the opportunity had he not come to ask and to receive forgiveness? Was it as gossip whispered, that he really preferred the Comtesse des Forges? Or was it, as the Duke had plainly hinted, because he really preferred, what was far worse the service and rewards of Madame de Pompadour? And reward him the mistress could, poor Denise was thinking; for to the surprise of the Court the King had simply ignored the duel though in other similar cases both victor and vanquished had been forbidden Versailles for a season. And Andre was still Captain of the Queen's Guards. Denise's foot beat on the floor. Yes, in the King's private salon Andre had a powerful protector, herself and her friends a dangerous enemy; yet her pride and gratitude alike forbade her to reveal the truth to her allies—to the Queen, to the ministers, to the devots, to the nobles working together for a common end.

Andre saluted her as he passed out. On the threshold he paused to nod quietly to the Chevalier de St. Amant who was entering. The young man was as gaily dressed as usual, but his boyish face was grave and sad. He whispered something to the Duke de Pontchartrain.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed his Grace, "impossible!"

"I wish it were," said the Chevalier, "but it is quite true."

"Dismissed! The Comptroller—General dismissed!" St. Benoit repeated and the news flew round the room. "But why? Why?"

"It is an intrigue," the Chevalier explained. "Messieurs Paris, the bankers, who are related to the Pompadour, have refused to do any further business with the Comptroller-General. And so His Majesty has dismissed not the bankers but the minister."

"You mean," remarked the Comtesse des Forges, "that the Pompadour has dismissed the Comptroller-General?"

"Exactly."

The consternation was general. "It is no laughing matter," the Duke de Pontchartrain pronounced. "This is the first time that that woman or any woman in her position has interfered with high affairs of state. It will not be the last."

"I knew she must be vulgar inside," cried his Duchess triumphantly. "It is a pity she dresses so well. The bankers pay, I suppose."

"It is an outrage," Mademoiselle Eugenie said

"My dear lady," answered the Duke with his most finished scorn, "when a king owes twenty million livres to a pair of money-lenders and wants twenty million more you will find that it is they, not the Court, who can protest."

"And that is not all," the Chevalier proceeded grimly. "His Majesty has been pleased to promise the reversion of the Comptroller-General's place to the Marquis de Vaudieres."

"Impossible! Impossible!" The consternation increased, for the Marquis till a few weeks before had been better known as Abel Poisson, Madame de Pompadour's brother.

"Charming," said the Duke, "if His Majesty must make marquises from the gutter at the bidding of a grisette it is only fair he should enable them to be masters of the public finances and to pay their way by plunder. What is His Majesty's next whim, Chevalier?"

"What it will be to-morrow, Monseigneur, I cannot say. The King has been pleased to do no more to-day than what I have said."

"And a very pretty day's work it has been," his Grace replied. "Well, ladies, I have only one piece of advice to offer you. Smile, smile, smile, for if you protest Madame la Marquise de Pompadour will turn her attention to you. Do not forget that she has a pretty bourgeoise daughter eight years old to whom the post of maid of honor to her Majesty would be a delightful and profitable education."

He saluted the company, and taking most of the men with him withdrew, for the situation was sufficiently grave to demand an instant conference.

All the heart and gaiety had already been struck out of the ladies. The Chevalier's dejected air, so strange to his careless and irrepressible spirit, was the most telling comment on the menace in his news. To the angry indignation and rapid questions of the ladies he now replied with melancholy brevity. The King was infatuated and obdurate, and Madame de Pompadour was plainly determined to make him the instrument of her vulgar vengeance.

"She has captured the King," the young man remarked in his gloomiest tones. "She will now coerce the Queen. Her ambition is to be mistress of the robes and thus to rule all Versailles."

The mere suggestion of such an outrage on precedent and etiquette made the ladies speechless with horror. A bourgeoise mistress of the robes! It was unthinkable—blasphemous. As if her Majesty in dressing could take even the simplest garment except from the hands of a princess of the blood or of a duchess.

"You forget, Madame," the Chevalier remarked drily, "that the King's will is law. Le Roi gouverne par lui-meme."

They were the words of Louis XIV. To-day they can still be read as the motto of Le Roi Soleil in the centre of the superb ceiling of that Galerie des Glaces at Versailles which enshrines for all generations the imperial ambitions of the king who made it. Arrogant words, but true.

The antechamber became gradually deserted. The Chevalier stood at the window watching the gathering gloom. His dejection was not acting. His boyish face was almost tragic in its gravity. Presently he rose and began to pace up and down, wrestling with his thoughts, until he became suddenly aware that Denise had re-entered and was looking at him in questioning silence.

"Mademoiselle," he advanced to meet her. "I have no comfort for you. Before long I shall be bidding you adieu for ever."

Her eyes invited an explanation, but she said nothing.

"I speak seriously," he proceeded. "You and your friends, Mademoiselle are aware that I am with you heart and soul in the desire to overthrow this woman who will ruin us all. I have been able in the past, as you know, to do some service to the cause by bringing you information that I learned as His Majesty's confidential secretary. At your request I have to the best of my power abstained from appearing publicly to be of your party, for His Majesty is suspicious and jealous. But I fear from to-day my services must end."

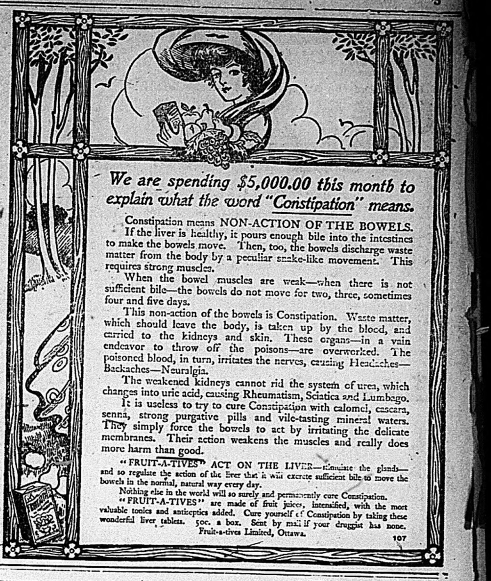
BABY'S FRIEND.

"Before I got Baby's Own Tablets my baby was troubled with colic and vomiting and cried night and day, and I was almost worn out. But after giving him the Tablets for a few days the trouble disappeared and you would not know it was the same child he is so healthy and good-natured now." This is the grateful testimonial of Mrs. George Howel, Sandy Beach, Que., and it tells other mothers who are worn-out caring for cross, sickly children, how they can bring health to the little ones and ease to themselves. Baby's Own Tablets promptly cure the minor ailments of little ones, and there are no cross sickly children in the homes where the Tablets are used.



We are spending $5,000.00 this month to explain what the word "Constipation" means.

Constipation means NON-ACTION OF THE BOWELS.

If the liver is healthy, it pours enough bile into the intestines to make the bowels move. Then, too, the bowels discharge waste matter from the body by a peculiar snake-like movement. This requires strong muscles.

When the bowel muscles are weak—when there is not sufficient bile—the bowels do not move for two, three, sometimes four and five days.

This non-action of the bowels is Constipation. Waste matter, which should leave the body, is taken up by the blood, and carried to the kidneys and skin. These organs—in a vain endeavor to throw off the poisons—are overworked. The poisoned blood, in turn, irritates the nerves, causing Headaches—Backaches—Neuralgia.

The weakened kidneys cannot rid the system of urea, which changes into uric acid, causing Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago.

It is useless to try to cure Constipation with calomel, cascara, senna, strong purgative pills and vile-tasting mineral waters. They simply force the bowels to act by irritating the delicate membranes. Their action weakens the muscles and really does more harm than good.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" ACT ON THE LIVER—stimulate the glands—and so regulate the action of the liver that it will excrete sufficient bile to move the bowels in the normal, natural way every day.

Nothing else in the world will so surely and permanently cure Constipation.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" are made of fruit juices, intensified, with the most valuable tonics and antiseptics added. Cure yourself of Constipation by taking these wonderful liver tablets. 50c. a box. Sent by mail if your druggist has none.

BURNING OF SUNDER SINGH.

A Hindu Funeral Custom at Nelson, British Columbia.

The final ceremonies, as far as this country is concerned, in the funeral obsequies of Sunder Singh, an ex-sergeant of the 33rd Burmese Regiment, were religiously carried out the other day at Nelson, B. C. According to the religion of the Sikhs, which partly resembles the Brahminism of the Hindus proper, especially as regards these obsequies and partly that of their fellow-countrymen, the Pat-hans, every corpse must be disposed of by fire and by water, as the idea of the flesh of Sikh manhood being consumed by a worm is abhorrent to these people.

Body Was Cremated.

Sunder Singh was one of a party of 20 Sikhs, nearly all of whom are ex-soldiers of the Indian Empire, employed by the Canadian Pacific in construction work near this city, the railway finding it difficult to get white labor. He was run over by a light engine and his body was burned just outside of the city limits.

There were quite a number of white spectators. The corpse was laid, sewed in a white cotton cloth in the middle of the pyre, which was built of a cord of wood and so fashioned that as the logs burned they dropped inward over the body of the man. The Sikhs present went through a religious ceremony in which they committed the soul of their comrade to India, congratulating their comrade on his delivery from the troubles of the world and explaining to the Almighty what a good kind of fellow Sunder Singh was.

Ashes Flung Into River.

Two days afterwards the ashes were raked over and remaining portions of the uncalcined bones, teeth, nails, etc., were gathered together, and after a very small part had been laid aside for despatch to Amritsar, India, to the widow and father of the deceased, the balance, amounting to about a couple of pounds, were taken down to the river side and flung into the water, with the proper religious office. The few ounces sent to India will there be flung into the river nearest the village of Sunder Singh, with similar ritual, the whole ceremony ending with a dinner given to the village by the relatives of the deceased.

The ceremony here was, with but little difference, the same as that witnessed by the writer during a lengthy sojourn in India. There, however, lack of wood and poverty often make the burning at the famous "ghats" on the river side perfunctory and the body is thrown into the Ganges to float down stream into the ocean. "Suttee," or the burning of the widow along with the body of the husband, is not practiced among the Sikhs. That practice has been put down by the British authorities, although a sporadic case is reported from Bombay this year.

Photographs of the burning are being despatched to India, where the snow-clad landscape will give a touch of unreality to a scene which is very familiar in that eastern land.

BIG TREK INTO CANADA.

Rush From Western States This Spring Greater Than Ever.

"To the Canadian Northwest!" is the cry of hundreds of families of Nebraska, Kansas, and Iowa farmers, and the movement of emigrants from these States to Western Canada will this spring surpass any similar movement in the history of the West. In fact, so great has the movement towards Canada become in the past two years that the State of Iowa has had no increase, in its population during that time, the credit for this condition being given to the power of Canada to draw more people away from Iowa than come to that State from Eastern States.

And the class of people thus moving to Canada is of the very best, those who go into Canada are all well supplied with cash, the average, according to emigration agents, being supplied with no less than $8,000 each. By far the larger number of emigrants from Iowa and Nebraska are farmers who have sold their farms in this country and who wish to get into a country of cheap lands. Many of these men once "homesteaded" Government lands west of the Mississippi River, and, by Government laws, are prevented from taking another homestead in the United States even if desirable land of this character could be found.

Agent at Omaha. "There have been some good rushes in other years, but nothing like the one we will have this spring and summer. We will send, through the Omaha agency, 350 cars within the next six weeks or two months. And each car represents from seven to eight people. You can figure that out yourself and see that, just from our present bookings, we will have more than 2,000 people going from this territory into Canada before the first of May."

Jewels In Canada.

The light of knowledge of Canada is slowly breaking in on some of our Motherland editors. "Years ago cut diamonds were exported to Canada as an easy way of getting them into the United States," says The Pall Mall Gazette. "Nowadays the brilliants stay in Canada; there is a sufficient market for them. It is significant of the growing wealth of the colony. A Canadian has just informed me that in his native town of Toronto he observed in the window of the leading jeweler a pearl necklace marked £4,000. He was astonished that there could be a demand in a growing colony for so expensive an ornament, and, questioned the merchant. 'Oh, yes,' the latter replied, 'this is genuinely for sale, and I think I shall sell it.' A short time afterwards the necklace was bought by a Canadian for his wife. The Dominion, indeed, is making vast progress."

A Difference of Opinion.

"Don't you think that her high ruffled collar sets her face off nicely?"

"I like the collar, but I think her face offsets it."

A NEW PACIFIC PORT.

Prince Rupert Will Be a Meeting Place for America and Asia.

Up the coast of British Columbia, there is a land-locked bay on the shores of which a national port is in the making. Interest was first attracted to that spot when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway offered a prize for a name for the western terminus. Prince Rupert was the name chosen and it is to this Pacific port, named for a cavalier explorer, that the curious gaze of the Canadian public is turned to-day.

Prince Rupert is about halfway between Vancouver and Skagway. Here a "steel-bright arm" of the sea extends inland, encircling Kaien Island and protected from the sweep of the ocean by Digby Island. Between these islands lies the main channel of the harbor. This inlet is sixteen miles long, a mile in width, with an average depth of one hundred and fifty feet. It has the rare advantage of a straight entrance. The difference between high and low tide is twenty-five feet. As a great continental port it possesses a wide harbor, with room for an imposing fleet, an entrance of easy access and deep water close up to the shores, with shelter on all sides.

Stretch of Undulating Land.

The city of Prince Rupert is to be built on the northern shore of Kaien Island, well in from the entrance and near the head of the island. The Oldfield Range, which attains an elevation of 2,300 feet, runs down the centre of the island forming a picturesque ridge. Between the heights and the harbor is a stretch of undulating land about 7,000 feet in width and along this strip Prince Rupert will be built.

The neighboring mainland is called the Tsimpsean Peninsula. The district is well-wooded with an abundance of red and yellow cedar, spruce and balsam. Already on the shore of Kaien Island the city is in the making. Engineers and railway officials are established in primitive offices, while navvies, white, Japanese and Indian, are encamped among the trees. The lodging-house for the engineering staff boasts of a "club-room" on the ground floor where newspapers, magazines and "My Lady Nicotine" minister to the comfort of the members.

To Be An Abiding City.

At right angles to the water-front a plank walk twelve feet wide has been laid and along this thoroughfare several buildings are being erected, among them two stores, a hospital, the mess-house and residences for railway officials. On a height fronting the harbor a large hotel is being built. Even now the wharf affords satisfactory accommodation for steamers.

Prince Rupert is to be solidly constructed from the foundation for it is to be an abiding city.

of the present, it is the spot where one may "see things growing." Within four years trains from Atlantic ports will be running into this Pacific terminus where "all change cars" for the Orient. It will form a curious meeting-place for America and Asia where—

"East is West beside our land-locked blue."

HOW TO HANDLE SNAKES.

Famous Dealer Prefers Them to Tigresses and Was Never Bitten.

"There is not so much danger in handling snakes as persons think. I have handled snakes for twenty years and never have been bitten. After you have studied snakes, their habits and manner of living, you will have little fear of them. In fact, I would rather deal with any kind of a snake than a tigress, for instance, or a wildcat."

This little discourse on snakes was made by Otto E. Eggeling, who is well known in Harlem, and who for m years, both in Germany and in country, has been handling a procuring them from India, America and other parts of th for various menageries and z gardens.

He was just preparing to of rattlesnakes which had the Far West to Berlin. are to be placed on exhib out the least trace of fea ing put his hand right in catching one of the rat back of the neck, lifted out and held him up for

He was a fine specime feet long, and looked l customer, but in Mr. Eggeling's he was like a pet cat.

"It all depends how you handle them," said Mr. Eggeling. "The most poisonous snake when grabbed at the back of the neck is powerless. Never show in the least that you are afraid when you meet a snake. Those reptiles are quick to notice fear and they take advantage of it. Instead, show that you are master and the snake will disappear."

An Ontario Boy In the West.

Mr. John F. Mitchell, the new M.P.P. for North Winnipeg, was born in Northumberland county, Ontario, in 1862. He attended the Public Schools and Commercial College and after a few years in the United States he left for Winnipeg, in 1881. At that time the C. P. R. was building its road and Mr. Mitchell entered their employ, first as a contractor. Later he joined the mechanical department as engineer. In 1888 he bought a half interest in a photograph studio, soon becoming sole proprietor. He established an extensive business connection and is now engaged as wholesale dealer in and manufacturer of photographic supplies. Mr. Mitchell is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the I. O. O. F., the R. T. of T., and the C. O. F., and has been president of the Association of Photographers of Canada. In religion he is an adherent of the Methodist church, and in politics a Conservative. Mr. Mitchell was married in 1890 and lives in a handsome residence in North Winnipeg. He has always taken a keen interest in civic affairs, and was for four years a member of the City Council, and chairman of important committees.

Keeping Shoes Dry.

An old fashioned method of keeping the shoes impervious to water in rainy weather was to rub the welt stitches with a piece of beef tallow. But this is objectionable, as traces of the grease can be seen in the white particles of the fat left.

Castor oil applied with a small brush is very much better. Only a little should be used, and the brush should preferably have stiff bristles. The kind that comes with a bottle of glue will answer.

GOD GIVES JACOB A NEW NAME. GOLDEN TEXT 18. "REJOICE BECAUSE YOUR NAMES ARE WRITTEN IN HEAVEN."

Historical Setting.

Time. — Jacob went to Padan-aram about 1780 B. C., when he was about 57 years old. Perhaps the best authorities consider that he was in Laban's service for twenty years; but others, finding too little space in 20 years for all the recorded events, reckon it forty years, understanding the "20 years" twice mentioned in Gen. 31: 38, 41, to be two periods of twenty years each. See Excursus on the chronology, in Ellicott.

Place.—The Jabbok (the modern Wady Zerka) is one of the principal rivers of eastern Palestine. It flows into the Jordan from the east nearly opposite the city of Samaria. Peniel or Penuel "was probably a prominent ridge near the Jabbok." — George Adam Smith. A city was afterward built there, whose inhabitants Gideon destroyed for not assisting him against the Midianites. (Judg. 8: 17.)

Chronological Chimes.—In Greece, it was about the beginning of the Mycenaean Age, of which Homer wrote. In Egypt, the great Hyksos dynasty was coming to a close.

Genesis, chapters 29, 30, 31. Strengthened by the Bethel vision, Jacob set out again on his journey of 500 miles. "It is perhaps most probable that he proceeded northward over the Palestinian highland, to the sources of the Jordan, and thence along the Coelesyrian valley, still in a northerly direction to the site of Antioch, whence he deflected his course to the east, and passed, by way of Aleppo, to Haran. This is the easiest and best-watered route, as well as the most frequented in ancient times."

As Jacob drew near his uncle's abode, out in the fields he saw a well about which were several shepherds, waiting till all should be gathered. In that arid land, every guarantee of fair division must be thrown around the water supply. While Jacob was talking with the shepherds, Rachael, his cousin, Laban's daughter, came up with her flock, for young girls were then and still are used in that country as shepherdesses. If Jacob had not gallantly interfered, and with a mighty tug pulled up the great stone well-cover, she would have had to wait till the boorish men had watered their flocks.

Rachael was probably not more than ten or eleven years old at the time, for "only young girls of that age are allowed to tend the sheep or go alone" —Jacob had nothing wherewith to pay the customary dower, therefore it was very fitting that he should give service instead—seven long years as "hired man" without pay, which, as the tender Bible words say, "seemed but a few days, for the love he had to her."

But alas! at the end of the seven years the trickster was tricked, and Jacob met his match in his crafty uncle; for on the wedding night, favored by the Eastern custom of veiling the bride closely, Laban substituted for Rachael her elder sister, the weak-eyed ("tender-eyed") Leah. This was precisely such a trick as Jacob had himself played upon his own father.

Jacob therefore was compelled to serve seven years more for Rachael, though he married her a week after his marriage to Leah. To these wives, and to their handmaids, whom Jacob married according to custom of the times, were born eleven sons and one daughter, so that out of Jacob's this fortunes came after all the building up of his house.

Gen. 32: 1-23. Jacob had accomplished a large part of his journey and was in the northern part of the land of Gilead when the angry Laban overtook him. From there he proceeded southward and soon came to Mahanaim in Gilead, where he had his second comforting vision of angels—two hosts of them as his guards on either hand—and from the two hosts he named the place.

Jacob needed all the comfort he could get, for new peril confronted him. He had sent messengers ahead announcing his coming to his wronged brother Esau. They had returned, bringing the disquieting news that Esau was advancing with four hundred men. Jacob had doubtless hoped that the lapse of those twenty years had blunted the wrath of his impetuous brother; but now his uneasy conscience saw retribution approaching. Laban and the Mizpah stone were behind him, and he must go forward. He made swift and characteristically shrewd arrangements. He parted his people and animals into two bands, that one at least might be spared. He made up a great present for Esau, five generous droves, each of a different kind of animal, and sent them ahead at intervals, to be presented one by one and make a cumulative impression in his favor. He betook himself to praying, and offered up one of the noblest prayers recorded in the Bible (vs. 9-12.)

9. O God of my father Abraham, etc. Jacob was appealing to the God of the covenant which he had inherited, and in the precise terms of that covenant (Gen. 28: 13). He was "pleading the promises." This is the first prayer recorded in the Bible.

10. I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies. Hebrew, I am less than all the mercies. Gratitude and humility are characteristic of all true prayer. Luther, indeed, declared that this prayer had all the elements that prayer should have. For with my staff (that is, my staff alone, "without escort and without means") I passed over this Jordan. "We must conceive of the ford of Jabbok, as lying in the neighborhood of the Jordan." And now I am become two bands.

11. Deliver me. After adoration, humiliation, and thanksgiving, Jacob now comes to petition—the wise order of prayer. Lest he will come and smite, . . . the mother with the children. This phrase, "like root and branch, betokens utter extirpation of a family or a community."

12. And thou saidst, etc. Jacob closes his prayer as he began it, with a reminder of God's promises, since certainly the fulfilment of the promise of many descendants depended upon the safety of Jacob's family.

22. And he rose up that night. This praying, and the disposal of the caravan across the Jabbok, must have carried Jacob well into the night. And then, in his loneliness, in the darkness, the uncertainty, the great anxiety for himself, his loved ones, and the fruits of his long toil, Jacob's conscience, that had gone to 26 24. Having seen his household and cattle safely across the Jabbok, Jacob was left alone. He was at Penuel. Before him was the ford of the Jabbok, over which his goods and retinue had been transported during the anxious hours preceding. Its name means the turbulent — a word most appropriate to the event here recorded, and a word used again in the word translated "wrestled" in this verse. It tumbles violently down through rocky ravines to the Jordan. Jacob was indeed alone in that wild place—alone in the terrible isolation in which sin always places the sinner. But Jacob was soon made conscious that he was not wholly alone, for he was grappled in the dark by an unseen antagonist. There wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day. At first Jacob may have thought that Esau had sent some assassin to slay him, or even come himself. "Every plunge of the Jabbok, and every roar of the storm made Jacob feel the smell of Esau's coat and the blow of his hairy hand." But Jacob soon perceived that his antagonist was more than mortal.

25. "At first Jacob held his own. He saw that he prevailed not against him. The strength that, years before, had rolled the stone from the well for Rachel's sheep, was vigorous yet, and he was in no humor to submit. And thus do we all resist the love of God." But at last he touched the hollow of his thigh, the hollow socket of Jacob's hip-joint, "where passes the greatest of the sinews, descending through the leg to the ankle, and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint." Evidently, this was not a mere struggle of Jacob with an awakened conscience. "Men do not become lame in imaginary conflicts."

26. A sprain in the hip is exceedingly painful, "but with that contempt of pain which has often been shown in desperate warfare, Jacob wrestled on." Only, now he had abandoned the posture of defence and resistance, and had fastened himself on to the angel, as a terrified child clasps its arms tightly around its father's neck." At last the angel broke the straining silence: Let me go, for the day breaketh. Hebrew: "Send me away, for the gleam of morning has gone up." But Jacob still held the angel close, and replied, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me. Such was the impetuous fervor of Jacob's prayer in this crisis. Thus Jacob made the "transition from the boldness and persistence of self-confidence to the boldness of faith and humility."

Jacob's New Name.—Vs. 27-32. "As Abraham had to become God's heir in the simplicity of humble dependence on God; as Isaac had to lay himself on God's altar with absolute resignation, and so become the heir of God, so Jacob enters on the inheritance through the most thorough humbling. The new name he receives signalizes and interprets this crisis in his life."

27. And he said unto him, What is thy name? "The Hebrew frequently used 'name' as almost an equivalent of the 'personality' or 'character' or nature of the person or thing named." And he said, Jacob. That is, "supplanter"; literally, one who takes by the heel, as Jacob took Esau when they were born, to hold him back. How the name sums up Jacob's whole tricky life up to this point, and how ashamed he must have been to answer the angel?

28. And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel. "Who can give a man this his own name? God alone. For no one but God sees what the man is, or even, seeing what he is, could express in a name-word the sum and harmony of what he sees." Thus Simon became Peter, and Saul became Paul, and Christ said to his disciples, "I no longer call you servants, but I have called you friends." Already Jacob was beginning to receive the blessing for which he begged. For as a prince hast thou power with God and with men. "The name 'Israel,' meaning (on the analogy of other names similarly formed) 'God persists' (or perseveres), as interpreted as suggesting the meaning 'Persever with God'." "He could have been no common man who began his career as the 'Supplanter' and ended it as a 'Prince of God.' He could not have wanted commanding qualities, whose name, like those of his father and grandfather, was henceforth so sacred that no one of his nation in Old Testament times ever assumed it. So sacred, indeed, that even now, after well nigh four thousand years, the Jew, wherever found, knows no higher honor than to call himself a son of Israel'." And hast prevailed. This was the chief of Jacob's princely qualities, that he was a conqueror, prevailing over opposing circumstances, over hostile or selfish men, over the apparent unwillingness of God, and over the evil tendencies of his own heart. Such masteries will make any man a prince.

29. And Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name. "After this oracular saying, Jacob, on his part, also desires to know the name of the wondrous and, as he now the more certainly knows, divine being, with whom he had to do." And he said, Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after thy name? Manoah, Samson's father (Judg. 13, 17) received the same reply to the same question. God's name would be an expression of his character, which cannot be condensed into human words. The great Name revealed to Moses (Ex. 3, 13-14), the Jews considered too sacred to take upon their lips. And he blessed him there. The divine messenger made himself known in the blessing, as Christ made himself known to the men at Emmaus by His blessing of the bread.

30. And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel. In v. 31, "Penuel." "It has been suggested that the latter may have been the commonly recognized local name, and that the slight change to Peniel may have been made to suit the etymological derivation." Both words mean "the face of God." For I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved. The reference is to the common belief that no one could look upon the face of God and live. See Ex. 33, 20, etc.

Two graphic features are added to this picturesque account. We are told that as Jacob left the scene of the midnight struggle, and went toward the camp across the Jabbok, the sun rose upon him, a beautiful exterior token of the Sun of Righteousness that had risen in his soul. We are also told that he halted upon his thigh. "Possibly the lameness was not permanent, though such a reminder of his broken self-confidence would not have been superfluous in a character like Jacob's." To the present day, as a memorial of this event and in dissect out "the sinew that shrank" before they will eat the leg of any animal—one reason why they will not patronize Christian butchers.

Genesis 33. Jacob must have been wonderfully strengthened in spirit, though worn in body, by his midnight struggle, and his fears must have given place to a great peace. Nevertheless, he continued his wise preparations to meet Esau. He arranged his family, putting in the rear, as the safest place, those whom he most loved, Rachel and Joseph. Then he manfully went forward alone to meet his wronged brother. Seven times he bowed to the ground before Esau, as if acknowledging the superiority which he had stolen from him: but if Esau had come in anger, the sight of Jacob seemed to bring back the happier period of their innocent boyhood. Impetuously the injured brother ran to meet him, and in an eager embrace assured him of forgiveness. Esau even offered generously to return Jacob's present, but was prevailed upon to keep it. He urged Jacob to accept an armed escort, but this was firmly refused, perhaps with a lingering suspicion of his brother, but more likely because Jacob now felt God to be sufficient protection. Jacob speedily found a good place for winter quarters, and established himself in peace. God's Bethel promise was fulfilled, "I will bring thee again into this land."

CANADIANS! The majority of us were too skeptical and easy-going to inform ourselves concerning Cobalt in the beginning, and saw others step in and reap enormous profits.

Cobalt is only the beginning of mining in New Ontario, the richest mineral field in the world, and there are, and will be, other opportunities as great and greater.

The Larder Lake goldfields are the next in line. Inform yourself at once. Don't wait to see what the other fellow will do, but do it yourself, and do it now. That's the way the man on the ground floor gets there.

Investigate. Get posted. Put yourself in a position to intelligently take ground floor advantage of the tremendous opportunities for profit contained in the northern mining fields.

By means of personal investigation on the ground, the employment of reliable engineers, and the service of employees in the field, I keep my following posted, and they make money.

Thousands will testify to that.

A writer who has explored New Guinea describes the nutmeg region. Upon a fine piece of table land he came across three houses erected in the very heart of the forest. These were used by the natives for drying nutmegs. The country was everywhere magnificent and the aroma of the spice laden air delicious. Nutmeg and other equally valuable trees were everywhere growing in great profusion. The fruit of the nutmeg in appearance resembles a pear, and when ripe it opens and displays the nut covered with a beautiful red coating of mace. The nuts are then picked and taken to the houses, where they are husked and placed on shelves. They are then partially roasted over a slow fire until all of the moisture is extracted, after which they are cooled and sent to market.

How to Walk Upstairs.

A physician, describing how a person should walk upstairs, says: "Usually a person treads on the ball of his foot in taking each step. This is very tiresome and wearing to the muscles, as it throws the entire suspended weight of the body on the muscles of the legs and feet. You should in walking or climbing upstairs seek for the most equal distribution of the body's weight possible. In walking upstairs your feet should be placed squarely down on the step, heel and all, and then the work should be performed slowly and deliberately. In this way there is no strain upon any particular muscle, but each one is doing its duty in a natural manner." The doctor might have gone a little further in the same line and protested against the habit which many persons have of bending half double when they ascend a flight of stairs.

How to Keep Furs.

If garments are not cleaned before they are laid away and there are moth eggs in them, neither camphor nor any other preventive will keep them from developing and eventually destroying the fur.

If furs are well brushed and freed from dust, they need not be packed away in any of the much used moth preventives.

In putting furs away for the summer they should first be well aired, cleaned and sunned or moths' eggs that are not visible now may develop during the hot weather.

The whipping of the furs should continue until no dust arises. Then the pieces should be put out in the sunshine for a day or two and then beaten again.

If the lining is soiled or worn, remove it before putting the garment away.

EYE STRAIN IN CHILDREN.

Is often neglected until permanent injury is done to one or both eyes. The parents often object to put glasses on their children. thinking as long as they can see apparently well there is nothing wrong; yet there may be a great deal of trouble present and the child have normal vision, with one or both eyes. I frequently find in children that one eye is of very little use to them, they have been doing all their work with one eye, and in most cases the parents or child did not know this until after consulting us. Some of the symptoms of E. S. in children: May be dull in studies; health may be below normal, redness of lids or twitching of same; the eyes may be hot and painful at times, scowling, or blinking, headache, etc. If any of these symptoms present themselves in your children, you had better bring them for free consultation, and find out before it is too late if anything is wrong.

Fatal Accident Near Shannonville.

MARSHALL SCRIMSHAW, AN OLD MAN, STRUCK BY A TRAIN.

A fatal accident occurred on the line of the Grand Trunk Railway, near Shannonville, yesterday about noon.

It appears that Marshall Scrimshaw, an old man about 80 years of age, was walking along the track, about a mile and a half this side of Shannonville station, when evidently not hearing the express, which was also proceeding eastward, he was struck violently by the engine and hurled from the track.

The old man's back was broken and other injuries were sustained.

Death was almost instantaneous.

The train was brought to a standstill as soon as possible, and the remains were picked up and taken to the station at Shannonville.

Mr. Scrimshaw, who was for years a resident of the village, had been on a brief visit to his daughter who lives about two miles from Shannonville, and was going home when the accident occurred.

Although the engineer did all in his power to stop the train when he saw Scrimshaw upon the track, he was unable to do so. The whistle was blown, but the victim did not apparently hear it, as a freight train was approaching from the opposite direction.

Dr. Yeomans, coroner, of this city, was notified of the accident and visited the scene. After hearing the statements of some of the employees who were eye-witnesses of the unfortunate affair, he did not deem it necessary to hold an inquest.

Mr Scrimshaw had been for many years a resident of Shannonville, and was well known in that vicinity.

Exciting Runaway Has Serious Results.

An exciting runaway occurred on Mill street this morning, and as a result a young lady sustained painful injuries. Mr. Peter Mather, who resides near Poucher's Mills, in Thurlow township, in company with his sister Miss Aggie Mather, was driving down Mill street when the horses became frightened and ran away.

Near the upper bridge Miss Mather was thrown violently out of the vehicle to the ground.

It was seen that she was hurt, and as quickly as possible she was taken to a physician who ascertained that, besides having a dislocation of the shoulder blade, other injuries had been sustained.

The young lady was taken to the home of a friend in the city, where she will have to remain for some time.

Mr. Mather escaped injury.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

A GOOD SHOW.

A large audience gathered at the Carman last night to witness the rural drama, "When the Harvest Days Are Over," which gave excellent satisfaction. It has a strong and interesting plot and many funny situations. Felix Haney as Hez Huckins had the principal comedy role and was the source of plenty of amusement. Mr. Twomey was excellently cast as Robert Travis the hero of the play, and the other roles were in the hands of capable actors who got the most out of them. Mr. Haney's song "Travelling" won him two encores. On the whole the play is a very pleasant way of whiling away an evening.

MISS WILLIAMS' RECITAL.

A good audience last evening greeted Miss Minnie M. Williams, the elocutionist, who held forth in the City Hall. Her recital was the Shakespearian play "As you Like it," and those present were much impressed with her rendition of the piece. The lady possesses the power to maintain interest throughout the evening's entertainment. Whilst not overdoing anything she places due emphasis where such is required. Miss Williams' superb powers enable her to admirably interpret the spirit of the master poet.

Mr. George Snider, who recently resigned from the local police force, has been appointed Chief of Police for the Town of Deseronto and will also be a County Constable for a portion of the County adjoining the town. Mr. Snider will enter upon his duties the beginning of next month.

The Police Force

The Police Commissioners, consisting of Judge Deroche, Police Magistrate Masson and Mayor Sulman, held a meeting yesterday afternoon to consider the matter of making an addition to the force owing to Officer Snider having resigned. It was decided to advertise for applications for a party to fill the vacancy.

Board of Education

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER RESIGNS — BOARD WARMLY RESENTS IMPUTATION THAT HIGHER TAX RATE IS DUE TO ITS INCREASED DEMANDS.

A regular meeting of the Board of Education was held last evening and the chief business transacted was the acceptance of the resignation of Mr. L. R. Whiteley, one of the High School teachers.

The members in attendance during the session were: Messrs. G. A. Bennett, chairman; J. H. Anderson, P. Harrison, L. P. Hughes, Wm. Johnson, B. Mallory, W. S. Morden, H. Walker, J. Wallace, J. F. Wills, W. C. Reid, Rev. A. L. Geen and Dr. Sprague.

COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The Secretary-Treasurer presented a statement showing that at the end of March there was a balance in the bank to the credit of the Board of $2,776.59.

A communication was read from Mr. L. R. Whiteley, a High School teacher, tendering his resignation and asking to be relieved at the end of the present month. His reason for resigning was that he intended branching out in another profession.—Laid on table.

REPORTS.

The Finance Committee recommended the payment of the following accounts:

Wm. Diamond	$ 2.25
Wm. Knight	12.60
Cherry Press	4.00
B. Serviss	9.40
R. McCoy	3.00
J. Cook	19.85
F. Slater	17.65
G. Martin	50
J. Richards	4.75
R. Large	1.65
Gas department	14.00
City of Belleville	9.20
Intelligencer Co.	8.25

On motion the Board went into committee of the whole on reports, etc.

The Finance Committee's report was adopted without discussion.

MOTIONS.

Moved by the Rev. A. L. Geen, seconded by Mr. H. Walker, that the members of the Board have received with pleasure the letter from the Rev. Dr. Dyer, Principal of Albert College, informing the members that this year concluded the first half century of the useful life of Albert College. That we congratulate the institution on its successful career and promise to do what in us lies to make the proposed celebration of the jubilee of the college an epoch in its history.—Carried.

THE RATE OF TAXATION.

Mr. Wm. Johnson called attention to the fact that it had been reported upon the street that the Board was to a great extent responsible for the large increase in the tax rate this year. This was not the fact.

Mr. Bennett said he had heard such a report, and it was not true. The increase for High and Public School rate this year was only about three-tenths of a mill more than last year.

Mr. J. F. Wills stated that, in return for the slight increase, new seats, blackboards, etc., were being provided for the schools.

Mr. Morden also discussed the matter, pointing out that the increase was so slight that it would scarcely make any difference to the usual rate of taxation.

AN UNLAWFUL PRACTICE.

Mr. Johnson called attention to the fact that some parties had been using the Queen Victoria School grounds as a highway and driving across them. This should not be allowed.

Mr. Anderson, chairman of the Sites, Buildings and Repair Committee, said he would see that the practice was discontinued.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

Mr. Whiteley's resignation was taken up and considered.

Mr. Morden could not see how the Board could refuse to accept the resignation. Mr. Whiteley was leaving the teaching profession for another occupation. We should not stand in the way of his bettering himself. No doubt the Board could get a teacher to fill the vacancy temporarily. He moved that the resignation be accepted.

Mr. L. P. Hughes seconded.

Mr. Wills said it was unfortunate that under the law a teacher could leave after a month's notice. The statute should be amended as it was an unsatisfactory state of affairs. He considered, however, that Mr. Whiteley should remain until the June holidays. It was almost out of the question to get a teacher to take his place. It was a little unfair to the children and the community at large for Mr. Whiteley to leave just at present. The teachers should have more consideration for the pupils.

Mr. Anderson thought that Whiteley should furnish a substitute.

Mr. Mallory was of the that the Board might be cure a teacher than h Whiteley do so.

Mr. Walker spoke in fa Whiteley securing a teac his place. He should r month longer at least.

Rev. Mr. Geen said [illegible] teachers and not leave it to Mr. Whiteley.

Mr. Morden's motion prevailed.

Mr. Johnson moved, seconded by Mr. Wills, that the School Management Committee be empowered to engage a teacher for the balance of the year to fill Mr. Whiteley's place.

The Last Rites

The remains of the late Mrs. L. H. Henderson were yesterday afternoon consigned to the tomb. Many citizens were present at the obsequies. Services were held at St. Thomas' church, being conducted by the Rev. Rural Dean Beamish. Upon the casket were a number of Bartender Was Too Ready With a Club.

AND IT COST HIM $77 TO HAVE THE AFFAIR SETTLED.

During a disgraceful row which took place in Hamilton's hotel at Coe Hill on Good Friday, says the Bancroft Times, Fred Pinner, the bartender, used a club rather freely, and one of his victims, a young man named Conlon, had to have his scalp sewn up. Bart Woodby also got into a mixup with Pinner, and his head came in contact with a chair, necessitating a doctor's services. The result was that two charges of assault were laid against the bartender, and there was a big crowd in town on Thursday last to hear the affair threshed out. Mr. A. A. McDonald, of Madoc, was retained for the prosecution, but the parties got together before the case was called, and the plaintiffs withdrew the charges on Pinner agreeing to pay all costs. The latter amounted to about $77—rather an expensive afternoon's sport.

Made His Last Run.

EDWIN TAYLOR, POPULAR G.T.R. ENGINEER, DIED AFTER TWO MONTHS ILLNESS.

Mr. Edwin Taylor, a well-known G. T. R. engineer, and an ex-Alderman of the city, died yesterday evening after an illness of some two months. Deceased, who was 70 years of age, was born in Cheltenham, Gloucester, England, but had spent the greater portion of his life in this city.

For upwards of 35 years Mr. Taylor was one of the most reliable engineers in the employ of the G.T.R. company, and had at various times been at the throttle of an engine which was pulling coaches containing notable officials over the line. He was a most careful engineer, and his services were much appreciated by the company.

For some time Mr. Taylor was a representative in the City Council from Bleecker ward, and in that capacity was ever alert to the city's interests. In politics he was an ardent member of the Liberal party. Deceased was a member of the I.O.O.F., and also belonged for years to the B. of L. E. He was a man generous to a fault, ever ready to lend a helping hand to those in need.

In the year 1859 Mr. Taylor was married to Miss Emma Carter, of Southampton, England, who with four children survive. They are; George, of Weldon, N. C.; Mrs. G. V. Sargent of Calgary; Walter and Ada at home. To the bereaved ones will be extended the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends.

GREAT ICEBERGS SEEN.

One Three Hundred Feet High Sighted Off Newfoundland.

New York, April 13.—Four huge icebergs, one of which resembled a church in general appearance, with a lofty steeple-like pinnacle towering 300 feet above the surface of the sea, were sighted by the steamer Vaderland off the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. The Vaderland arrived here yesterday from Antwerp and Dover after a rough passage. High seas and stormy weather prevailed throughout the voyage until Thursday.

SUICIDE OVER FALLS.

Unknown Man Leaped Into Rapids Above the Cataract.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., April 13.—At 10 o'clock last night a man, who was dressed in underwear or very light clothing, was seen to jump from the bridge between the mainland and Green Island into the rapids. He was swept over the American Falls. The locality was searched, but nothing was found. Nightwatchman Hardwood and his son witnessed the suicide. He appeared to be a man six feet tall, with dark moustache.

Reward For Lost Child.

Dover, Del., April 13.—A reward of $1,000 for the recovery of four-year-old Horace N. Marvin, jr., was offered Thursday by Wm. Spencer of Philadelphia, who is unknown to the father of the child.

RELIEVE MINERAL LANDS.

Amendments to Manhood Suffrage Act—Mining Tax Measure.

Toronto, April 13.—The Legislature put in a diligent Friday. The work, while technical and comparatively uninteresting, occasioned considerable time and substantial progress was made towards clearing the order paper.

With the routine accomplished the House will next week take up the contentious matters still to be dealt with. It is anticipated that the session will close about Thursday, unless the debates prove to be longer than is at present anticipated.

The municipal amendment act was put through its committee stage and got its third reading. Hon. Mr. MacKay pointed out that while the vote for elections was deemed final, the courts had held that the vote on bylaws was not final. He suggested both lists be put under the same system.

Hon. Mr. Whitney pointed out that in the case of the lists for bylaws they were compiled by the township clerk without supervision.

Taxation of Mineral Rights.

It was also decided, in view of the protest of Hon. Mr. Matheson and Hon. Mr. Graham, against general taxation of mineral rights, that the clause providing for the taxation of mineral rights entered to meet the case of the Canada Company read for "petroleum rights."

Hon. Dr. Reaume's bill to amend and consolidate the law respecting the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway was also put through committee.

In committee Hon. Mr. Foy's bill to amend and consolidate the Manhood Suffrage Registration Act was productive of a short discussion on the clause providing that students, not registered and not entitled to register elsewhere, may register in the city in which they are attending college or university and be entitled to vote. Mr. Graham and Mr. MacKay contended that this might easily result in a number of students losing their votes. They might be registered at their homes, but might not, on election day, be home. The Prime Minister pointed out that the test of qualification, besides British citizenship and age, was domicile and a man could not be domiciled in two places. The clause was allowed to stand.

Mr. Cochrane's Bill.

Under the care of the Prime Minister Hon. Mr. Cochrane's mining taxation bill went through committee and got its third reading. It now only awaits the signature of the Lieutenant-Governor to become law.

The following bills were put through committee:

To amend the municipal act—Mr. Ferguson (Grenville).

To amend the Land Titles Act—Mr. Ferguson (Grenville).

To amend the Ditches and Watercourses Act—Mr. Ferguson (Grenville).

To amend the Municipal Waterworks Act—Mr. Torrance.

To amend the act respecting Joint Stock Companies for supplying cities, towns and villages with gas and water—Mr. Cameron.

To amend the act respecting investments by trustees—Mr. McNaught.

Respecting the mortgage and real estate—Mr. Eilber.

CENSURED THE GOVERNMENT.

Sharp Passage of Arms Over the Montelbetti Case.

Ottawa, April 13.—The House spent substantially all yesterday in debating an amendment to the motion to go into supply proposed by Lake (Con., Sask.), censuring the Government for its action in the matter of the notorious Montelbetti case, where a valuable townsite at Blairmore was turned over to a favorite of the Government.

One Lyon, who considered himself aggrieved, procured a fiat from the then Minister of Justice of Canada, Hon. David Mills, and proceeded to set aside the patent. In these proceedings the evidence was taken and a report made by Justice Wetmore, who decided that the application and affidavit of Montelbetti, upon which the Government had granted [illegible] tent, was fraudulent, and [illegible] crown desired to do so, it [illegible] cel the patent and the [illegible] revert to the crown. THAW JURY DISAGREE

Seven Were For Conviction and Five For Acquittal.

Had Stormy Time—Judge Fitzgerald Discharges Them — Thaw Taken Back to Prison—Counsel to Apply For Bail—Jerome Will Oppose—May Be Re-Tried at Once Without Change of Venue.

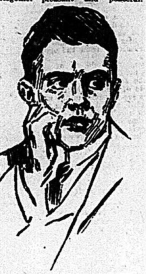
New York, April 13.—Hopelessly divided—seven for a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree and five for acquittal on the ground of insanity—the jury which, since Jan. 23 last, had been trying Harry K. Thaw, reported yesterday, after 47 hours and 8 minutes of deliberation, that it could not possibly agree upon a verdict.

The twelve men were promptly discharged by Justice Fitzgerald, who declared that he, too, believed their task hopeless.

Thaw was remanded to the Tombs, without bail, to await a second trial on the charge of having murdered Stanford White, the noted architect.

Stormy Arguments.

"The sessions of the jury were not altogether pleasant and peaceful.



HARRY K. THAW.

There were many stormy arguments and at one time charges of inconsistency and breaking faith with the orders of the court were made, but at no point of the deliberations did the foreman lose control of the situation. He successfully held the twelve men in check, and was the first to suggest when it was seen that there was no possibility of a verdict being reached that they report the matter to Justice Fitzgerald, and leave the further disposition of the case to his judgment."

Prospects for New Trial.

When a new trial would take place, no one connected with the case could express an opinion last night.

District Attorney Jerome declared that there were many other persons accused of homicide awaiting trial, and that Thaw would have to take his turn with the rest.

As to a possible change of venue, both the district attorney and counsel for Thaw declared they would make no such move.

Thaw's attorneys will confer to-day with the prisoner to decide upon their next step. They may make an early application for bail.

Mr. Jerome said he would strenuously oppose any application for bail. He added the belief that, as seven of the jurors voted for "guilty," his opposition probably would be successful.

In that event, Thaw has another long summer before him in the city prison, for his case on the already crowded criminal calendar cannot possibly be reached until some time next fall.

Blow At Expert Testimony.

Albany, April 13.—A bill, aimed against the abuse of expert testimony in murder trials, where insanity is pleaded as a defence, was introduced in the Assembly yesterday by Majority Leader Moreland.

The bill would prevent hypothetical questions being asked in any criminal case where insanity is a defence.

Mr. Moreland says the idea is to do away with the experts, who, he said, usually receive large fees for professional opinions favoring the side which retains them.

Shoots Brother-In-Law.

Windsor, April 13.—Jockey Pierce was the victim of a murderous assault committed yesterday by his brother-in-law, Arthur Wrightman. The latter fired at Pierce, the bullet taking effect in the right side, but Pierce succeeded in climbing over the back fence before he fell exhausted. He lies in a precarious condition.

Jews Ordered to Leave.

Gompel, Russia, April 13.—Reactionist rowdies, armed with revolvers and knives, paraded the principal streets here yesterday, entering all the Jewish stores and ordering the merchants under pain of death to leave the town within three days.

Crushed By Elevator.

London, April 13.—James Palmer, aged 74, was probably fatally injured at the McCormick works yesterday morning. He got in the shaft and did not notice that the elevator was descending and he was frightfully crushed.

Reduction of Freight Rates.

St. Paul, Minn., April 13.—The state Senate yesterday adopted the commodity railroad rate bill recently passed by the House, providing for ten per cent. reduction in railroad freight rates.

5,000 ARE DYING DAILY

Whole Families Found Starved to Death in Their Homes.

Parents Eating Their Children—Pulling the Growing Crops For Food—Ten Million People In Sore Need of Food—Roadside Strewed With Corpses—Terrible Sufferings of the Chinese—Pitiful Cry For Help.

Shanghai, April 13.—Telegrams received here from 20 points in the famine district report that the conditions are growing worse.

The Chinese Government and people up to date have contributed over $40,000,000 for famine relief, and the sums received from all foreign sources total a half million dollars.

There are 50 missionaries, with the higher class of Chinese, engaged in overseeing the relief distribution, Confucianists, Catholics and Protestants working together.

Twenty thousand famine sufferers are employed in building dams and canals to prevent a recurrence of the floods.

The relief committee here is promptly sending supplies to the front, but the funds are nearing exhaustion. All the relief measures up to date are inadequate. Ten million persons are suffering from inadequate supplies of food, and three millions are nearing starvation.

The members of the committee at the front report that they find the bodies of the sufferers bloated, and that their faces turn green or black as the result of starvation. The people are pulling up the growing crops for food. Whole families have been found dead in their houses, and corpses are seen lying by the roadside. Probably 5,000 persons are dying daily from starvation.

A few cases of rioting for food have occurred, and cannibalism is beginning to be reported. Newly-made graves have been rifled of the bodies, and parent are exchanging their children to be eaten.

A dollar, the relief committee reports, will save one life until the harvest, June 25, and $10,000,000 is needed.

TRIAL OF MRS. PERKINS.

Accused Does Not Submit Resignedly to Her Imprisonment.

Cayuga, April 13.—Startling developments are expected when Mrs. Perkins comes up for trial in a few days to answer the charge of having murdered her husband. Detective Greer has been in this vicinity all week, spending several days in this town, one at Dunnville, and a couple at Canfield. It is felt by the crown that the poison can be traced from its purchase to the time when it was taken by Henry Perkins, the dead man. Mr. John Perkins, a brother of the deceased, has been working in the interests of the crown, he having come from the Northwest for the purpose of finding out what caused his brother's death. Mrs. Perkins is by no means a resigned captive. She at times bursts into paroxysms of grief and rage. She also uses bitter language against her enemies, as she terms them.

ADRIFT ON ICE FLOE.

One Sportsman Drowns and Companion Exhausted When Rescued.

Sackville, N.B., April 13.—Two young men, Frank Fillmore and Murray Siddall, belonging to Westmorland Point, left Aulac Thursday on a gunning expedition. The boat upset and the men were thrown into the water, but they managed to get upon an ice cake, whence their cries for help were heard. Attempts to reach them, however, failed, and a while before dark they were drifting in the bay toward Minudie.

Very late Thursday night Siddal was rescued after several boats had nearly met destruction in floating ice. He was nearly dead. His companion, he said, became exhausted, fell off the ice cake and was drowned.

Fillmore was married, and leaves four children. His father yesterday celebrated his 77th birthday.

BONILLA SURRENDERS.

President of Honduras Gives Up Fight With Nicaraguans.

New Orleans, April 13.—According to a cablegram received by the officials of the Fruit Despatch Co. here President Manuel Bonilla of Honduras has surrendered to the Nicaraguan forces.

The cablegram came from Managua, Nicaragua, and was signed by President Jose S. Zelaya.

No details were given other than that Bonilla surrendered Thursday. Other advices received here Thursday, however, were to the effect that Bonilla had been "bottled up" in the port of Amapala ever since he made his sensational flight from Cholutoca.

Laborers Strike.

Quebec, April 13.—Laborers employed by Messrs. Davis on their big works at Cap Rouge are on strike, and as trouble was feared, four members of the provincial police force were despatched to the scene yesterday to maintain order. No serious trouble is reported so far, however.

The men want an increase of 25 cents per day.

N. S. Cabinet Salaries.

Halifax, N. S., April 13.—The salaries of the Nova Scotia Government members henceforth will be $5,000 annually, besire $500 as sessional indemnity as members of the Legislature. The Premier's increase is $1,000. A bill backing this has been introduced.

Newfoundland Storm Swept.

Halifax, N.S., April 13.—Word from Newfoundland is to the effect that the worst storm in 50 years has raged around the island during the past week.

There is deep snow and it is feared loss of life has occurred.

DEFENCE HAS SURPRISE.

Trial of Mattie Perkins For Murder Begins This Week.

Cayuga, April 15.—Great interest is manifested here in the trial of Mrs. Mattie Perkins for the murder of her husband about Christmas time by means of strychnine poison.

It is said that some surprises will develop as the case expands.

The crown's present plans are to give the case to the grand jury on Tuesday. It is expected an indictment for murder will be returned that afternoon or on Wednesday. The trial starts immediately.

Line of Defence.

Medical evidence will be a feature of the proceedings, and it is learned that the defence will not put in much testimony to combat the crown's contention that poison produced death, but will almost admit this, centreing the legal battle on quite another feature of the case, which, it is inexpedient to the interests of both to make public now.

For one thing the crown will contend that the accused purchased poison in Detroit, and it is believed the defence will try to show Mrs. Perkins never visited that city.

An Array of Experts.

An array of medical experts, Dr. Bruce Smith, Prof. Ellis, and Arthur Jukes Johnson, has been retained for the crown. The defence also will have experts.

Crown Attorney Murphy will be assisted by Frank Arnoldi, K. C.

E. F. B. Johnston and his partner, Robert Grant, will defend the accused. The Assizes open here Tuesday.

Justice Mabee will preside at the Assizes.

A Short Case.

Frank Arnoldi, K. C., said Saturday night the case might not last more than two or three days. He described it as a difficult one to handle, for both sides. Mr. Arnoldi goes to Welland to-day to look over the evidence.

WAS IT MURDER?

Blood-Stained Hatchet Found In the House of Koeller.

Stratford, April 15.—The case in which Leopold Koeller is charged with murder has taken a serious aspect. It is announced that a hatchet with blood-stains and flesh clinging to the blade has been found in an adjoining room to the apartment where the Dewing woman met her death.

The hatchet was found buried under a pile of clothing and along with other suspicious circumstances points strongly towards foul play having been committed.

The post-mortem examination was completed on Saturday afternoon, but the doctors, coroner and crown attorney refuse to divulge the result of the examination. It is alleged that an article which might have been used for an improper purpose was found on the floor of the deceased's room, but as it is in the possession of the foreman of the jury, nothing will likely be divulged in this connection until the evidence is taken at the adjourned inquest.

Koeller, who is under arrest, claims, that he has nothing to fear, but the discrepancies in his story points to something more sensational than has as yet developed. The hypothesis is that the Dewing woman was dead before her body was burnt. But as the evidence thus far is merely circumstantial, the case is still shrouded in mystery.

SULTAN BECOMING WORSE.

War With Bulgaria May Break Out At Any Moment.

Paris, April 15.—The Memorial Diplomatique says it has learned that the illness of the Sultan of Turkey is rapidly becoming worse and that he is most anxious concerning the revolutionary movement in Asia Minor.

His advisers see only one hope, and that is to provide an exterior diversion in the form of a war with Bulgaria.

Trouble with this country would be already broken out, but for the Sultan's fear that the Bulgarians who are rapid mobilizers would win the first success and that this would be followed by an insurrection throughout the whole of Asia Minor.

In the meanwhile the paper asserts the Turkish reserves are being called out and troops are being hastened to the frontier.

Shot by Strikebreaker.

Boston, April 15.—Several disorders, the result of clashes between sympathizers with the teamsters' strike and strikebreakers were reported to the police yesterday.

John J. Gaffney of New York was arrested at the strikebreakers' headquarters, charged with shooting Spiros Prisnos, who was standing in a doorway across the street from the headquarters watching a crowd, some of whom were hurling sticks and other missiles at the windows. Three or four shots were fired from the building, it is said, and one hit Prisnos in the mouth.

Couple End Their Lives.

New York, April 16.—The dead bodies of John Perrault and his wife were found on Saturday in their bed in a room of an apartment at Madison avenue and 116th street. From an open jet gas was pouring into the room. Beside the bed, on a table, was a chloroform bottle, but the contents had evaporated.

There were rumors of murder, following drugging and robbery, but the police expressed the belief that the case was one of suicide.

Vote For Strike.

Fernie, B.C., April 15.—The result of the miners' referendum is as follows: Fernie, 741 for strike, 40 against; Michel, 300 for strike, 40 against; Coleman, 280 for strike, 4 against.

Should Be In Asylum.

Harry Thaw's Brother Thinks That is his Rightful Destination.

Jerome Intends to Bring Him to Trial Again for Murder in First Degree--Will Oppose His Release on Bail--Still Retained as Defending Counsel--Thaw's Mail Falling Off.

New York, April 15.—Setting at rest all rumors as to their present intentions, J. Russell Peabody, associated with Delphin M. Delmas, chief counsel for Harry K. Thaw, said late Saturday, after a 45-minute conference with the prisoner, that an application for Thaw's release on bail would be made.

As to what steps would be taken he declined to say. There were various rumors during the day that habeas corpus proceedings might be brought, and it was said that the Thaw family stands ready to furnish bail in almost any amount to secure the young man's release.

Will Oppose Bail.

District Attorney Jerome announced that he would vigorously oppose granting of bail to the prisoner, and added that he intended to prosecute him for murder in the first degree. This latter assertion was in reply to a suggestion that he had compromised with the defendant's counsel on a plea of insanity, and would agree to send Thaw to Matteawan.

The next interesting development was when Mr. Peabody left Thaw after a late visit, and said in reply to questions as to stories that Thaw had changed his counsel:

"Mr. Thaw authorizes me to say, that up to the present time he has made no change of counsel. You may say that as emphatically as you please. Of course, we don't know what will transpire next week."

"How does Mr. Thaw take the situation?" the lawyer was asked.

Very Much Distressed.

"He is very much distressed and feels very badly about it," Mr. Peabody replied.

Asked about the program for next week, he said:

"We have no fixed program. On Monday we shall get together and decide what is best to be done."

Mr. Delmas had a long conference with Thaw yesterday, and Mrs. Harry K. Thaw saw her husband during the visiting hours.

A somewhat sensational development was the publication of a letter said to have been written by Howard Nesbit, Evelyn Thaw's brother, explaining his position in the case, and asking for money from Thaw.

Altogether, Thaw spent a quiet Saturday in the Tombs, the influx of mail at all deliveries, which has kept him busy since he first went to a cell, was somewhat less. Instead of the 100 letters which he received every morning up to the day of the verdict, but twenty-nine came in the forenoon, and the other deliveries also fell off.

Mrs. Harry K. Thaw was somewhat wan and worn when she appeared at the Tombs, but seemed in good spirits. Other members of the Thaw family remained at their hotel.

Unjust to Convict.

Rome, April 15.—A. Blair Thaw, a half brother of Harry K. Thaw, who has been spending the winter in Rome with his wife and daughter, was questioned yesterday about the result of the Thaw trial in New York. He said:—

"My desire would be to say nothing. The only opinion which I have on the matter, and one which I have always had, is that Harry Thaw should have been put in an asylum long ago, for his own sake and for others' sake. I have nothing to say about the trial, only that it would have been unjust to convict him, because it is a pathological, and not a criminal, case."

MUTINY IN RUSS PRISON.

Seven Inmates Killed and Many Injured by Troops.

Riga, Russia, April 15.—There was a serious mutiny in the local prison on Saturday. Thirty-three inmates attacked and overcame the superintendent and wardens of the establishment.

Troops were then summoned, and the conditions were such that they had to fire.

Seven of the mutineers were killed and 12 injured. Nine soldiers sustained wounds during the affray, which lasted an hour. The superintendent of the prison was badly beaten.

Boiler Bursts—Kills Two.

Key West, Fla., April 15.—An explosion, which occurred on a dredger at Key West early yesterday, caused the death of two Spaniards, and injured eight other men. Four being badly scalded. A tube in the boiler burst, and escaping steam blew open the furnace doors and threw live coals and steam on the men. Those injured were asleep at the time.

Japan Quits Manchuria.

Tokio, April 15.—China has transmitted a note to Japan, expressing nearly appreciation of the complete withdrawal of Japanese troops from Manchuria.

It is expected that Japan will reduce the railroad guards in Manchuria to less than half the stipulated number.

Got Goods, Left Wife.

Galt, April 15.—James Gladiator, a halfbreed from Brantford, followed his runaway wife here, but has tried in vain to induce her to return. The woman is young and pretty. The man seized the personal effects of his wife and went home.

Look Out For Them.

Berlin, April 15.—Two men robbed a city boarding house Saturday and got away with money and jewelry to the value of $500.

The thieves were a well-dressed pair.

POLICE RAID OFFICE.

Seven Men Arrested on a Charge of Keeping Gambling House.

Winnipeg, April 15.—The rooms of the Canadian Stock & Grain Co. were raided again yesterday afternoon, and seven men were taken into custody on a charge of keeping and frequenting a gaming-house.

The men arrested are George W. Wood, Dale A. Smith, Fred McGill, H. Schrivan, George Westaway, H. A. Westaway, H. A. Nichols, and Thos. North.

This is the second visit of the police to these rooms, and upon the occasion of the prior call the books of the firm were seized and have since been in the possession of the law department of the province, and were used in a prosecution which had been pending against illegal transactions in stocks

This time everything in the offices was taken as instruments used in gaming, and, under the law, these goods are forfeited to the crown if the charge be sustained.

Through his counsel, Mr. Bonnar, the defendant, Mr. Wood, has claimed that the moving spirit in the prosecution is malice and desire for revenge.

A DESERVED SENTENCE.

Judge Gives Ten and Seven Years to Woodstock Men.

Woodstock, Ont., April 15.—Charles O'Brien and James Curry were on Saturday sentenced by Judge Britton to ten and seven years respectively in Kingston Penitentiary on a serious charge. The crime was one of the most revolting ever brought to the attention of the presiding judge. The prisoners last November broke into the home of Mrs. J. D. Casler, a highly-respected woman living alone in the outskirts of the city, burglarized the house, and committed the offence with which they were charged. Curry made a confession, and later turned King's evidence in the case against O'Brien.

Shot by Burglar.

New York, April 15.—George Schambacher, a wealthy real estate dealer, 56 years of age, was shot and fatally wounded in the dining room of his home in East 44th street early yesterday. His family believe that a burglar surprised by Schambacher shot him.

In reply to questions the dying man said only: "I've been shot," and pointed to an open window.

Experts Debarred.

St. Petersburg, April 15.—Premier Stolypin's threat to use the palace guards to prevent outside experts from assisting the committees of the Lower House of Parliament was put into effect on Saturday, the guards being ordered to exclude everyone except deputies.

The House was forced to submit to this display of force.

Kills Himself At 83.

Toronto, April 15.—John Bailey, an army veteran, 83 years of age, committed suicide on Sunday afternoon.

Shortly after 3 o'clock he went out into a shed in rear of the house and shot himself, placing the revolver in his mouth.

He had been sick all last week and was very despondent.

Shot Himself In Theatre.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 15.—Robert M. Crow, a nephew of H. C. McEldowny, president of the Union Trust company of this city, who shot himself in the abdomen while in a box watching a performance at a local theatre last Wednesday, died in a hospital yesterday. Crow was 23 years of age.

Kingston News: Amazement is caused by the announcement that Belleville's tax rate this year is to be twenty-six and four-fifths mills on the dollar. But the burden can only be realized when the assessed value of property is known in that city. Twenty-six in Belleville may not be more than 20 in Kingston. It all depends on the assessed value of property in the two cities.

Very true, but that does not rub out the fact that the tax rate has never been so high before, even when the assessment was lower. However, if what one reads is true it would be better if Kingston's tax rate were a little higher. On the front page of the News appears an article in which a traveller is quoted as saying that "Kingston's streets are the worst he ever saw in a city of her size." Another mill or two on the rate and better roadbeds might not be a bad idea.

It is three and one-quarter carats in weight, and Mrs. Montgomery has refused many offers for it, ranging from $15,000 to $50,000. In its own class, for rarity and beauty, it ranks with the famous canary diamond of Tiffany's, which is valued at $250,000.

Bogus Cheque Man Caught At Cobourg

Port Hope, April 13.—A young man named Reginald Travers, alias Green, was arrested last night in Cobourg and brought to Port Hope by Chief Bond on a charge of forgery, with attempt to utter. He attempted yesterday to cash at the Bank of Toronto here a check for $175 bearing the forged signature of Mr. S. O. Taylor, a prominent farmer and Chairman of the East Durham License Commission. The forgery was recognized and information given to the police. Travers walked to Cobourg, where he was arrested after, it is said, having cashed there another forged check for $15. On him were found checks of the Bank of Toronto, Metropolitan Bank, Dominion Bank, Standard Bank, and Bank of Ottawa, already filled out, with various signatures, and made payable to William Green. Travers says that he has an account at the Bank of Ottawa at Cobalt. He has been in Toronto, Cobalt and other places recently. Some three years ago he worked for Mr. Taylor, and he has also been employed by Mr. George Chisholm, of Cobourg, whose name had been signed to two checks in his possession. Most of the checks were made out for $175 each. He appeared this afternoon and was remanded.

Reasonable View of Thaw Murder Trial

(The Globe.)

The manner in which the trial of Henry K. Thaw for the shooting of Stanford White has been conducted has been quite as injurious to public morals as the homicide itself has been. The unreasonable, because unnecessary, protraction of the case has been discreditable to the system of law enforcement in the State of New York. The expected happened when the jury disagreed. Evidently those who favored acquittal did so in the belief that Thaw, who is at the best weak-minded almost to imbecility, was carried away by an impulse that overmastered both his reason and his will. This may have been too lenient a view of his act, but such findings are by no means uncommon, especially when the homicide is a man of weak character laboring under a sense or a dread of wrong.

It will be a matter for regret if there is a second Thaw trial, with a repetition of its scandalous outpouring of moral abominations. Nothing that can ever be brought out in court can improve White's reputation, and nothing can make Thaw or his wife's worse than they are. If the true theory of legal penalties is that they are deterrent, and not retributive, then Thaw's punishment has been for all practical purposes sufficiently heavy. To say nothing of protracted personal anxiety and the awful dread of confinement in a lunatic asylum, the expense of his defence has already run up to nearly a quarter of a million dollars.

Whatever may be said of Thaw and his wife, they appear to be suited to and affectionate toward each other. Whatever chance either of them may have of any tolerable kind of life—Thaw will never suffer the death penalty—seems to depend on the removal of the uncertainty at present hanging over them, and it would surely not be improper to take into account Thaw's mother, who has the usual intense maternal love for her weak and abnormal son. In England or Canada the Crown would probably in such a case let Thaw out on sufficient bail and enter a nolle prosequi; no harm would be done to any interest if some analagous procedure were to be taken in New York.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

DANDRUFF CAUSED BY A GERM.

A New Discovery That Kills the Germ and Prevents Baldness.

Pretty nearly all the hair preparations for dandruff have some merit in allaying itching of the scalp, and in some a fairly good dressing for the hair, but there is only one that recognizes what causes dandruff, falling hair, and baldness, and that destroys the cause, a little germ — and that is Newbro's Herpicide. This germ eats its way into the scalp, it digs up the scalp into little white scales. Unless it is destroyed there's no permanent stopping of falling hair and cure of dandruff and baldness. Newbro's Herpicide kills the germ. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. Buying Votes.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post has been making a study of the political conditions in the State, and in a recent letter refers to Ogdensburg. In this city numbering about 15,000 inhabitants, it is affirmed that there are from 900 to 1100 purchaseable voters. They are not foreigners, but natives of the State. Many of them are well-to-do. The correspondent says: "One man who will never vote without pay has about $30,000. Men getting $3.50 a day will hold out until the money comes. Numerous citizens tell you casually that they have 'seen the purchase of votes.' Last time the price was $25 each. That time, upon the word of a working politician, $32,000 of the insurance 'yellow dog fund' came into St. Lawrence county. This year in the gubernatorial election the price was being hold at $35, on the ground that Hearst is rich, and on the other side the Gas Trust alone would go broke to defeat him. 'Out in the county conditions are similar,' declared a man speaking from experience. One year in a town with forty voters, sixteen were for sale. We only had $25 to put into it that year. It was not enough to hire carriages and buy drinks. The other side paid $25 each to the sixteen, and carried the town handily."

This fully equals anything we have had in Kingston, or any other Canadian constituency, says the Kingston News. A contemporary points out that the openness of the venality is perhaps the least pleasant thing in the unpleasant situation. Men have ceased to regard it as a reproach to be paid for exercising their right to select legislators and administrators. They seemingly expect their representatives to make a profit out of their positions, and think they should divide with the men who make them representatives. The size of the bribes that have to be given is also a matter of note. The taste of corruption money must have grown by what it has been fed on. Twenty-five dollars would not be paid at first to individual voters even in a close contest. The probability is that the price rose gradually to what may reasonably be called a startling figure. At any rate that seems to have been the case in Canada, where also the most venal constituencies are inhabited chiefly by people born on the soil. The election court records show that not many years ago $2 was the ordinary price paid to a corrupt voter. In London last year $10 was the ruling rate. There is reason to think that in some particular counties, even in this province, which appears to be as clean as any, the Ogdensburg figure of $25 has been equalled or exceeded when it was thought necessary to make sure of the return of a man presumed to be of value to his party. There is room on this continent for a great advance in the political morality of the common people as well as of the politicians.

VINOL'S RELIABILITY

PROMINENT PHYSICIANS JOIN WITH MR. J. S. McKEOWN IN RECOMMENDING VINOL.

Countless physicians and druggists are now prescribing and endorsing Vinol as the most valuable cod liver oil preparation known to medicine, and it is fast superseding all other forms of cod liver oil and emulsions.

A prominent physician writes: "I am satisfied that Vinol derives its wonderful life-giving and strength-creating power from the medicinal curative elements found in the cod's liver. It is the best strength creator and vitalizer for old people, weak women, children and the convalescent that I ever saw."

Another physician writes: "I could cite many cases where health has been restored in a surprisingly short time by Vinol. I should be very sorry to have to do without Vinol in my practice. It has no equal for hard colds, throat and bronchial troubles."

Now, when we tell you that we have never sold in our store a remedy of more remarkable curative and strength-creating power than Vinol for the weak, the sick and the aged, and that, if it fails to accomplish what we say it will, we will refund your money without question, it shows you our faith in the preparation.

Newspapers Say Will Not Retract.

STATEMENTS MADE REGARDING HON. MR. EMMERSON—SUITS TO GO AHEAD.

A Moncton, N. B., despatch, says: Representatives of the three newspapers which, it is said, will be proceeded against by the ex-minister of railways, Hon. H. R. Emmerson for libel, met in Moncton, and had a conference, at which the matter was talked over. Those present were James H. Crockett, editor of the Fredericton Gleaner; William Dennis, managing director of the Halifax Herald, and T. W. King, of the Toronto World. There will be no retraction statement made in the Gleaner, the newspaper representatives were told. If the case is proceeded with, Mr. Dennis said, it will be the most interesting in the history of Canada, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be the first witness. There will be some five hundred witnesses, Mr. Dennis said, including several from Moncton, Dorchester Ottawa, Montreal, and New York. At the conference, which was held here, it is stated that there was no talk of retraction. Mr. Crockett left for home this morning. Mr. King went last night and Mr. Dennis to-day. The Gleaner has not yet been served with papers in connection with the suit, but writs have been issued against the Herald and World, the latter being the only one yet served. Current rumor here is that the editor of the Gleaner will be proceeded against criminally while civil action will be taken against the other two papers.

Paper On "Child Labor."

The Ottawa Journal has this to say of an effort of a former resident of this city, son of Major W. W. Pope:

"Child Labor" was the topic of a paper read by Mr. W. White Macauley Pope, of Montreal, last evening at St. David's Church, New Edinburgh. Mr. Pope showed conclusively the evil effects of allowing children to enter employment at too early an age. He referred particularly to the way in which little girls are allowed to sell and peddle papers in Montreal.

After showing some of the worst sides of the evil, he told of the work being done by an organization to which he belongs in Montreal, known as the "Sunshine Club." It has for its object the amelioration of the child labor question. This club takes in little children and trains them up to a certain age, giving them a good education.

Rev. E. C. Russell acted as chairman. There was a small but appreciative audience and at the close a vote of thanks was moved by Hon. O. H. Lambart, and seconded by Lt.-Col. Donaldson to Mr. Pope for his very able paper.

The gates of heaven come a little nearer every time a man stoops to sympathize with a child.

Archdeacon Carey And His $3,000 Bill

Kingston News: Regarding the report that St. Paul's Church is in arrears to its rector to the amount of $3,000 an official of the church said to the News to-day that there is no indebtedness of the kind. The church treasurer holds a receipt from its rector dated April 5th, 1907, and containing the words "full of salary and indebtedness." This was duly endorsed and cashed.

Archdeacon Carey is not in the city, but one in touch with St. Paul's, said, in speaking of the above, that he believed that the amount in the bill for salary arrears had some basis. His recollection of the financial relation of St. Paul's to the rector was this: The rector was to receive $800 a year from the church. But at the end of each year it was customary to pay all indebtedness on current account, and let the rector take the balance. Sometimes it fell very considerably short of the amount due him, probably $300. Yet he took it and so long as he was in full control does not seem to have urged that the deficit in his salary be made up. Now, however, that there is a disposition to sidetrack him, he has probably gone back over the record, and finds that the salary arrears aggregate over $3,000 and stipulates that they be paid.

To the statement of the News that the treasurer held a receipt signed the other day by the rector for "in full of all indebtedness," he replied: "This would not hold in a court of equity. The receipt was intended, probably, to cover only the amount of the last payment and as such was signed by the rector I do not say that this is so," he added, "but it would, I think, be liable to this construction in a court."

SPORTING NOTES.

The annual meeting of the Midland Association Football League to draw up the schedule for the season's games will be held at the Y.M.C.A. Peterboro on Saturday, April 20th at one o'clock. It is not exactly known yet just how many clubs will enter but it is expected that nine teams at least will be in the three series. The meeting will be called sharp at the above named hour so it will be necessary for representatives from the various clubs and the officers to be there on time. Communications addressed to J. E. Sullivan, secretary of the league, will be fully considered.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Baptist.

Pastor Emerson preached at both services. Text, evening, Matt. 21; 10; "Who is this?"

The entry of Christ into Jerusalem was significant as this was the first time He had been publicly proclaimed as the Messiah. The question asked by the Jews is an all important one to the people of to-day; Who is Jesus? This question can be answered only when we have come into living vital relations with Him for then He becomes all in all to us.

At the close of the evening service the ordinance of Baptism was administered when four believers confessed Christ in His own appointed way. Miss Moon sang a solo entitled "Free From Sin."

Holloway Street.

"Building on Three Rocks," was the subject discussed by the pastor, Rev. C. H. Leitch, last evening. His text was from Ephesians, 2nd chapter, 20th verse:

"Ye are built upon the Apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone."

The choir sang appropriately, and Miss Price sang very sweetly "O, Dry Thy Tears."

CHURCH NOTES.

At St. Michael's yesterday morning Mrs. Grant sang Handel's "O Lord correct me," which was much appreciated by the congregation.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Information About the Countries That Have Adopted the Plan.

A good many politicians, says Tit-Bits, have explained why certain people should receive a pension after they reach old age, but no one has yet been able to solve the problem as to where the money is to come from to pay the pensions.

According to Mr. Asquith, the cost of a 5s. pension to all over 65 in this country would amount to £26,000,000 per annum. It would be impossible for the state to pay this huge amount of money from the national exchequer unless new taxes or compulsory provident insurance schemes were devised.

Many social reformers regard the latter as the only solution to the difficulty, and quote the cases of France, Germany, Austria, and Hungary, where compulsory insurance has been adopted to a certain extent, thereby bringing about a decrease of pauperism.

Germany and France.

In Germany, for instance, an act was carried in 1889, compelling insurance against old age. The obligation to insure rests on all who are in receipt of wages of not more than £2 per week. Half the premium, however, which varies according to the wages received, is paid by the masters. The pension begins at the age of 70, the amount varying by very complicated rules, but the state pays a fixed sum of £2 10s annually, in addition to the pension.

A special department of the Ministry of the Interior, designated Assistance Publique, has been established in France for the relief of the needy, and gives away over 12,000,000 francs and not more than 200 francs to poor people aged 70 and upwards. This contribution, however, must not exceed 50 francs per head, nor be given in more cases than 2 per 1,000 of the population.

Other Countries.

Belgium adopted an old age pension scheme in 1900, and in the same year Victoria passed an act granting 10s. per week to any old person who fulfilled certain conditions.

An Ungallant Actor.

A well known American actor, who is old enough not to consider himself a matinee idol by any means, was somewhat surprised and pleased in a St. Louis hotel a short time ago when a pretty girl stopped him in the corridor and presented him with a rose, without saying a word. He was more surprised and less pleased to receive a note the following day reminding him of the incident and asking him to send the giver of the flower two seats at the theater in which he was playing "as a memento of the occasion."

"My dear young lady," the actor replied, waxing sarcastic as he realized what had been the object of the attention he had been paid, "I would be glad to send you the seats you ask for, but, on consultation with the manager of the theater, I have been informed that the seats are all fastened down and that he is opposed to having them sent away as souvenirs in any event, so that you will have to be contented with an autograph for a souvenir of your benevolence of yesterday instead."—Harper's Weekly.

Beats Radium For Cost.

If you object to paper money, but wish to carry big values in small compass, you might do worse than lay in a stock of best lenses for microscopes. Weight for weight, gold is not nearly so valuable as glass in the form of powerful lenses, and an ordinary purse filled with such lenses might easily represent a fortune. The record increase in the value of the manufactured article over the raw material is probably made by this variety of glass, which multiplies itself 50,000,000 times. The front lens of a micro objective instrument costing about £1 weighs no more than about .0017 of a gram; hence the value of such lenses to the weight of about two and a quarter pounds would be about £600,000. The cost of making this weight of glass is 1½ pence to 3 pence, and thus when worked up into the shape of a lens the glass has increased in value about 50,000,000 times.—London Express.

A Battle of Butterflies.

"A battle of butterflies," said the Japanese viscount firmly.

"Impossible!" cried the lady on his right.

"Oh," the viscount insisted, "the thing is authenticated. It happened on Aug. 20, 1889. Tales and poems without number have been written on it. On the evening of Aug. 20 two opposing armies of the butterflies fought an aerial battle between Nojima and Kavasaki Mura. The fight continued till sunset, when the smaller army turned and retreated, the victors pursuing it till all were lost in the rosy sunset haze. The ground beneath the combat was thickly strewn with wounded and dead warriors. The battle drew a thousand people. It occurred about thirty feet up in the air. The spectators were amazed and horror stricken to see these gentle blue butterflies grappling and struggling furiously and silently in a blue blizzard above their heads."

The Bookplate.

An ex libris, or bookplate, is a small piece of paper whereon is printed the owner's name and pasted on the inside cover of a book—in other words, it is a printed slip to denote the ownership of books. A proper ex libris should have, first of all, the name, boldly and plainly printed, and a space left for the number of volumes contained in the library; then, to make it more interesting and personal, some decorative device of the owner's peculiar and individual choice as well as some favorite motto, if desired. In Europe those who have the right use family crests or armorial bearings for their ex libris. Every well regulated library should have some mark of ownership, and the ex libris takes the place of the owner's signature.

Moths and Butterflies.

Some moths look very much like butterflies, but there are two ways in which you can always tell the one from the other. Each has little slender feelers growing from the head, but the butterfly's feelers, or antennae, as they are called, have knobs on the ends. The antennae of the moth sometimes have tiny feathers on them and sometimes little spires, but thy are never knobbed. Then, too, in alighting the butterfly always holds her wings erect, while the moth's droop or are nearly flat.

No Longer Worried.

"I thought," said the visitor, "I'd drop in and tell you what your hair restorer did for a friend of mine. When he started to using your elixir there were only a few hairs on his head, but now it's completely covered."

"Indeed?" explained the patent medicine man.

"Yes; by six feet of earth."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Zutoo, the Japanese headache cure, is a friend in need.

Don't without a trial, condemn it as something that will hurt you.

Taken when you suspect a headache, it will ward it off. Taken later it will cure the headache in twenty minutes. In every case it will leave you feeling good. It is harmless as the soda which is one of its ingredients.

If it does not do all that is claimed for it, then discard it. But don't confound it with the drug cures and condemn it without a trial. That isn't fair to A Telephone.

"Oh, a rose and a pink have bloomed to-day!"
Said little lame Ruth to her mother.
"I watched them open leaf by leaf.
And they nodded to each other
As if there was something they wished to say.
A secret, you know, and there was no way.

"And then a spider, with wondrous skill—
You'll hardly believe it, mother—
Stretched a web from the pink to the rose
So they could talk to each other,
And ever since then their heads are still
For they say through their telephone what they will."

"You know, my husband's birthday is next week," she said, "and I"—

TIMELY TOPICS.

HEY, LITTLE LAD!

Hey, little lad, with your bonnie blue eyes,
Come with your laughter — we'll dream of the skies
That are waiting for us in the Land of No Care,
So come to this heart with that curling gold hair,
Come, and we'll float on the beautiful sea
In the Dream Ship that's waiting for you and for me!

Hey, little lad, with the wee wearied feet—
Up in these arms! My, those kisses are sweet!
Come and I'll tell you a story of two
That will make heavy eyelids fall over the blue.
One little arm round my neck and we'll float
On the River of Sleep in the little Dream Boat!

Hey, little lad, but how heavy you've grown!—
You've slipped to your dreaming and left me alone!
But I know that the skies in your dreams are as fair
As the blue of your eyes and the gold of your hair.
And O, little lad, in your garments of white,
Your dreaming, I wish I might know it— good night!

MILLIONS UNDER OCEAN.

Expedition Searches For Treasure On African Coast.

There is a fascinating air of romance and adventure about the expedition which recently left the East India docks in the steamer Alfred Nobel, to search for sunken treasure worth £6,000,000 off the coast of Africa.

According to Capt. C. A. P. Gardiner, of Bloomsbury, who heads the expedition, the African coast is lined with bullion sunk in every kind of vessel from old Dutch galleons to modern liners. Here is an alluring list of a few of the treasures which, it is hoped, will be brought to the surface:

Rich Treasures.

Immensely rich treasure captured from pirates and sunk in the Wilhelm der Secunda.

Priceless china, bullion, tin, lead, and silver, sunk in the Dutch galleon Middleburg, which was scuttled off Hoetje's Bay 122 years ago to avoid capture.

Valuable cargo lost in the Dutch Government's armed merchantman Crazenstein in 1698.

Copper, tin and silver of great value, which went down in the Aberdeen White Star boat Thermopylae.

Captain Gardiner has served in the British and Chinese navies, and is an officer of the Royal Navy Reserve. His attention was drawn to the records of the many wrecks which have occurred along the African coasts, and he spent several years in endeavoring to locate them.

Wrecks Discovered.

He was rewarded by the discovery of twenty-nine wrecks, which could be reached, and the result of his discoveries was the formation of the South African Salvage Company, Limited, with a capital of £25,000.

The steamer Alfred Nobel, once the Oromea, a pleasure yacht, and more recently engaged in carrying dynamite, was chartered, and no pains or money was spared in equipping her as a salvage vessel.

There will be twenty hands, including two divers, all ex-navy or naval reserve men. They will sign on for five years, and will be given 5 per cent. share of all treasure found.

"We are not going only to look for wrecks, but we shall do salvage work permanently," said the captain. "There is at present no salvage company in South Africa, and eight or nine valuable boats are wrecked there every year."

The Cape Government claims 15 per cent. of the value of all silver raised, 25 per cent. of the value of gold and precious stones, and 10 per cent. of the value of other articles. but Capt. Gardiner is quite satisfied that there will be enough left to please everybody concerned.

Killed by a Lion.

A young naval surgeon, belonging to a gunboat on Lake Nyassa, has recently lost his life after a severe struggle with an infuriated lion. Going out in search of elephants, which had been reported in the neighborhood, he came upon two lions, a male and a female, sleeping under the shade of a large mopani tree. With a double .500 express he fired at the male, wounding it severely, whereupon both retreated into high grass. Without taking the precaution to reload the discharged barrel he seems to have followed them, and in a few yards almost stumbled upon the one he had hit. Taking a hurried aim at the massive looking head, he fired an ineffectual shot, the bullet, as it was afterward ascertained, merely penetrating the root of the animal's ear.

"With the roar and a bound the lion was upon him, and, fixing his teeth in his shoulder, endeavored to bear him to the ground. The surgeon, however, a man of very powerful physique, pluckily endeavored to keep his antagonist at arm's length, but, maintaining its hold on the now useless shoulder, the lion with its hind claws literally tore the flesh from its opponent's lower limbs. They finally sank down together, and the lion, evidently very sick from the effects of the first wound, staggered off a short way and lay down, The unfortunate surgeon, rapidly bleeding to death, now called up his terror-stricken gunbearer, and, making him kneel to form a rest for the second rifle, actually shot the lion dead, succumbing himself almost immediately to the appalling hemorrhage from his torn arteries. The two dead bodies were found lying within a few yards of each other.

Origin of Hockey.

It is probable that the little boy in the street who calls a hockey stick a golf club is only speaking the truth a few centuries too late. There are many reasons to believe that the Scotch game of golf, sometimes called bandy ball in the old accounts of it, developed into hockey with a flavor of football about it when it came south, and this is borne out by an old fifteenth century print of two bandy-ball players in which the stick used, called bandy because bent, resembled a hockey stick far more than a golf club. The Gentleman's Magazine, in 1795, also mentions shinty as a Scotch game similar to golf, and another writer defines shinty as "an inferior kind of golf played by young people, and in London called hockey."

"There are some people who believe that the whole human race will be saved," said an old lady, "but for my part I hope for better things."

REST YOUR CLOTHES.

An Up to Date Idea That Is Worth While Trying.

The up to date woman, not satisfied with her own rest cures, has taken to resting her clothes, and it works like a charm.

Nothing induces shabbiness in coats and gowns more than the lines and wrinkles which show they have been constantly worn. Sitting creases make a garment old before it has done half its duty.

Men seem to realize this more than women. A man is able to dress well on a very small income, because every few days or every week he makes a change of clothes, sends the suit he has been wearing to the tailor to be pressed and never under any condition allows a wrinkle to become fixed in his garments.

Very few women's frocks can go to the tailor's. It is well to send one's street frocks occasionally to the cleaner's to be brushed and pressed. She can manage to change her clothes often enough to give them an entire rest.

The best way to give them a rest is to put both skirt and bodice in long boxes or bureau drawers, where they can lie in soft folds, and if sleeves and trimmings are filled out with tissue paper so much the better. Shirts and coats placed on hangers lose in a few days the lines where they have conformed to the figure. These lines not only spoil the fresh appearance of a frock, but the material wears around them and loses color in streaks.

Wash frocks should always be put away in trunks, drawers or boxes, whether they have been worn or not, for in hanging they grow stringy, are more easily affected by the dampness and lose their freshness before they are worn.

A clever girl, with more taste than money, also puts away her laces and ribbons to rest. This is not so much to freshen them, though they are much improved by it, but is to have something which is new to her friends when she rewears them after their "rest cure."

HOME GYMNASTICS.

A Healthful Way to Dispense With an Extra Servant.

One of the household magazines is responsible for the story of Mrs. Farniente.

Mrs. Farniente consulted her family physician for a bad case of semi-invalidism and received from him the advice that she was suffering from too much help in the kitchen.

Acting on this advice, Mrs. Farniente dismissed one of her maids and began to use a broom and duster herself, thus bringing into play muscles which had grown limp and flabby from disuse.

In the morning Mrs. Farniente made beds and found that the various twistings of the torso required by the exercise caused her to take deep breaths and started her circulation, which had been sluggish for years.

At the suggestion of her doctor she left all the windows of the chambers wide open while she was making the beds so she might have fresh air with her exercise.

For the first time in her life she began to notice how many different muscles were called into play by the ordinary duties of housework. Later she began to observe a decided improvement in her health and spirits, and at the end of two months she reported to her physician that no prescription she had ever tried had helped her so much as the last one he had given her.

This is only one instance out of many thousands that have never been chronicled in print in which the practice of a woman's natural gymnastics (housework) has changed a semi-invalid into a healthy woman.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

The old fashioned remedy for sore throat and a croupy cough is hard to excel. Over half a cupful of minced onions pour a tablespoonful of vinegar and a half cupful of boiling molasses. Use half a teaspoonful of the sirup every fifteen or twenty minutes for an hour or two, then less frequently.

It is claimed that a sure remedy for cold feet is to dip them quickly two or three times before retiring into a shallow pail of cold water, then rub briskly with a coarse towel until dry. After accomplishing this take hold of each end of the towel and draw it back and forth through the hollow of the foot until a glowing sensation is experienced.

Every household should have an emergency outfit and keep it where every adult member of the family will know where to find it when the emergency arrives. The outfit should include a bottle of carbolic acid, a bottle of listerine, sterilized gauze or clean linen rags, a roll of absorbent cotton, one or two rolls of bandages and a cake of aseptic soap.

A little child should never be allowed to go to sleep with its face partly under the bedclothing. Mothers are supposed to know this, but they are often careless. A child's face must be entirely uncovered when asleep, so that it inhales only perfectly pure air and not that which has already been breathed. It is trifling things like this which make or mar a child's future health.

A Sewing Hint.

If you wish to shirr a girdle or ruffles, it is much easier to do so on the sewing machine. Make the tension of the upper thread quite loose and stitch where you want it gathered, then pull the lower thread, and it will gather. You must fasten one end of the thread securely or it will pull through.

Some people think that it's never too late to mend a matrimonial mistake by applying for a divorce.

It doesn't seem half as hard to pay your debts when you haven't any.

BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1906) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

"Why?" The single word revealed both anxiety and sympathy.

"His Majesty has signified that for the present he will conduct his private correspondence by himself. It is the first step. The next will be that His Majesty no longer needs my services in any capacity, that I am free," he laughed with gentle bitterness, "to leave Versailles. Yes, Mademoiselle, I can no longer help your cause."

"That—that woman—" Denise began.

"Certainly. This is her doing. I stood between her and such secrets as His Majesty was pleased to entrust to me, secrets not known to ministers and to the Court. So long as I was private secretary that woman was not the King's master. But when I am finally dismissed she will rule the King body and soul."

"Oh, cannot it be stopped?"

"No, Marquise. I am not as his grace of Pontchartrain a great noble, not even a Comptroller-General. I am the King's creature, just as she is. His Majesty can unmake me to-morrow."

"This is dreadful," Denise murmured. "Without your help, your information, your private influence with the King, we shall be beaten, humiliated, ruined. You have been a true friend to our cause, Chevalier."

The young man bowed. "I have done my best," he said with unmistakable sincerity; "that Madame de Pompadour should triumph cuts me to the heart. But when I am obliged to leave Versailles her victory will not be my only grief."

Denise looked up at him. His tone had completely altered.

"I shall leave you, Mademoiselle," he said simply, "and I love you. Ah! it is the truth, the bare truth. You are a great noble, I am only the Chevalier de St. Amant, a parvenu tolerated by the Court merely because he is useful to them. It is presumption in me to dare to love you. But even a parvenu's heart can love. This cause is sacred to me because not your beauty, nor your nobility, nor your wealth, but the womanhood that is the greatest gift of God to you has taught me what you are—has taught me that your service can be all that a man could desire."

"Monsieur——" Denise began, but the words failed her.

"I had hoped that some day I might, perhaps, have dared to do more—to ask for your love in return. But that is impossible—impossible."

"Is it?" Denise asked in a low voice, almost as if she were talking to herself.

"Yes, Marquise, because you love another."

She looked up half angrily, half inquiringly. "No," she answered as he was still silent, "I do not."

St. Amant resumed his pacing up and down. "Mademoiselle," he said presently, "are you aware how the King can be stopped in his present course?"

Denise turned eagerly towards him. "Madame de Pompadour," he added very slowly, "is only a woman, but she has an ally, the Vicomte de Nerac, the ablest, subtlest brain in all Versailles. He is ambitious; he loves the Marquise de Beau Sejour—hear me out, please. Take the Vicomte de Nerac from Madame de Pompadour, make him her enemy, not her friend, and——"

"You believe that?" she interrupted.

"Unfortunately it cannot be done," he replied with decision. "Andre de Nerac has chosen his party and he will not be turned aside. Therefore the only other course is to ruin him. Publish to the world that he is Madame's spy, that he has the key of Madame's secret passage in his pocket, publish what I have told you and you compel me to keep a secret, and you can ruin him to-morrow."

Denise drew a deep breath. Something like terror shone in her eyes.

"I have information," continued the Chevalier very quietly, "that if made known to the King would ruin the Vicomte to-night. Am I to use it or not? It is for you, Marquise, to say."

Denise's lips paled. Her hand unconsciously crept to her throat. "What sort of information?" she asked in a dry whisper.

"That, Mademoiselle, must be my secret. But I do not jest when I say that you can ruin Madame de Pompadour to-day, but you will also most certainly ruin the Vicomte de Nerac at the same time. Am I to keep silent or to reveal the whole truth to the Comte d'Argenson and the President of the Council of Ministers?"

Denise stood pale and trembling. Her eyes looked on her questioner with a dumb piteousness cruel to behold.

"You have answered me, Marquise," he replied after an agitating pause. "I shall hold my tongue, and forgive me, I beg, that I have been so merciless. But love is merciless and blind." He took her hand. "If you doubt that a parvenu can love you better far than he loves himself, think of my silence. When I am driven from Versailles do not forget that I refused to speak the truth of one who regards me as his enemy, at your bidding. Adieu!"

In the doorway he paused to look back. For a moment he wavered. Denise had stumbled to a chair and was crying softly. "Soit!" he muttered, throwing up his head, "Soit!" and humming a reckless catch he strode down the gallery.

CHAPTER XVIII.

After he had left Denise the Chevalier walked some time in the empty gallery up and down, up and down, striving to master the strong emotion within. But when at last he made his way into the gardens he was once more the jaunty dare-devil synic whose fine blue eyes had made many a Court beauty feel that even the veteran Vicomte de Nerac had lessons to learn in the art of courtship. By the same Fountain of Neptune where he had met Denise the Chevalier now found a woman waiting, as indeed he expected. Yet, greeting scarcely passed between them.

"You are right," he began with bitter brevity, "and you have had your way."

The woman pondered on the reply. "Yes," she said presently. "I knew I was right. She loves him. And you?" she added, with a swift touch of anxiety.

I shall finish what I have begun," he answered with calm determination. "It will cost me my life, perhaps, but," his tone was savagely reckless, "revenge is better than love."

The woman put her hand on his arm with affectionate entreaty. "Why not," she asked, "why not give it all up? It is becoming too dangerous."

"Dangerous? Of course. But it is too late to draw back, and I will keep my oath now—now," he repeated, lingering on the word, "if I perish to-morrow." He put his hand quietly on her shoulder and looked into her eyes. "You, too, some day will come to believe that revenge is better than love."

"At least we have no choice," she answered with a cruel little laugh.

"Don't! don't," the Chevalier whispered, in a sudden tenderness. "What does it matter for me? but you—you—I can't bear it for you."

"It is fate," she said very quietly, "your fate and mine."

With his arm about her she stood in silence for no small while. They were both thinking their own thoughts, and they were not pleasant.

"Are you quite sure he loves her?" the Chevalier asked.

"I shall know for certain before many days," she answered; "although a woman feels sure now."

They parted, as they had met, without greeting, but had the Chevalier followed her he would have seen that the woman went in the direction of "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold." It was probably because he already knew this that he returned to the palace.

All this time Denise had sat crushed and sad, alone in the antechamber. Nor did she know that Andre had stood for some minutes in the doorway looking at her, had twice stepped forward to speak, had twice restrained himself, and finally had left her to her tears and her silence.

But the one person whom he did not desire to meet found him out by accident at that moment.

"Vicomte," the Comtesse des Forges called softly, "will you do me a favor?"

Andre smiled with skillful hypocrisy. The Comtesse was looking her best, and her heavy-lidded eyes were bright with admiration and an exquisite suggestion of self-surrender. "A favor," she repeated, "which is also a secret. You will promise not to betray me."

Andre took her hand to his lips for answer. The jewel on the lady's breast gently rose and fell, echoing tenderly the coy trembling of her fingers. It was not the first time these two had played with passion, heedless of the future, but Andre swiftly recognized that this evening it would not be play, pastime, or pleasure.

"We have a petition to the King," the Comtesse said in her silkiest tones, "a petition from the Court praying His Majesty to dismiss that woman, and we want you to present it. His Majesty will listen to you more than to any other."

Andre still held her hand; the devotion in his face was intended to conceal his thoughts. For the crisis that he feared had come. This petition to the King from the Court was also an ultimatum to himself from his friends.

"It will be useless," he said gently, "the petition."

"No—no! You can succeed with the King—you! Andre," she pleaded with a thrill of genuine passion, "do it to please me. You know I can be grateful."

"I cannot," he replied, controlling himself, "not even to please you, Gabrielle."

"You will not desert your friends and me—me?" she asked, a menace creeping into her languorous voice. "Andre, it is impossible, surely impossible."

"I cannot present the petition," he answered.

Jealousy, fear, anger, swept the passion out of her eyes. "You are afraid?" she demanded, with biting scorn.

"Yes, I am afraid," he assented, and if the Comtesse had not lost her self-control she must have detected the delicate irony in his grave bow.

"Ah!" she stepped back. "Ah! If Denise had asked you, you would have consented."

"No," he corrected with a freezing pride. "I would not permit the Marquise de Beau Sejour even to make the request."

The answer surprised and delighted her. Yet, woman though she was, the Comtesse failed to read what lay behind it, and in her determination to win she now made a stupid mistake. "I would save you, Andre," she whispered, "because—" she laid a jewelled hand on his sleeve and dropped her eyes slowly. "They will ruin you unless you consent."

Why break with the past, the present, and the future? Andre hesitated, but only for a moment.

"I cannot present the petition," he answered curtly.

"Very well," she shrugged her shoulders in disdainful wrath. "Very well. I shall not ask you a second time. You understand; so do I."

"Adieu!" he said, raising her fingers, but she snatched them back and swept him a cold curtsey.

"Soit!" Andre was saying to himself as his spurs rang in the empty corridor, "c'est la guerre! Soit!" The die was cast. Madame de Pompadour was his only friend now. Henceforward the Court, his friends, his class, the women whom he had loved, would be his bitterest foes. And it was to that one friend that he now turned. Yet, careful as he was, he was unaware that the Comtesse had followed him stealthily, had marked his entry by the secret door, and returned to the Duke of Pontchartrain with the news.

Madame de Pompadour was alone. "You have something to say?" she questioned eagerly.

Andre related what had just passed and Madame laughed. "Ah, my friend," she remarked gaily, "it will need more than a petition to-day." She flung herself back into her chair, her wonderful eyes ablaze with a magnificently carnal consciousness of victorious beauty and power. "And the Vicomte de Nerac cannot go back now," she added with a sudden gravity. "The priests, the nobles, the officers might forgive you, but a woman, a comtesse, will neither forget nor forgive, never, never!"

"Yes, Madame," Andre said, "I am in your hands."

Madame de Pompadour moved swiftly towards him. "And I in yours," she whispered.

The perfect music of her voice, the grace of her figure, the flash in her eyes, were irresistible. Compared with this radiant, triumphant goddess of a royal love, even Gabrielle des Forges seemed a bloodless, heartless puppet.

"I have more to say," Andre proceeded, "I verily believe I am on the track of 'No. 101.'" She turned sharply, her breath came quickly. "Yvonne," she added, "Yvonne is proving very useful. I have learned from her that the English have a spy, an agent in Paris, that he frequents 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold,' that he has a paid servant at the palace. Before long I mean to have that spy in fetters, and then——" he laughed.

"Good—good!" Madame clapped her hands. "It is only what I suspected. And the wench, Yvonne, is she in it?"

"She is a simple girl, Madame, and I cannot say yet. But in another week I shall know more."

"Do not be in a hurry. It is pleasant cajoling the truth from a wench, n'est-ce pas? We must act with extreme caution, it is a matter of life and death for you and me. I, too, have not been idle. Listen. The King's secret is mine."

Andre looked at her sorely puzzled. Madame invited him to sit beside her on the settee. "What is that secret?" she began. "Simply this: Behind the ministers' backs, contrary indeed to their despatches and their public statements, His Majesty is intriguing with the Jacobites and others too. More, His Majesty both in Paris and elsewhere spies on his own servants and frequently thwarts them. The Chevalier was his secretary and confidant. But there will be no more Chevalier. There will henceforth only be," she sprung up with a dramatic gesture, "the Marquise de Pompadour."

"But why," asked Andre slowly, "why does His Majesty do it?"

"God knows. It is his foible, his passion. But so long as he had secrets from me I was in constant peril. To-day I have learned all that there is to know; and now," she paused, "and now, please Heaven, the King will be in my hands alone."

Andre was beginning to understand. "The King, in fact," he commented, "says one thing to the English ministers who desire peace and another to the Jacobites; that may prove desperately dangerous if it is discovered."

"Exactly. And the master of his secret is master of His Majesty. Ah, my friend, my foes are learning that already, but it will need some sharper lessons before they submit. They shall have those lessons, I promise you. I have accepted the challenge of the Court and we shall see what we shall see."

"Yes, Madame," Andre said with sincere admiration, "you will be what you desire to be, the ruler of France."

Madame de Pompadour drifted into a silent reverie. The dreams could be read in her parted lips and faint smile as the soft light played on every supple curve which this woman's genius knew how to suggest with such subtle restraint.

"But one person can destroy me," she remarked presently; "No. 101."

Andre was startled by the gravity of her voice. "It is the truth," she was speaking now with nervous rapidity "if, which God forbid, the King's secret intrigues are betrayed by treachery, to save his honor and himself he will, must, find a victim. That victim will be I. Yes, yes, I know the game is dangerous, but play it I must because the King insists. Vicomte, 'No. 101' must never, never succeed in securing any of the King's secrets as has happened in the past."

"Surely, Madame, you and I can prevent that."

"Can we? Can we? Vicomte, I am not a coward nor a fool, but I feel in the poisonous air of this Court, surrounded by deadly enemies, my fate at the mercy of the King's caprice, that I am fighting not with flesh and blood but with a foe mysterious, superhuman, invincible. And I repeat, should the King's secret be betrayed by 'No. 101' to my enemies I am ruined."

"I am confident," Andre answered, "that not only can I baffle that traitor but that I can discover him."

Madame de Pompadour studied his calm, handsome face. Then the room seemed suddenly to swim in the glories of a golden dawn. "My friend," she cried, holding out both her hands impulsively, "I believe you. Did not Fontenoy teach me you are a man?"

"And it taught me—" he began softly.

"Hush!" she rippled over into an adorable coquetry. "You are not the King yet, not yet, though—" it was the vivandiere of Fontenoy whose saucy eyes and curtsey finished the sentence.

"When you are victorious, Madame," Andre said, "I shall ask for one favor."

"Tut! only one! Dare I grant it beforehand?"

She was now the refined Marquise of a remorselessly critical Versailles.

"You can take your revenge on the Court, Madame, as you please, but you must spare," she put down her fan and waited anxiously, "the Marquise de Beau Sejour."

There was silence for a minute.

"A woman, a haughty, petted beauty," she murmured, "and my bitterest foe. Are you aware that Mademoiselle Denise is the soul of the party that would destroy me, the close friend of the Chevalier de St. Amant, and no friend to you?"

"Yes, I know it all."

Madame de Pompadour came close to him. "She is not worthy of you," she said quietly, "she does not love you."

"Madame, I love her."

"And if I refuse to forego my just vengeance on her?" she awaited his answer with anxiety wreathed in tempting smiles.

"I will share her fate if she will permit it," he answered simply.

"Chivalrous fool!" she retorted, and she was not wholly jesting. "No woman is worth the sacrifice of such a man as you."

"Pardon, Madame. Every man who loves a woman perhaps is a fool, but the folly is a folly inspired by God and it leads to heaven."

The answer surprised her and for the moment she faltered between tears and laughter. "I will not ask again," Andre said in a low voice, "for I trust you, Marquise. Adieu!"

She hardly heeded his salute, and Andre was already in the dark on the secret stairs when he felt a sharp touch on his shoulder. "Be loyal to me, too!" she whispered pleadingly into his ear. "Give me your hand," and she laid it on her breast. In the darkful hush Andre could feel the fierce beating of that insurgent, ambitious heart.

"Swear," she whispered. "Swear with your hand there that you will be loyal also to me, to Antoinette de Pompadour."

"I swear." Two words, but two words between a man and a woman can sweep a soul into hell or lift it to heaven.

"The heart of the Pompadour," she murmured. "Can any man or woman read it? Can she read it herself? God knows. Take care, take care of yourself, my friend," she added with a sudden wistful pathos. "You alone I can trust. Adieu!"

"The heart of the Pompadour," Andre muttered as he stole back to the Queen's apartments. "The heart of the Pompadour." What, indeed, was there not written there of passion and ambition? Only a woman's heart. Yes, but one of the half-dozen women, in the history of the world, the beatings of whose heart have shaped the destinies of peoples and moulded the fate of kingdoms.

CHAPTER XIX.

Andre had understated the truth to Madame de Pompadour when he said that he had learned much from Yvonne. Bit by bit her simple confessions had convinced him that "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold" played an important part in the inscrutable mystery of successful treachery summed up in the bloodstained cipher of "No. 101." Yvonne indeed sorely puzzled him. She was only a hired wench at this hostelry kept by a man and his wife against whom nothing discreditable could be ferreted out. And he had utterly failed to break down the barriers of her simplicity. She related things she had seen or heard which to Andre with his knowledge of the facts were damningly conclusive, but that she was aware of this was contradicted at every turn by her speech, her gestures, her amazing innocence. In vain had he laid pitfall after pitfall to catch her tripping. Not one syllable, one flutter of an eyelid, one blush, one faltering tone, had rewarded his cunningest or his most artless efforts. The girl had passed ordeal just as a peasant wench should who was only a peasant wench. Yet every failure only deepened the feeling that Yvonne was not merely Yvonne of the Spotless Ankles; proof he had none; proof indeed pointed to the very reverse. Andre had nothing but a vague, indefinable, apparently irrational, suspicion, and it maddened him. In the critical struggle on which he had now embarked he was convinced he was being beaten, tricked by a woman; she held, if he were right, the keys which would unlock the mystery and she was simply playing with him, no doubt for her own ends; she was probably betraying him daily to her accursed allies. Worse still, because it was ridiculous as he felt it, there was an inexplicable charm in this girl which threatened to master him. Despite Denise and Madame de Pompadour and the Comtesse des Forges and half a dozen other refined and attractive women at the Court to inspire love and gratify passion, he, Andre de Nerac, a Cordon Bleu, a Croix de St. Louis, a noble of the Maison du Roi, was in danger of falling a victim to an unkempt peasant with a smudged face. Yvonne told him things eminently useful, Yvonne baffled him, but these were not the only reasons why daily he went to see her. And he had discovered this humiliating fact by trying to answer a torturing question. If he could prove Yvonne to be a traitor or the ally of traitors, was he ready to hand her over to the awful mercies of the King's justice? And if not, why not? Supposing he could show that she was the woman who had foiled him in the charcoal-burner's cabin at Fontenoy, what then? And his heart revolted in its answer against his reason: "No, I cannot; I cannot leave Denise to the vengeance of Madame de Pompadour, because I love her; I cannot give Yvonne to the rack, the executioner's whip and wheel, because"—and then he always stopped, because he had not the courage even in the most intimate sanctuary of his conscience to finish the answer.

But discover the mystery he must more than ever now. His own fate and Madame de Pompadour's hung on success. The war was drawing to an end; the negotiations for peace were beginning. If the King's secrets were betrayed as in the past Madame would be disgraced. Andre had deliberately broken with his friends and his order. Their implacable lust for vengeance on the mistress would require his punishment too. The issue was as clear as daylight. Either he must crush them or they would crush him. And succeed he must, because success alone meant safety, honor, and the love of Denise.

And so, after leaving Madame de Pompadour, Andre went as usual straight to Yvonne, whom he found in the stalls feeding the spotted cow. "The Englishman," she informed him, "has been here, Monseigneur. He spoke with a gentleman from the Court. I only know that to-morrow night they will meet at a tavern in Paris; they called it 'The Gallows and the Three Crows.'"

Andre took the lantern from her and let the light fall on her stained face.

AFRICAN WITCH DOCTOR

PEST WHICH THE WAR HAS NOT ELIMINATED.

Are Present in Every South African Village — Kaffirs Revel in Witchcraft—They Are Credited With Every Calamity—Their Influence Is Enormous, and They Are at the Bottom of All Mischief.

Among the innumerable pests with which the unpeaceful land of South Africa is so liberally cursed, the witch doctor must take high rank.

I, myself have known a great many witch doctors of all degrees, from Eupajina, the mighty rainmaker, who professed to control the seasons, down to petty local practitioners who could do little more than smell out wizards and arrange to poison their neighbors, but of the whole number I cannot remember one whom I regarded with anything but disfavor, says a London Mail correspondent.

Source of All Trouble.

Whenever there is troube in a village it is always safe to blame the witch doctor, for if he did not actually plan it, he certainly assisted in the later stages. If anyone dies mysteriously, twisted up into a knot by one of those ghastly vegetable poisons so dear to the heart of the Kaffir, you may be sure the witch doctor supplied the dose. If a trader is boycotted, if his huts are burned and his cattle assegaied, it was the witch doctor who brought it about. If a mine suddenly ceases to get labor, if the boys run away without any apparent reason, it means that the place has fallen under the ban of these pests. If a tribe rises against the white man, it was the witch doctor who stirred up the passions of the people and who gave the signal for the first massacres.

Controls the Kaffir's Life.

The influence of these men is enormous, for witchcraft controls every action of a Kaffir's life, from the cradle to the grave. At his birth the local magician threw the bones to discover if it were auspicious for the new arrival to live. His choice of a wife, his journeyings and hunting, his seed-time, the sale of his cattle and his daughters, his friendships and his vengeances, all are determined by the will of the spirits as interpreted by the witch doctor, and, even after death, the ghost of the departed still requires the ministrations of its former adviser.

Witchcraft is the main interest in the native's life. He revels in it. It provides him with an unending source of conversation, adds zest to existence, relieves the otherwise impossible tedium of the daily round in the kraals. Go into the native districts, live among the Kaffirs, learn their languages, watch them in the fields, in the kraals, at the beer drinks, get to know them as intimately as possible for a white man, and I guarantee you will never come across anything in the least resembling the assegai-waving heroes of whom you read in the book. But, none the less, you will see many interesting things, learn many gruesome secrets, as you sit beside the fire at night and listen to those deep, guttural voices.

Witchcraft All the Time.

There will be no hint of noble barbarism, no high-flown sentiment, no longings for independence from patriotic reasons. It will be witchcraft, witchcraft, witchcraft, all the time. Grim stories of uneasy spirits, the restless ghosts of the unburied dead, who cannot sleep with their fathers, but wander perpetually on the mountain sides, tales of the hyena, the loathed and loathsome horse of the evil spirit; tales of the owl, the lion, and the snake, the sons of the evil spirits; tales of the eagle, the messenger of the departed. Then will come even grimmer stories still, a list of the wizards who have been smelled out by the witch doctors and removed by poison, by the assegai, or by the knob-stick, a long list this, an appallingly long one.

It is a hideous revelation at first, until you get used to it. Then you accept it as inevitable, as part of the Kaffir's very existence, and you realize that no legislation can ever stop it, for prosecution is useless where evidence is unobtainable.

In the Royal Private Apartments.

To many people the most interesting parts of Windsor Castle are the private apartments occupied by the late Queen, and also now by King Edward and Queen Alexandra. The suite is approached from a small circular hall, hung round with the late Queen's favorite family pictures, especially representations of all her children's weddings, which she always had painted as mementoes of the deeply-interesting event. In this gallery she kept all her most prized possessions, one of which was a crystal case containing Gen. Gordon's Bible, open at his favorite chapter. The late Queen had always cherished the greatest admiration for Gordon, and was known to be deeply grieved over his fate. This Bible had been presented to her by Gordon's sister in private audience. Another possession most dear to her, which was always kept in a sort of oak shrine, and only opened and shown to her most intimate friends, was the beautiful statue in pure Carrara marble of herself.

£70,000 For Lifeboats.

Over £70,000 has just been bequeathed to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. According to the will of the late Mr. Charles Carr Ashley, of Mentone, this great sum is to be devoted to the establishment and maintenance of five lifeboats, and the benefit of the widows and families of lifeboatmen who have lost their lives in endeavoring to save life at sea.

The conditions attached to the bequest are that the lifeboats shall be five in number and named the Susan Ashley, Charles Henry Ashley, Richard Ashley, William Cantrell Ashley, and Fifi and Charles; and that they all be first-class, without steam, and be stationed on the English and Welsh coasts.

MISS ADELAIDE NICHOLS

PERIODS OF PAIN

While no woman is entirely free from periodic suffering, it does not seem to be the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely. Irregularities and pain are positive evidence that something is wrong which should be set right or it will lead to serious derangement of the feminine organism.

Thousands of women, have found relief from all periodic suffering by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, as it is the most thorough female regulator known to medical science.

It cures the condition which causes so much discomfort and robs that period of its terrors. Women who are troubled with painful or irregular functions should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences and be restored to health and strength by taking

Miss Adelaide Nichols of 324 West 22nd Street, New York City, writes:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"If women who suffer would only rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound their troubles would be quickly alleviated. I feel greatly indebted for the relief and health which has been brought to me by your inestimable remedy."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints such as Falling and Displacements, and Organic Diseases. Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, and invigorates the whole feminine system. For the derangements of the Kidneys of either sex Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised.

KING EDWARD AT BIARRITZ.

His Majesty Is Getting Rest and Quiet Enjoyment.

A correspondent writes: I am told by one who has just returned from Biarritz that King Edward is keeping much more to himself than on his former visit. The fact is that though he looks very well, he has been overstrained by his recent arduous labors and now is taking a "quiet recuperation."

Of course, it is no secret that the King does not possess what insurance offices term "good life." In view of the uncertainty of all human existence and the King's prolonged absence abroad the contingency of the sudden demise of the Crown, I am informed, has recently been under consideration in order that so lamentable and improbable an event should not find the authorities unprepared.

His Majesty is not far from the allotted age of man, and his sojourns abroad are indispensable to the efficient discharge of his onerous duties. Some feeling has been aroused on the subject of the King's absence while Parliament is sitting, but nobody who knows the facts can fail to admit that His Majesty owes it to himself and to the nation to omit no precaution which his medical advisers declare necessary for the preservation of his health.

But there is no denying that the King preserves wonderfully high spirits. The other evening at dinner with Princess Frederika of Hanover the King narrated a couple of stories about Mr. Haldane, the Minister of War:

"I notice," said he, "that when any of my present Ministers have something particularly democratic to bring forward they always propose to ask my advice. When Mr. Haldane came with a pat phrase to usher in his army scheme, I replied:

"'Of course, I am sure you have anticipated my opinion on the very point; now let me hear all about it.'"

The other tale concerns the Kaiser. His Teutonic Majesty, with bland imperturbability, invited the English Secretary of War to inspect the manoeuvres or whatever he pleased, whereas if the average Britisher approaches a fort it becomes a job for the British Embassy.

The Kaiser had been talking with candid affability and openness, which would have rendered any one suspicious except a sound forensic brain. Finally the German War Lord remarked:

"You will be going in for army reform yourself soon, I suppose. The next time you are at Windsor ask my uncle to find you a scheme I prepared one wet morning for my grandmother. It was too good ever to be adopted. I am glad that your country has never heard of it, for once it were embraced England's supremacy would be unshakable. I made it."

In the guttural Germanic tones of King Edward this must have sounded delightfully quaint.

HARD ON THE OLD FOLKS.

How Congo Natives Get Rid of Their Aged Relatives.

Major Powell-Cotton has just returned from a remarkable journey in Central Africa, after a two years' sojourn among the savages of the Dark Continent. A romantic interest is to be found in the fact that Major Powell-Cotton, who had intended on the conclusion of his expedition to return to England to get married, decided not to interrupt his journey, and accordingly arranged for his fiancee to get out to Africa. The marriage took place on her arrival at Nairobi, British East Africa, in 1905, and afterwards Mrs. Powell-Cotton shared her husband's hardships and dangers, having, among other things lived for many months among the pygmies in the heart of the Ituri Forest. She was the first white woman ever seen by these people.

The authorities made concessions never before given to a foreigner in the way of hunting in the reserves, and giving permission to kill a limited number of rare animals. Speaking of his hunting experiences, Major Powell-Cotton said:—"Bands of elephant and buffalo roamed the twilight solitudes at will. In all my travels I never saw so many elephant and buffalo tracks together. Frequently, as we warily cut our way through the tropical growth in single file, the huge beasts crashed through the undergrowth on either side of us, and the experience, especially at night, was necessary particularly trying to an English woman on her first visit to Africa."

The explorer relates a curious story of how the natives in the neighborhood of Wadelai dispose of the old folk when they become a burden. As soon as the infirmities of age manifest themselves, the old people are given a soothing draught, and wrapped in a fresh antelope skin. Thus attired, they are carried by members of their family to a spot some distance from the village, and are abandoned in the grass close to a native track. The first native coming by sees what he thinks is an antelope, and spears it, whereupon the victim's family emerge from their hiding place, and express horror and surprise at the unfortunate incident.

Short Kings.

There is hardly a king in Christendom whose wife does not overtop him by a head.

King Edward is quite six inches shorter than Queen Alexandra.

The Czar, a little man, is overtopped a full head by the Czarina.

Kaiser Wilhelm is of medium height, but the German Empress is tall, and that is why the proud Kaiser will never consent to be photographed beside his wife unless she sits while he stands.

The King of Italy, short and squat, hardly comes up to the shoulders of the tall, athletic Queen Helena.

The King of Portugal, though fatter, is less tall than his Queen.

Even the Prince of Wales is shorter a good four inches than the Princess.

And the young King of Spain is several inches shorter than his Queen.

Gibraltar has 70 miles of tunnel.

It is estimated that 20,000 tramps are wintering in Chicago.

LONDON'S SMART SET.

Father Vaughan Again Attacks Their Foibles and Sins.

Before a great congregation which filled every part of his beautiful West London church, Father Bernard Vaughan commenced a course of Lenten sermons dealing further with the sins of smart society.

"We live in a time," he said, "when the world has discovered that there is no such thing as sin. In churches, in current literature, in drawing-room conversations, in clubs — everywhere we are reminded that we have passed from the shadows of dogma into the illumination of science.

"In some of the churches," the scathing voice from the pulpit continued, "we are told that there was no Fall; that the Atonement is a fable. We like to hear these things. The world indulging its sins is like a naughty boy who hopes that there is no God.

"It would be an injustice, many people might think, to say that purchasing things for which they do not intend to pay is a sin, or ordering beautiful things and sending them back next day after having worn them the previous evening.

"Why," he cried, with a contemptuous ring in his voice, "there are West-end ladies who can give points to the West Ham guardians.

"But I am not concerned with this for the moment. I am concerned with graver evils. What of this vile competition with France for the lowest birthrate in Europe; this emulation of America to find excuses for throwing off marriages in order to enter better financial positions."

Concluding, Father Vaughan vehemently warned his hearers against "dancing down to hell." "I must tell you these things," he cried, his voice hoarse and tremulous with emotion: "I must have your attention. You must pause and pull up before you reach that spiral staircase."

Fenian's Romance.

Fenian excitement in the early eighties is recalled by the reappearance in Roscommon of a man who mysteriously disappeared 26 years ago.

His name is Farrell, and he was known locally as "Whaer." He was understood to be closely identified with the Fenian Brotherhood, and to have come under the suspicion of the leaders of the movement. In all probability he received a warning, for he disappeared suddenly, leaving his wife and children behind him. Nothing more had been heard of him until last week; but he has now returned to Roscommon a weathy man.

The curious part of the story is that, although Farrell has been identified by his old neighbors, his wife and family have up to now repudiated him.

Surf Riding Is a Fine Sport.

At Waikiki, near Honolulu, is a famous bathing beach. Here winter and summer the surf canoes or, better yet, the surf boards come dancing in on the long rollers, and men become amphibious. There is no sensation quite comparable to riding a surf board on a Pacific roller. It is tobogganing on a moving hillside of water, or, if you are clever enough to stand up on your board, it is taking this hillside on a single big skee. The beach runs far out before it shelves into deep water, and at high tide the breakers begin to mount almost half a mile from the shore line. You go out there with your surf board and wait for the wave. You learn to catch it at the right moment, throw your board inshore and climb upon it just as the crest of the roller mounts and catches you. Then on this crest you sail in toward the shore, to slide down at last when the wave breaks, down the foaming incline into shallow water and churning foam. It is royal sport.—Travel Magazine.

Strenuous Chivalry.

It is complained that modern conditions are killing "the chivalry of the middle ages." But mediaeval tales and romances show what that chivalry really was. Wife beating was a common incident on the part of these knights and gentlemen whose gallantry was a mere convention. The Chevalier de la Tour-Landry in his book of counsels to his daughters tells them the story of a woman who used to contradict her husband in public. One day, after expostulating in vain, he knocked her down, then kicked her face and broke her nose. "And so," comments the good chevalier, "she was disfigured for life, and thus, through her ill behavior and bad temper, she had her nose spoiled, which was a great misfortune to her." But not a word is said about the husband's brutality.

False Messiahs.

The defense of different persons claiming to be the Messiah has cost the Jews a great expense, both in treasure and human life. One of these, Coziba, who lived in the second century of our era, put himself at the head of the Jewish nation as their Messiah, and many of that people adhered to and defended him. The Romans made war upon Coziba and his followers, and, according to admissions made by eminent Jewish authority, they lost somewhere between 500,000 and 600,000 men in his defense. The last of these impostors was Mordecai, a German, who first claimed to be of divine origin in the year 1682. When the authorities threatened to punish him as an impostor he fled, and his end is not known.

Rapid Growth.

The most remarkable instance of rapid growth was recorded by the French academy in 1729. It was a boy six years of age five feet six inches in height. At the age of five his voice changed; at six his beard had grown and he appeared a man of thirty. He possessed great physical strength and could easily lift to his shoulders and carry bags of grains weighing 200 pounds. His decline was as rapid as his growth. At eight his hair and beard were gray, at ten he tottered in his walk, his teeth fell out and his hands became palsied; at twelve he died with every outward sign of extreme old age.

Over There.

"And, best of all," said the boastful American, "we have no titled aristocracy to support over here."

"No," replied the foreigner, "but you have a good many titled sons-in-law to support over there."—Judge.

WARSHIPS RUN BY GAS

ENGLISH NAVY MAY TAKE RADICAL NEW DEPARTURE.

In Order to Enable Effective Mounting of Big Guns They Must Be Placed So As to Fire On Either Broadside—This Means Doom of Steam Engines—Problem Already Solved.

The battleship of the future is to be a strangely weird looking craft if designs which have been worked out prove practicable. The Institution of Naval Architects has been holding a conference in London this week, and one of, if not the most important, paper read and discussed was one which dealt with "the influence of machinery on the gun power of the modern warship," and showed that if the large guns are to be effectively mounted they must all be placed so as to fire on either broadside.

In the Dreadnought of the ten twelve inch guns only eight can fire on either broadside. To enable all ten to fire with the utmost effect it was shown that the funnels must be abolished and also all deck erections. But if the funnels are to be eliminated steam can no longer be used, and the boiler must go.

The great firm of Vickers have faced this fact and after three years of almost continuous research and work have now perfected a system of gas machinery for propelling ships. The explosion engine, in a word, is to replace the steam engine.

Strange Looking Warship.

The design for such a vessel has been worked out. It has no funnels, and is thus an extraordinary looking craft. Its speed will be higher than that of any existing battleship. Its dimensions are moderate, but it carries batteries more powerful than even the Dreadnought, since all of its ten guns can fire on either beam, and six ahead or astern. This is to be the ship of the future.

Admiral Sir E. Fitzgerald, who opened the discussion, deprecated the adoption of too hasty a generalization from the result of one battle—meaning that of the sea of Japan. He remembered the battle of Lissa, and, because one vessel was rammed and sunk there, every warship for thirty years was fitted with a monstrosity on its bows called a ram, which had sunk many a friend but never a foe. With regard to the adoption of oil as fuel, he wondered what would happen if a shell came into the oil reservoir; whether the oil would all run out, if it did not explode, and the ship would be left without fuel; or, if one set of tanks escaped, there would be a heavy list to one side.

Admiral Sir C. Noel said if the marine gas engines foreshadowed could be produced there was no doubt they would be of great value, because they would give ships a higher speed and a much wider radius of action.

Counts Up Advantages.

Admiral Sir E. Fremantle observed there could be no question of the advantages which would ensue if battleship decks could be cleared of the incumbrance of funnels and similar appliances necessary with steam engines. One of the things which would result would be that ships would not be liable to a sudden reduction in speed from the destruction of funnels. Internal combustion engines would get rid of that, but it was usually found that with all improvements introduced there was generally an increased possibility of damage and disaster.

Sir William White pointed out that in attempting to reduce the diameter and the weight of turrets the exposed portion of the guns was liable to destruction. At the battle of Tsushima this portion in some cases had been shot entirely away. With regard to oil or gas engines he believed their day was coming.

Lieut. A. T. Dawson believed the advent of gas engines for marine use was nearer than Sir William White and many more appeared to realize.

Lent In London.

There have been more marriages during Lent this year than for many years. This is shown in society getting less observant of the Lenten season than was the case when there was a sort of decorous attention to high church feelings even when they were not personally shared.

This year the ritualists are keeping Lent with more severity than are the Roman Catholics, for, owing to the prevalance of influenza, the latter are largely dispensated from fasting. On the other hand, a certain ritualist who is allied to the "half peerage" told a friend that in Lent she never dined out, ate meat, drank wine, or had sugar in tea, that she attended church twice daily, went to confession weekly, had no pillow on her bolster, and rose the instant she was called in the morning.

Whether that be only a case of extreme self-martyrdom is not known, but it would seem that the fierce strictures of Father Vaughan on the wickedness of the "smart set" is having some effect in certain sections of society where reform of a most serious character is in progress. Bridge is giving way to a brief lectures and cardrooms are becoming salons.

And He Fled.

The creator of Sherlock Holmes and Brigadier Gerard, is a man of many stories. Here is one: At a dinner party he asserted that every man of 40 or over had a skeleton in the cupboard, something in his past which were better unknown. This was challenged. Sir Conan held to his belief, and the diners arranged a test. To a gentleman whom they all knew, a man in a very high position, and of the greatest integrity, they sent a telegram as follows: "All is discovered; flee at once." The recipient fled, and has never been heard of since.

Lives of great men all remind us
As we learn them day by day
That they'd best be put behind us

KING EDWARD HUSTLES.

Monarch Answers His Letters Promptly and Is Early At Work.

Considerable snap is now imparted to royal functions. Before the King's accession levees began at 2 o'clock. Old friends lunched together at their clubs, toddled over to Buckingham Palace and spent half the afternoon chatting round huge fires that burnt in every room. Things are now speeded up. Levees begin at 12 and are over in three-quarters of an hour. Those who in old times used to remain chatting with the then Prince of Wales are a little huffed in consequence.

Distinguished folk are hustled a good deal at the court, too. Those who are wise reach Buckingham Palace about 9 o'clock p. m. Proceeding to the first room they are then the earliest to pass before their Majesties, after the diplomatic corps has been received. Early arrivals at once take up a position on the raised seats, commanding a fine view of the show.

Great Display of Gowns.

It's a sight to behold some of the women wrestling with their court trains, which require considerable practice to handle gracefully. Talking of trains reminds me that here, too, things are on the upgrade. Women no longer borrow the well-worn train of their sister, aunt or of a retired duchess or go in for patchwork get-up.

The one object at present is to exhibit a gown both beautiful and original. Lace, tulle, gauze, tissue and other flimy materials are used, and the effect when seen in contrast with the men's brilliant uniforms beats fairyland.

By the bye, "hock cup" is just now in great demand at court suppers. It was once a specialty in the days of Queen Victoria. The recently revived taste for light wines is largely due to the royal lead, hock being a favorite with the King.

King Edward has broken right adrift from his mother's prejudice. Elevators have recently been installed in Buckingham Palace. The writing-room where His Majesty attends to business affairs is fitted up like a city magnate's private office. He has not yet taken to a roll-top desk, but an American letter filing system is now in constant use. A battery of new typewriters have been installed in the private secretary's office.

Business Methods Used.

The King manages his vast correspondence on strictly "business" lines. Every letter has its number and proper index reference. It is not generally known that the King prides himself on the fact that he leaves no letter unanswered overnight. Dictating to various secretaries, His Majesty really dispatches a big "bunch" of correspondence each morning before most society leaders have had their second breakfast.

The personal suites of rooms in Buckingham Palace have just been gorgeously re-decorated. Queen Alexandra's bedroom is paneled in pale rose silk, with hangings of white satin. Her bathroom is quite new, an annex being specially built for it. It is fitted with a bath of Grecian marble from special quarries.

Queen's Life In Letters.

That important chapter of history covered by "Letters of Queen Victoria" is at last to become accessible to the public, for three volumes will be issued in the autumn.

The forecast indicates that the work, which is appearing "by authority of His Majesty the King," will be one of exceptional interest. The first volume covers the correspondence of the Queen until she was nearly 25 years old. Here she will be seen as a girl princess, then as a young queen under the guidance of a courtly, chivalrous premier. Next the reader finds her called upon to select a husband after her own heart. All through there is held up a mirror of public events as they appeared from the throne.

The second volume covers a long period, dealing with the repeal of the corn laws and foreign revolutions, of which the most sensational incident will perhaps be found in the story of the flight of Louis Philippe to New Haven.

The correspondence in the third volume bears on the eastern question, the Crimean war, the Indian mutiny, the China war, the Franco-Austrian war, and the struggle for a united Italy. This volume closes with the prince consort's life, so the whole work just covers a quarter of a century—that is to say, from 1837 to 1861. Queen Victoria was a woman of strong individuality and of decided preference and even prejudices. The object throughout the book has been to show the personality of the Queen, her method of approaching and deciding questions, her outlook, her sympathies, her shrewdness, her perseverance, and her diligence.

Standardized Sausage.

The Lancet (London) which ever loves to cast a keen eye on some homely detail of everyday life, such as poison in postage stamps or the nutritive value of Christmas puddings, this week devotes an article to the sausage. It admits that on the whole nowadays sausages are made with wholesome ingredients, "though," it says, "it is a common subject of jest, since it is so often regarded as a convenient vehicle for materials which, when undisguised, certainly do not appeal to us as being suitable or even wholesome for purposes of food."

In spite of this improvement the Lancet is not satisfied and demands "a standardized sausage," so as to prevent it from being loaded with a cheap substitute, which is nearly always bread or broken waste biscuits. This, The Lancet says, is a palpable fraud, as the sausage is looked upon as a meaty and not a farinaceous food. Moreover, the price is approximately that of meat. The Lancet, therefore, demands a legal, authoritative definition of a sausage.

SOWING AND REAPING

WE GATHER BLESSINGS SOWN BY FORMER GENERATIONS.

PLANT THAT OTHERS MAY REAP

Some Present-Day Blessings—Enjoyed As the Fruit of Other Men's Labors—A Magnificent Heritage—Epitaph of John Keats—Patriotic Martyrs—Seed Sowing For Spiritual Harvests—Reaping Is Sure.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 14.—In this sermon we learn the lesson that if we do our full duty to God and society much of our lives must be devoted to foundation laying and seed planting for the benefit of those to come after us. The text is John iv, 37, "One soweth, and another reapeth."

Christ is here describing a group of workmen going forth to their labors. Each laborer carries upon his arm a bag full of seed. They fill their hands with the seeds and begin to scatter them far and wide. Finally one of these laborers turns and says to Christ: "Why, Jesus, for what am I planting these seeds? I will never live long enough to gather the harvests in this world." "No," answers Christ, "I know it. But the coming generations will gather the harvest of your seed planting. As your ancestors planted seeds from which you are today gathering harvests, so you must plant seeds that your children and children's children may gather their harvests." In other words, the great lesson of this text is that "we ourselves may die and be forgotten, but our works shall live on, and other men may get the credit of the work." Come, let me read to you the text in full: "And herein is that saying true, one man soweth, and another reapeth."

Every generation builds upon the tombs and the catacombs of previous generations. This fact is emphatically true in both the scientific and the industrial world. It is true of the houses in which we live, and the railroad trains and steamboats in which we travel, and the food that we eat, and the clothing that we wear, and the electric lights by which we see, and the books that we read. It is true in almost all the industrial developments of life. It is also true that the men who made these industrial developments possible themselves, as a rule, got very little reward out of their inventions or improvements.

When Benjamin Franklin was making his electrical investigations, people used to laugh at him. One day he produced the proof that lightning and electricity are identical. Then the people again began to sneer and say, "Well, even if that is true, what is the good of the discovery?" "What is the use of a child?" answered Franklin. "It may yet become a man. This truth is now only in its infancy. You cannot foresee how it may be applied and into what power it may yet be developed." Did not the "child of electricity" grow into amazing strength? Long after the sage of Philadelphia was buried Galvani and Volta and Oersted and Joseph Henry and Faraday and Sir Humphry Davy and Gramme and Morse and Edison and Cyrus Field got to work, and with this far reaching truth discovered by Benjamin Franklin as a basis they developed power to run our street railways, and power to turn the wheels of factories, and power with which to scatter the darkness of the night, and power with which to send our messages under the seas. Could Benjamin Franklin awaken now from his grave truly he would not recognize the face of his "child of electricity." He planted the seed of electrical development, but others have garnered the harvests. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

Many years ago a poor Yale student who had a tendency to consumption was living in South Carolina in the home of the widow of General Nathanael Greene. While there he met some southern planters who were bemoaning the fact that the chief profit of the cotton industry was lost because no machine had yet been invented which could separate the cotton seeds from the cotton. Young Eli Whitney, for that was the Yale student's name, went to work and labored on month in and month out. He perfected the cotton gin, but before he could get a patent upon the invention the barn in which he had his workshop was broken open, and the machine was stolen, and his ideas were patented by other men. Eli Whitney, the man who has made millions of dollars for the south, the man who has doubled and quadrupled and infinitely increased the earning capacity of the southern plantations—poor Eli Whitney himself never got a dollar from his cotton gins save the poor pittance of $50,000 granted him by the legislature of South Carolina. Like Robert Fulton with his steamboat, like Morse with his telegraph wires, like Watt with his steam engine, like George Stephenson with his locomotive, like R. A. Holden, the agronomist, and Burbank, the wizard of flowers and vegetables, these men have been seed planters. They have made millions of dollars for other men; but, like Agassiz, they have not had time to make money for themselves. "One man soweth, and another reapeth." One generation plants the seeds of the industrial world, and another generation reaps the harvest.

Have you ever stopped to think how magnificent is the heritage in the industrial world you as a child fell heir to when you were born? Have you ever stopped to think of all the well built roads and the railroad tracks and all the lighthouses and aqueducts and sanitary developments which have come to you through your ancestors? How you have been served by the wise men and the greatest heroes of the world! Child of the twentieth century, how rich is the heritage on which you have entered! Men have thought and studied and toiled, and you are enjoying the fruit of their labors. Do you not realize that when John Gutenberg invented printing he was inventing it for you, and that when Columbus sailed across the seas he was discovering America for you, and that when Cyrus W. Field stretched his cables he was laying them for you, and that when Galilei developed the telescope he was developing it for you, and that when Isaac Newton discovered the law of specific gravity he was discovering it for you? All these men were seed planters. They were the giants who laid the foundation stones upon which the superstructures of our industrial prosperity have been erected. They themselves received very little personal benefit out of their seed planting, but they made millions of dollars for other men. The next generation reaped the harvest of their seed planting. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

This fact was powerfully illustrated in the life of one of my friends. In my Pittsburg church there was a family which for generations had produced bridge builders and contractors. The first member of that family who came to the western part of Pennsylvania was a contractor. His grandson, whom I knew well, was also a contractor. Some years ago this grandson of the first pioneer had a contract to build over or reconstruct a railroad bridge. As he dug down into the foundations to relay some of the old stones, much to his surprise he found there a tool chest marked with his own initials, "R. S." That tool chest could have belonged to but one person, and that his own grandfather after whom he had been named. One of his grandfather's men had forgotten and left his ~~tools there~~ when his grandfather built the original bridge. So when we begin to dig down into the foundations of our modern industrial prosperity we always find that our modern industrial life has been built out of the inventions and the discoveries of the generations that are dead and gone. Like the coral reef, we have been growing in a temporal sense. Our industrial prosperities are built upon the catacombs and the tombs of our ancestors. These former generations may have received but little personal benefit from their seed planting. We have reaped the rich harvest. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

Do you suppose there would ever have been a constitution of the United States unless there had first been a Bannockburn or a Beverly Manor House? John Witherspoon was only a reincarnation of a Sir William Wallace. Miles Standish and Israel Putnam may have lived 200 or 300 years apart, but they were twin brothers. Governor Carver and Governor Bradford spoke in the Continental congress through the lips of John Adams and Franklin. A man may seem to die, but his spirit never dies. It has its first incarnation, then its reincarnation, and then it lives in thousands of other lives. You see the doctrine of psychical heredity displayed in these national crises far apart in time and place. It is made up of the combinations of thousands and tens of thousands of heroic men who when they lived did not or could not dream of a country like that in which today we are living. These patriots in their own time received little personal benefit from their sacrifices. They were governmental seed planters. But the present generation and all succeeding generations shall be the gatherers of the harvest which they sowed. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

Many patriotic martyrs have died deaths of ignominy, but that does not prove that they lived and died in vain. No. From the blood soaked planks of the French guillotine has been lifted the glorious French republic. From the sacrifice of human life at Valley Forge, Bunker Hill and other fields have been evolved the mighty government of the United States to-day. In Rome there sleeps the immortal dust of one who has the following sad words for his epitaph: "This grave contains all that was mortal of a young English poet who on his deathbed, in the bitterness of his heart at the malicious power of his enemies, desired that these words be engraved on his tombstone: 'Here lies one whose name was written in water.'" That is the grave of the immortal John Keats. Did John Keats ever die? No. As an inspiration of his pen there have come forth two mighty poets who studied him intently as their model, Robert Browning and Alfred Tennyson. He lives. John Keats will always live in song. So there has been many a martyred patriot who thought he died an abject failure. But out of the death and the patriotic sacrifice of these heroes of the past has been evolved an ideal of conduct for all patriots of this and other nations. These patriotic martyrs gained little or no personal benefit. They were the seed planters. The present generation and succeeding generations will continue to gather in their cumulative harvests. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

What is true of the industrial world and the political life is true of the church and of our ecclesiastical and spiritual blessings. When the fire grate is always full of coal and the cupboard is always full of food and the wardrobe is always full of clothes, most of us accept the luxuries of life as the ordinary commonplaces. Then we wonder why any person will grumble about being cold or hungry. When we are born under the shadow of a church spire and are baptized at the church altars and we are sent to her Sunday schools and are invited to sit at her communion tables, we are very apt to believe that the church is like an indigenous plant that has always been here and that always will be here. Now, my friends, I want to tell you that the church of the Lord Jesus Christ was never planted anywhere successfully unless it was first planted there in blood soaked soil. The planters of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ were the heroes who were always looking for the harvests of the future and never living for their own personal benefit and reward.

Where did the American church come from? Did the first great explorers who came across the seas find the little white meeting houses in the centre of every Indian village and planted upon every hilltop and dotted here and there over the broad prairies of the west? "Oh, no!" you say. "It was only by the greatest sacrifices of Marquette and Eliot and Roger Williams and missionaries of such ilk that the church of Jesus Christ was ever planted upon American shores. Then after the churches were established in the east the backwoods preachers like Peter Cartwright and Havens and the daring missionaries like Bishop Whipple led on their cohorts of evangelists. Farther and farther west they carried the cross, and farther and farther west they went until at last that cross reached the Pacific coast. The Moravians penetrated into the snow and ice of the Arctic with the news, and by and by Sheldon Jackson lifted the cross and carried it far north amid the Alaska snows. So, step by step, the brave missionaries have struggled and starved and in many places have died consecrating with their bodies the land they had won." Yes, the American church came as the results of the humble sacrifice of thousands of obscure ministers of whom the world knows nothing.

Paul once asserted that in his work he was surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses. As we gather about our church altars to-day cannot we see the faces of the noble self sacrificing missionaries who have made such a church service as this a possibility? Are they not standing above this pulpit to-day? An eyewitness once declared that the most beautiful part of all Father Taylor's ministry was his intense realization of Christ's presence. The things he would say and do might have been irreverent in another, but in Taylor they seemed only evidence of Christ's reality. Sitting one Sunday at the Lord's table to administer the communion, he concealed the cup. Then in deeply solemn tone he said, "Children, I bring you a gift from Jesus, something to remind you of him." Then, his voice breaking, he said, "It is the wine of the covenant, his own blood shed for you, and he bids me say, 'Drink ye all of it.'" And he brought forward the cup, and, looking at it, he wept. Yes; all the good we enjoy has come to us as that wine by sacrifice. They lived their lives of sacrifice to give us this gospel sanctuary. We are to-day gathering in their ripened harvests. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

But we do not have to go alone into the past centuries to find the sowers. All those who have planted harvests for their fellow men are not to be found alone in the damp, dark cells of a Savonarola or a Huss. You remember well a seed planter who never wore a monk's cowl. Her face was wrinkled and her hair was white and her hands very thin when you last saw her. Her throne room was the nursery and the kitchen. Her realm was the old home of your boyhood. The world at large never thought that she amounted to much. She never had a large harvest. She was always sowing. She was sowing her life in the heart and brain of this child and that child and the other child. She had a good second in her sowing. That other sower was the husband who stood by her side. Indeed, they had so little that they always lived in a plain house and dressed in very plain clothes and ate very simple food and never went anywhere outside of their own little town. One day some years ago you began to be ashamed of their shabby clothes. The neighbors seemed to have so much better than they. You sharply said: "Mother, why don't you get a better dress? Why does not father move into a better house?" You remember just how she looked as she said: "Well, son, this dress is warm enough, and I guess the old house will do for pa and me. We cannot afford much better clothes and give you children all the education you ought to have. We are willing for you children to gather the harvests of our life's work. We do not care so much what becomes of us if you boys only turn out well. We are sowers, just humble sowers. You, my son, can reap, but your father and I will just keep on our sowing."

And can you not say those two old folks sowed well? Is not the result of their seed planting being reaped today in rich harvests by you and your brothers and sisters? All you are and have are the fruit of that home husbandry. Why did all your sisters and brothers turn out well? Shall these brothers and sisters get all the credit for the harvests they have reaped? "No, no," you answer. "We are nothing. We are merely the result of the seed planting of the two gospel sowers who lived and labored for us children back in the old farmhouse." In heaven to-day they are getting the rewards for the harvests you and your brothers and sisters are garnering. Your parents were sowers, glorious and triumphant sowers. You are gathering in their harvests. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

Now, my friends, as others have sowed for you, are you also sowing for your children? As the glorious men and women of the past have been seed planters that you might gather their harvests, are you willing to be seed planters that your friends and your loved ones and your children and your children's children may gather the fruit? In other words, are you willing to so submerge your life in Christ's that you will find your joy in the joys of others and your gospel triumphs in their salvation, although on earth your name may never get the credit or be linked with the harvests of those whom you have blessed? Are you willing to be a sower for the Master and, like him, to leave the fruit of your service and sacrifice for others to reap? Have you learned the meaning of those words in which he compared himself to a corn of wheat which bring no fruit until it is cast into the ground and dies? Are you ready to give yourself to service or to sacrifice, to lay down all for Jesus Christ, who himself was a seed planter and himself died in order that you might live?

Human Perversity.

If life were all one grand, sweet song
As poets wish that it might be,

Would still be singing off the key.

EYE STRAIN IN CHILDREN.

Is often neglected until permanent injury is done to one or both eyes. The parents often object to put glasses on their children, thinking as long as they can see apparently well there is nothing wrong; yet there may be a great deal of trouble present and the child have normal vision, with one or both eyes. I frequently find in children that one eye is of very little use to them, they have been doing all their work with one eye, and in most cases the parents or child did not know this until after consulting us. Some of the symptoms of E. S. in children: May be dull in studies; health may be below normal, redness of lids or twitching of same; the eyes may be hot and painful at times, scowling, or blinking, headache, etc. If any of these symptoms present themselves in your children, you had better bring them for free consultation, and find out before it is too late if anything is wrong.

Address and Presentation To Popular Railwayman.

MR. AND MRS. J. R. DONNELLY HANDSOMELY REMEMBERED BY THE FORMER'S FELLOW-EMPLOYEES IN THIS CITY—GOLD WATCH AND CABINET OF SILVER AS SOUVENIRS OF ESTEEM.

On Saturday evening the hall belonging to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen of this city who are connected with the Grand Trunk Railway system, was filled with ladies and gentlemen who had gathered for the purpose of witnessing a presentation. Mr. J. R. Donnelly, who has been for some time Master Mechanic of the company at Belleville, has been promoted to a higher position on the Canada Atlantic branch of the company's service, with headquarters at Ottawa. The esteem in which that gentleman and his partner in life are held by his fellow-employees here was attested by the handsome presents which were given them and the accompanying flattering address.

The proceedings were opened by Mr. Wm. Mair, a well-known engineer residing here, taking the chair. After a few well-chosen remarks by him, Messrs. T. M. Rainbird and G. J. Naylor came upon the platform and the former read an address, the latter making the presentations. To Mr. Donnelly a handsome gold watch was given and to Mrs. Donnelly a magnificent cabinet of silver, containing nearly 50 pieces. On the reverse side of the watch was the following inscription:

Presented to
J. R. Donnelly
By
G.T.R. Employees,
at Belleville Station
As a mark of their esteem,
April, 1907.

Upon a piece of the cabinet was a similar inscription bearing Mrs. Donnelly's name. The address was as follows:

THE ADDRESS.

To J. R. Donnelly, Esq., Master Mechanic G.T.R., Belleville, Ontario:

Dear Mr. Donnelly,—Your departure from Belleville, occasioned by your well-deserved promotion to a higher, more responsible and more remunerative position in the service of the Grand Trunk Railway Company than that you have occupied in Belleville, is the cause for our meeting here this evening.

As your fellow-employees, we desire to express to you our congratulations upon this signal mark of the company's appreciation of your skill, ability and devotion to duty, and also to convey to you an expression of our personal regard and esteem. While serving the company faithfully and well in your superintendence of the mechanical work at this station, you have shown, in a marked degree, that performance of duty to the company is quite consistent with consideration, kindness and good comradeship with the men serving under you and with you.

As a slight acknowledgment of our appreciation of your demeanor towards us in our daily intercourse for several years, and as a token of our friendship for you, we request you to accept the accompanying gold watch, which will serve to remind you of happy days spent in Belleville.

In our regret at parting with yourself we include Mrs. Donnelly, and as a slight evidence of our admiration and friendship for her we ask her to kindly accept the accompanying cabinet of silver.

We shall follow your career with much interest and we shall rejoice with you as future rewards are bestowed upon you.

Signed on behalf of all the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company at Belleville.

W. W. MAIR,
G. J. NAYLOR,
T. W. RAINBIRD,
Committee representing employees.
Belleville, Ontario, April 13, 1907.

Mr. Donnelly, who was evidently keenly affected, made a most appropriate reply, referring to his stay in Belleville and the good feeling existing between himself and fellow-employees. He thanked them most heartily on behalf of himself and Mrs. Donnelly for the handsome gifts, which would ever be cherished by them.

EX-MAYOR JOHNSON'S CONGRATULATIONS.

Ex-Mayor Johnson was next called upon, and in his opening remarks complimented Mr. Donnelly upon his deserved promotion. He also referred to Messrs. Robb and Kennedy, who formerly resided in this city, and who were now occupying prominent positions in the G.T.R. service. He said the old Grand Trunk Railway had served the country well and all should feel grateful for what it had done towards developing Canada. The railway had his warmest sympathy. The speaker said he was interested in railway matters owing to the fact that at present his son was engaged in a railway enterprise in China, a railway which would be in every respect modern and up-to-date. In conclusion he wished Mr. Donnelly every success in his new sphere of labor, and had no doubt he would succeed, as he was a man friendly to all, in fact, a good comrade.

The chairman then read a letter from Ald. Burrows, regretting his inability to be present to do honor to the guest of the evening.

The remainder of the evening's proceedings consisted of suitable vocal solos by Miss Annie Mair, Messrs. C. Pratt and H. McKay; recitation by Miss Jessie Tuite; piano duet by Miss A. Mair and Master T. Cushing, and a piano solo by the latter. Mr. R. Leitch played the accompaniments for the soloists.

Messrs. T. Collins and W. Logue moved and seconded a hearty vote of thanks to those who had assisted in the evening's entertainment.

After a few brief remarks by the chairman the proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and the National Anthem.

Lithgow and Black Declined to Come

COULD NOT SEE THEIR WAY CLEAR TO VOLUNTARILY ANSWER BURGLARY CHARGE IN BELLEVILLE, SO WATERTOWN POLICE TURNED THEM LOOSE.

Thos. Lithgow and John Black, the two Belleville boys arrested here on Jan. 26th, and taken to Watertown to stand their trial on charges of burglary alleged to have been committed there, have been discharged in the Watertown courts, says the Brockville Times. Chief Newton wired the Watertown officers to hold them if they would consent to be extradited to Belleville where they are wanted on similar charges. The prisoners would not consent and were allowed to go. The boys, it will be remembered, were landed here through their efforts to dispose of some stolen silverware to local jewellers. It turned out they had purloined a few pairs of socks belonging to a boarder at Antoine's Hotel and on this charge they were allowed to go on suspended sentence when arraigned in the police court. They were then turned over to a Watertown officer.

Gold-Headed Cane For Former Popular Prince Edward Man

The Republican, of Bethany, Mo., under date of March 28, contains an account of an incident which will be gratifying to many friends of the interested party in this district, of which he is a native. Judge George W. Wanamaker, now of Bethany, Mo., was presented by the lawyers of his court with a gold-headed cane, together with an address setting forth their appreciation of his services as a judge and admiration of him as a man. The judge's stenographer, Miss Tatt, was also presented with a silk umbrella. Judge Wanamaker is an old Prince Edward County boy, and his many friends in this district will rejoice to see that his lines have fallen in pleasant and appreciative places.

Two samples of well water were also sent and both were condemned.

LOOKING TO LAURIER

To Assert Canada's Claim Among the Younger Nations.

Morning Post Says Canada Has Rival—Australia Aspires to Leadership of the Colonies — Premier to Make Trade Arrangements With Continental Nations — Brodeur Goes to Russia—Conference Opens To-Day.

London, April 15.—(C. A. P.)—Yesterday morning Sir Wilfrid Laurier attended services at Westminster (R. C.) Cathedral, and afterwards motored around London for an hour or so, accompanied by Premiers Deakin, Ward and Lyne.

The Morning Post says that on the present occasion the Empire looks to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to reassert Canada's claim to the imperial hegemony among the younger nations in a positive, rather than a negative, direction, and adds that since 1902 a rival claimant to leadership has emerged from the southern seas.

It is stated that after the conference Sir Wilfrid goes to Paris and Rome, and expects to be away from Canada for three months.

The Premier expects, while in Europe, to make trade arrangements with several of the continental nations.

Going to Russia.

It is stated that Brodeur is going to Russia after the conference to study the Makharoff icebreakers.

Regarding imperial preference, The Standard hopes and believes a modus vivendi may be arrievd at. Premier Laurier will give away Elizabeth Maud, daughter of Governor Dunsmuir of British Columbia, who will be married on Monday to John Hope, son of the registrar of the Privy Council, at St. Mark's, North Audley street.

The Times' Views.

The Times, referring to the conspicuously important conference, says the issue lies between the severance of partnership.

"At the present rate, of colonial development, the colonies must leave us unless we reconstruct the imperial machinery," it says. The Times looks for the most fruitful progress in the present conference on the question of regularizing it as a nucleus for full imperial consultation.

The conference opens at 11.30 today, when Premier Campbell-Bannerman will give an address of welcome.

CABLE DISPATCHES.

A New Guessing Game That Will Furnish a Pleasant Hour.

A certain man went to Europe, leaving his family at home. He was either too indolent or too busy to write often. But he could not afford to cable lengthy dispatches, so he wrote his wife that he would condense each cablegram into a single word by using only initial letters. The first message he sent was B R O W N. While he was congratulating himself upon outwitting the cable company by sending five words in one, the family at home were distracted over their varying interpretations of the message. His daughter thought it meant "Bought ring on Wednesday night" and began guessing just what kind of a ring it was. His wife in her anxiety read it: "Big rain—out—wet—neuralgia." Other guesses at the intended meaning differed quite as widely.

In playing the game any word may be used instead of "Brown." Let the leader, who is supposed to be the traveler, announce the word, keeping the meaning to himself, and let each player write his guess of the intended meaning on a slip of paper. If there are prizes, the one who offers the nearest guess wins. The game may be varied by supposing that the message is sent to mother or son or to wife or to business partner or from some particular city, as London, Rome or Jerusalem.

ENGINE WRECKS AUTO.

Several Tourists Injured at Crossing Near Savannah.

Savannah, Ga., April 15.—A sightseeing automobile containing eight or ten tourists, while returning from "The Hermitage," a few miles from Savannah, was struck by an engine hauling three cars at a crossing of the Central of Georgia on Saturday, and the following were injured:

Mrs. E. A. Hitchcock, Burton, Ohio, aged 80 years; Miss Annie C. Hitchcock, hurt internally; Mrs. Mary T. Rourke of Brooklyn, N. Y. Helen R. McManimy, a sister of Mrs. Rourke, was seated with the driver, who pitched her on the tender of the engine, and she escaped unhurt. Miss Hitchcock and Mrs. Rourke may be fatally injured.

Lester Lukens, the chauffeur, and Charles Anderson, the lecturer on the car; R. E. Wallace, engineer of the train; W. E. Jackson, colored, fireman, and George Hubert, the crossing watchman, are under arrest, and are held without bail. The police are searching for the flagman.

Peary's Polar Dash.

Portland, Me., April 15.—Speaking of his forthcoming attempt to find the North Pole, Commander Peary on Saturday said he expected to arrive among the ice-fields the middle of July.

His equipment, he said, would be practically the same as on his recently completed expedition. He will buy 200 dogs when he arrives in Greenland.

He anticipates that the trip might be made in about the same length of time as the 1905 trip, which required about 16 months.

He will follow the same route as on his last attempt.

New Citizens Pour In.

Winnipeg, April 15.—Fully 1,000 British immigrants arrived during Saturday night, almost rivalling the record of last week-end, when 1,300 people arrived.

SIR WILFRID ARRIVES

Premier Laurier Receives Hearty Welcome in England.

Met By Canadians—Declines to Discuss State Affairs—Voyage Not Pleasant, But Stood It Fairly Well—Three Royal Blue Carriages Awaited the Party—All In Good Spirits—May Visit Paris.

Liverpool, April 15.—(C. A. P.)—Before 9 a.m. on Saturday a number of Canadians from Liverpool and London were present at the landing stage, expecting the Empress of Britain to land her passengers, but it was two hours or more after the Lucania passengers landed that the Empress passengers disembarked. Among the Canadians at the landing stage were W. L. Griffiths, representing Lord Strathcona; Ald Jury, Clifford Sifton and Captain Kingsmill.

Mr. Barker, secretary of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, was present for the purpose of renewing an invitation to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to visit Liverpool. The Lord Mayor of Liverpool welcomed Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Declined Interviews.

Also, some score of press representatives attempted to interview Sir Wilfrid, who, while exceedingly cordial, declined to say anything only that what he had to say would be said at the conference.

The voyage, said Sir Wilfrid, speaking to the Canadian Associated Press, was not what could be called a pleasant one, but still he stood it fairly well, as did also Lady Laurier. Sir Frederick Borden enjoyed the voyage capitally. All are in good spirits, and eager for the fray.

Three royal blue carriages were supplied by the railway for the Laurier party, and Lady Grey's party.

It is said Sir Wilfrid will visit Paris, but many engagements have yet to be decided upon.

Premier Laurier and his party arrived in London Saturday evening and were met at the railroad station by the Earl of Elgin, Secretary for the Colonies; Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, the Canadian high commissioner, and other officials.

Canadian Products.

The Liverpool Daily Post understands Laurier and his colleagues will enquire into the effectiveness of the organization established in Britain for placing Canadian products on the British markets.

CHEER GEN. BOTHA.

Premier of Transvaal Welcomed to England by Crowds.

London, April 15.—(C. A. P.)—Gen. Botha, ex-commander-in-chief of the Boer army, and now first Premier of the Transvaal colony under British rule, arrived here Saturday to attend the conference of colonial Premiers. The reception accorded the general at Southampton and in London was remarkably hearty. Great crowds cheered him wherever he appeared. At Southampton he was officially welcomed by the mayor and corporation of that city, and in reply to the address Gen. Botha humorously referred to the previous occasion when, on the battlefield, he had been surrounded by Englishmen against his will. The general added that he was thankful now that he was in a position to allow himself to be surrounded by any number of Englishmen without fear of the consequences.

EDWARD AND EMMANUEL.

Will Meet On Thursday Next At Gaeta—Grand Naval Review.

Rome, April 15.—It was officially announced yesterday that King Edward and King Victor Emmanuel will meet on April 18 at Gaeta. As Queen Alexandra will accompany King Edward, it is expected that Queen Helena will also go to Gaeta.

A grand naval review will be held in the Gulf of Gaeta, the British and Italian sovereigns inspecting from on board their respective yachts the assembled British and Italian squadrons of warships, after which King Victor Emmanuel will entertain the visitors at luncheon on board the Italian royal yacht, Trinacria.

HEAVY SENTENCE FOR JONES.

Man Who Tried to Blow Up Hamilton Steel Co. Goes to Pen.

Hamilton, April 15.—Sidney Jones, the Englishman arrested at the Polson Iron Works, Toronto, for attempting to blow up the boilers at the Queen street plant of the Hamilton Steel and Iron Company, appeared before the police magistrate on Saturday morning and was sentenced to two years and six months in Kingston penitentiary.

Killed By Car.

Hamilton, April 15.—At about 11 o'clock last night a Radial car ran over the body of an unknown man at the Beach, near station No. 4. On being picked up, it was found he had sustained shocking injuries, both legs and one arm being completely taken off. He was conveyed to the City Hospital, where he died shortly after admission, and now lies awaiting identification.

$80,000 Fire.

Dalhousie, N. B., April 15.—The Restigouche Wood-Working Co.'s factory caught fire late Saturday evening and was burned to the ground.

A very large quantity of manufactured lumber stored in the building was destroyed. The loss is about $80,000; insurance about $40,000.

Men and a fire engine were sent from Campbellton.

Train Wreck at Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, April 15.—The Great Northern Express, which left here last evening at 5.20, was wrecked at a switch near the west yards of the C. N. R., inside the city limits.

Four cars and the locomotive were badly damaged, but no one was hurt.

"SNAPPED" THE VICTIMS.

Kodak Fiends Pointed Lenses at the Burning Wreck.

Toronto, April 15.—A commercial traveler, E. M. Kane, of this city, was a passenger for Winnipeg when the C. P. R. train war wrecked near Chapleau. Beyond the loss of his baggage, which was burnt, he does not appear to have suffered, but the gruesome sights he witnessed in the death agonies of those who perished in and under the burning cars will never be effaced from his memory.

He said: "The doors had become jammed with the shock and in any event were harder to get at than the windows, which we promptly smashed and climbed out by means of the seats. It was only about two minutes until I was out of the car, and the first thing I saw was the fire, which even then had entirely enveloped the colonist car. In fact, in less than ten minutes the whole car was practically consumed.

"The most marvelous escape was that of the baggageman on the burnt baggage car. This car rolled over twice, and the baggage with which it was filled was smashed all around him, and yet he escaped with a crushed hand.

"An action which was commented upon as being most heartless was that of a couple of kodak fiends from the Pullman car, who took photographs of the fire while it was going on, and the spectacle of these cold-blooded artists focussing their instruments on the parts of the wreck under which the poor victims were pinned were most revolting."

LORD NEVILL GOES DOWN.

Swindled Pawnbroker Out of $2,000—Gave Coal For Jewels.

London, April 15.—At the Clerkenwell sessions on Saturday Lord Wm. Nevill was found guilty of the charge of swindling a pawnbroker and was sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

Lord William Nevill is the fourth son of the Marquis of Abergavanny. He was sentenced to five years' penal servitude on Feb. 15, 1898, for fraud in connection with a promissory note, the prosecutor being Captain Spender-Clay, who in 1904 married Pauline Astor, daughter of Wm. Waldorf Astor.

The crime for which Lord William was sentenced was stealing from a pawnbroker a box containing $2,000 worth of jewelry, by exchanging it for a similar box, apparently containing the jewels, but which, when opened, was found to contain two pieces of coal wrapped in tissue paper.

Many fashionable women attended the trial. Lord Nevill, who was stylishly dressed, bore himself with composure.

The judge, in pronouncing sentence, said he should treat the case as that of any other prisoner, and would give him the same sentence as he would a workingman.

NEW CRUISER LAUNCHED.

"Invincible" One of a Trio of the Largest In the World.

Newcastle, April 15.—The British armored cruiser Invincible was launched on Saturday from the Elswick shipyard.

She is one of the trio of largest cruisers in the world, of which the first, the Indomitable, was launched March 16.

Under the admiralty order the greatest secrecy was observed, in order to prevent any details regarding the new warship leaking out.

Her dimensions are the same as those of the Indomitable, namely, she is 17,250 tons, is 530 feet long, exceeding the older armored cruisers by 50 feet; has turbine engines and is expected to attain the high speed of 25 knots an hour.

The armament of these three cruisers includes eight 12-inch guns, almost equaling the main battery of the Dreadnought.

ANOTHER WRECK ON C. P. R.

Three Passengers Injured, But No Lives Were Lost.

Ottawa, April 15.—Another wreck occurred on the C. P. R. on Saturday, five miles west of Arnprior.

It happened to the Winnipeg express, westward bound, about 4.20 a. m. Five of the passenger cars left the track.

It is said to be due to a broken or spread rail.

Three men were injured, but none of them said to be in a serious condition. They are: John McBride and Charles Burn, laborers, Montreal, and George Belanger.

The accident took place near a bend in the road overlooking the Ottawa River. Had it taken place at the bend the cars would have rolled down the embankment into the river.

Attacked by Laborers.

Rochester, N. Y., April 15.—Fifteen Italian laborers employed on the New York Central Railroad refused to obey orders of Foreman Frank Adams Saturday and attacked him with picks and shovels. The men were working near Geneva. Adams escaped to the commissary house, where he secured a revolver and opened fire. Joe Lombard was shot in the breast bone and fell, his companions fleeing. He will probably die. Adams was struck over the head and severely cut.

Electrocuted at 'Phone.

Marlboro, Mass., April 15.—While sitting at a telephone in her home here Saturday night, Miss Anna Greenwood, aged 29 years, fell dead.

It is thought that as she took the telephone receiver from its hook she turned the button of an electric lamp, which was above the instrument, and that her body thus formed a connection between the light and telephone circuit.

Blizzard Stops Shipping.

Escanaba, Mich., April 15.—As a result of a steady blizzard for two days, all ore-shipping operations at the Escanaba docks are suspended. Ore in the deck pockets is frozen solid. Notwithstanding the docks are filled with boats, not a pound of ore has been run in two days. The temperature is close to zero.

Welcomed By The King

Colonial Conference Officially Opened in London Yesterday

Earl of Elgin Presides At Gathering of Premiers--Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman Spoke For British Government--Cabinet Ministers Attended--Sessions Will Be Private--To Last a Month.

London, April 16.—At the opening of the Colonial Conference Lord Elgin read a telegram from King Edward welcoming the Premiers and expressing a wish for the success of the Conference. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman followed, welcoming officially on behalf of the Government the Premiers, and the King's telegram was answered in turn by each of them. After the official welcome the British Cabinet Ministers withdrew, and the conference proceeded to discuss the future course of business. It was decided that Ministers other than Prime Ministers and their secretaries should be admitted to the conference; it was also decided that in future meetings of the conference the press would not be admitted. The Canadian Associated Press understands that no decision has been arrived at as to how far future proceedings will be made public, when the conference adjourned.

Reporters Excluded.

London, April 16.—The fourth conference between the Premiers of Great Britain's self-governing colonies and the British Colonial Secretary was opened yesterday at the Colonial Office under the presidency of the Earl of Elgin, Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Reporters are not admitted to the conference, so the public will have to be contented with strictly censored official summaries of each day's proceedings until a blue book on the conference is issued, months after its final adjournment.

The Premiers present included Dr. Jameson, of Cape Colony; General Louis Botha, Premier of the Transvaal; Alfred Deakin, the Australian Premier; Sir Joseph O. Ward, Premier of New Zealand; Frederick R. Moor, Premier of Natal, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Premier of Canada. Premier Sir Robert Bond, of Newfoundland, will arrive in the middle of the week. The Premiers were accompanied by their advisers. A number of British Cabinet Ministers attended the morning session.

Premier Campbell-Bannerman opened the proceedings with a speech of welcome in which he outlined the subjects for discussion, such as preferential trade between the colonies and Great Britain and among the colonies themselves, a project providing for a permanent council. Imperial defence schemes and immigration, with minor questions, like penny postage, naturalization laws. The Premier earnestly expressed the hope that the deliberations would have useful results. Each of the colonial Premiers made a brief reply, after which the conferees discussed the procedure and adjourned. Meetings will be held three times a week and they are expected to last at least a month.

Laurier Opposed Publicity.

Premier Campbell-Bannerman's speech yesterday was largely composed of generalities. He only touched lightly on the subject of tariff preferences which to the colonial representatives is the most important matter to come before the conference and one on which they hope an agreement will be reached satisfactory to all parties concerned.

In regard to the decision not to admit reporters to the daily sessions, it is stated that the colonial representatives were as a rule in favor of publicity, but the Home Government was opposed to it, and it is understood that Premier Laurier supported the home officials in this matter.

INTIMATE FOR SOME TIME.

Witness Who May Give Damaging Evidence In Stratford Case.

Stratford, April 16.—The cause of the death of Marriett Dewing still remains unsolved. The statement was made yesterday on good authority that Mrs. Dewing was dead before her body was burned.

It has been stated further that Koeller was intimate with Mrs. Dewing many months before the time he stated that he first met her, namely, two weeks before her death. A witness may be produced to show that he had been in her company some weeks previous to the tragedy.

The hatchet which had flesh clinging to it was used for cutting pork. There was no injury to skull or brain revealed at the post-mortem. Nevertheless, it is understood that the crown is in the possession of some important facts for the inquest tonight.

R. T. Harding, who has been retained to defend Koeller, says he would not have taken the case if he believed Koeller guilty.

Seven New Cardinals.

Rome, April 16.—Pope Pius X. held a secret consistory yesterday in the Vatican and created seven new cardinals as follows:

Mgr. Cavinari, Patriarch of Venice.

Mgr. Rinaldini, Papal Nuncio to Spain.

Mgr. Lorenzelli, ex-Papal Nuncio at Paris.

Mgr. Lualdi, Archbishop of Palermo.

Mgr. Mercier, Archbishop of Malines.

Mgr. Maffi, Archbishop of Pisa.

Mgr. Aguirrey Garcia, Bishop of Burgos, Spain.

Limitation of Armaments.

Rome, April 16.—From the exchange of official communications between them, it is apparent that Germany, Austria and Russia are unanimous concerning the question of the limitation of armaments at The Hague conference, and that they will permit of a discussion of the question, but not participate in it, not considerng the proposition a practical one.

WRECKERS DITCH TRAIN.

Five Killed, Twenty Injured—Gas Sets Debris on Fire.

St. Paul, Minn., April 16.—While running 40 miles an hour, the Great Northern, westbound oriental limited, which left here for Pacific coast points Sunday morning was derailed early yesterday at Bartlett, N. D.

Five persons were killed and a score or more injured, some of them seriously.

After the wreck, a gas tank exploded and the train took fire, seven passenger coaches being destroyed.

The sleeper and observation coaches escaped the flames.

There is said to be some evidence that the rails had been tampered with.

Officials of the road say that the track in this vicinity had been in apparently first-class condition.

They are unable to account for the wreck on any other theory than it was an attempt of miscreants to wreck the train.

The dead are: W. B. Jones, mail clerk, Grand Forks; four unidentified foreigners, believed to be Greeks.

The wreck occurred on the line dividing Nelson and Ramsey Counties. The mail car jumped clear over the engine and landed in Ramsey County, while the remainder of the wrecked train burned in Nelson County.

Many thrilling escapes and numerous acts of heroism occurred.

Though Mail Clerk Jones was killed his body was recovered by Mail Clerk Fodness, who entered the burning mail car three times to do so. Fodness was severely burned.

News Agent W. H. Green of St. Paul worked bravely in rescuing injured and helping those in the wreckage, although he himself was badly hurt.

One Dead; Ten Hurt.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 16.—Gueseppe Gaspire was killed and ten other Italian laborers were injured in a collision between construction trains on the new Philadelphia and Western Railroad last night, just outside the city limits.

BRITISH STEAMER FOUNDERS.

Three of Her Crew Are Landed at Gibralter.

Gibraltar, April 16.—The British steamer Andalusia from Swansea, for Barcelona, foundered April 14, off the Spanish coast.

Her captain, first officer and a sailor were picked up and brought here. All the rest of the crew are believed to have been drowned.

The Andalusia was of 1,212 tons net, 287.0 feet long; had 34.3 feet beam, and was 24.6 feet deep. She was built at Newcastle in 1878, and was owned by the Iberian Steamship Co., Limited.

Another Fire at McGill.

Montreal, April 16.—The medical building of McGill University was destroyed by fire this morning.

The loss will be very heavy.

Freight Off Track.

St. John, N. B., April 16.—An eastbound freight ran off the track near Harcourt yesterday, smashing four cars to atoms.

No one was hurt, but the cars sustained much damage.

Rabbit Fires a Gun.

An extraordinary incident occurred close to the village of Milton, near Newport Pagnell, in Wales. A commercial traveler while driving along the road stopped to speak to two gentlemen who were shooting rabbits alongside the hedge. One of the gentlemen laid his gun on the ground while he placed a ferret in a hole. A rabbit bolting at this moment ran over the triggers of the loaded gun, which it released with its feet, the traveler having a very narrow escape.

A reward of $10,000 is offered for information in regard to the whereabouts of four-year-old Horace Marvin, who disappeared from his father's house at Denver, Delaware, some months ago, and though the police of the United States have been appealed to, and govermental aid invoked, no trace of him has been found. The case recalls that of 'Charley' Ross, who, in 1876, disappeared in somewhat like manner from his parents' house in Philadelphia, never to be heard of again alive or dead. There are pitiful tragedies in life as curious as the novelist ventures to devise.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Frederick Borden and Mr. Brodeur are now in England at the Colonial Conference. As Mr. Emmerson's place has not been filled and Mr. Hyman is still away, the great spending departments are now in the hands of acting ministers who know little of the business. Mr. Fielding has the railway department in addition to finance. Mr. Fisher is Minister of Public Works, as well as Agriculture. The venerable Senator Scott is Minister of War. Mr. Templeman adds the Marine Department to Inland Revenue and Mines. We have, therefore, the estimates of these great spending departments before Parliament with no minister to explain how money has been expended or for what purposes the appropriations are required.

"A Citizen" writes thus in regard to a matter of deep interest to Belleville people:

"Dear Sir, — The authority requested by the City Council from the Legislature, at the instance of a petition representing considerably more than half the assessed value of the city's real estate, to grant a fixed assessment upon a new Hotel Quinte and a fixed amount for a supply of water for a term of 15 years, has been granted, and it now simply remains for the Council to pass the necessary By-law.

"There is a rumor abroad that some members of the Council, while willing to grant the fixed assessment on the property, are unwilling to grant that portion of the petition which asks that the charge for water be fixed at $100 a year for fifteen years; and there is another rumor to the effect that if Council refuses this concession the Hotel Quinte will not be rebuilt.

"Few people think that the fixing of the assessment of the hotel at $10,000 a year for 15 years is unreasonable, for the very good reason that unless such a concession is granted the hotel would never be rebuilt by anybody. It is admitted that no manufacturing enterprise we could induce to locate here could surpass in value to the trade and prestige of the city what a new and enlarged Hotel Quinte would prove to be. To secure any industry at all comparable to the hotel we would certainly be glad to make such an arrangement.—It is likely that we would be asked to do more than merely grant a fixed assessment upon buildings that would not exist but for the capitalists locating here, and such demand would likely be in the way of low price for water. Mr. Jenkins will have to create the hotel in order that we may be in a position to assess it at all. He takes the commercial risk, which is no slight one, the city takes no risk, and is absolutely sure of advantages from Mr. Jenkins' enterprise to an extent that no man can compute.

"The only question to decide is the proposal to grant water to the new hotel at the rate of $100 a year for fifteen years. It will not cost more than $100 a year to furnish it. How much more? It will not cost any more to supply the water in several respects; no additional plant will be needed; no extra men will be required; the only increase in cost will be in the extra fuel. Probably the service would necessitate extra coal to the extent of 125 tons a year—say at a cost of $500. The hotel paying $100 of this amount would leave the cost to the city of Belleville of the new Quinte Hotel just $400 a year. for fifteen years, or one-tenth of a mill upon the assessment, which means 10c added to the taxes of a man assessed for $1000. What citizen would refuse to aid in the establishment of the new Quinte Hotel at the cost of 10c a year on each thousand dollars of his assessment?"

Some Toronto lawyers have been saying that Thaw would not have much chance in Canada. It is hard to say. The Ottawa Citizen indulges in the following: "A gentleman who has spent some time in the places in question says he would prefer Belleville to Kingston as a place of residence, but better than either is Brockville. Belleville, he says, has some attractive women. Brockville more; but in this respect Ottawa is entitled to first place. This estimate of the relative merits of the three Eastern Ontario towns and cities may be questioned by the press of the respective places; but the good judgment evidenced by the estimates in his opinion of Ottawa ladies proves his competence."

If the gallant Major Morrison, editor of The Citizen, is so enthusiastically ready to confirm the judgment of his anonymous friend in regard to the beauty and attractiveness of Ottawa ladies, why, oh! why, is he still a bachelor? ALLEGED OBSTRUCTION.

H. Leverton was charged before the Magistrate to-day with obstructing certain streets in the city. The charge arose out of the frame building which was being moved from one portion of the city to another. For some days, it is alleged, nothing has been done towards moving the structure, hence the complaint. It appears that there is some difference between Leverton, the party engaged to move the house, and other parties who are interested in the building. Mr. Carnew, who appeared for Leverton, said he had advised his client not to move the building any further, as he had fulfilled his part of the contract. Mr. Mikel appeared on behalf of the city and Mr. J. F. Wills for the co-defendants. After some argument on behalf of counsel the case was enlarged until to-morrow afternoon, Mr. Mikel contending he was not prepared to proceed.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

CHARLES N. SULMAN

Daily Intelligencer.

The Minister Of Justice.

George Fowler, the member for King's, has thrown down the gauntlet to those who caused to be inserted in the insurance commission report a clause charging him with the misappropriation of funds. He defies anyone to lay a formal charge, but Hon. A. B. Aylesworth and the others who were so deeply interested in the instruction of that report have been stricken mute on the question. Mr. Aylesworth characterized some of these Conservative members with being in the class with bank thieves "doing time" in the penitentiary.

Isn't that creditable language for a minister of justice to use, particularly when the statements are steeped in falsehood? asks the Woodstock Express. It is a standing disgrace to Canada that reputable public men should be slandered through the cloak of an insurance commission by a man who as minister of justice defies the principles that should constitute his duties?

Mr. Aylesworth's whole career as minister of justice has been contrary to the rules of honesty and decency, and his removal from office would be in the best interests of the judiciary of this land. He has burked all endeavors to clear up wrong-doing, and has contributed, as has just been pointed out, in slandering Conservative members maliciously and dishonestly.

Conduct such as this should not be tolerated by the house. Mr. Aylesworth's removal from public life would in no sense be a loss to Canada. His whole political career has been characterized by unfitness, and even Sir Wilfrid has been disappointed in the man of whom he expected so much.

The insurance report will cost the country in the neighborhood of $105,000, and this in itself is scandalous. Had the work of the commission been fruitful of good results, had it been productive of valued reforms to our insurance laws, then the expense would have been justified, but the while report has been steeped in political influence, and some of its parts are in the form of darts aimed at the good names and honest purposes of some of the government's political opponents.

Is that just? Is it in compliance with the laws of British freedom? The cost of the commission should be vigorously opposed, for it is nothing more or less than a contribution to the Liberal election funds.

Mr. Wm. Dean and daughter, Miss Lillie, accompanied by Mr. Arthur Jenkins while driving to Belleville on Saturday, met with a narrow escape. One of the colts got frightened at the train near Canifton and tried to get loose by breaking the neck yoke and turning several times in the harness, but was got under control by the skilful driver, who, after quieting the colt down drove on his way to Belleville without any very serious damage being done.

Chronic Constipation

BILEANS A CERTAIN CURE.

"I had chronic constipation for five years," says Mrs. M. O'Byrne, of Agnes St., Toronto. "It brought on headaches and dizzy bouts, and robbed me of health and vitality. I spent a lot of money in trying various useless remedies. At last I tried the right one—Bileans—and they cured me."

One of the finest scientific papers in the world (Science Siftings), says of Bileans in this connection: "They cure constipation without causing griping, and do not cause after-constipation, as other purgatives do."

Piles, debility, anemia, indigestion, biliousness, heartburn, headache, and female ailments all disappear before a short course of Bileans. All druggists and stores at 50 cents or Bilean Co., Toronto, for price.

Watches for Midgets.

Lindsay Post: The Stratford Midgets are to be presented with gold watches in token of the appreciation in which they are held by the citizens of the Classic City. No less appreciative are Lindsay citizens, and our runners-up will be made the recipients of gold chronometers also. A liberal collection was taken up around town recently, and Mr. Hughan, jeweller, was in Toronto yesterday securing suitable watches to present to the local seven.

By a coincidence, at the time Mr. Hughan was purchasing the presents for the Lindsay Midgets, the Stratford man was also laying in a stock of timepieces for the more fortunate western Midgets. The watches purchased are almost identical, the only difference being that the Stratford "clocks" have hunting cases, while those intended for the Lindsay boys are open-faced. The presentation will take place next Wednesday night.

ATHLETICS.

Fine Athlete Leaves Ottawa.

Ottawa Citizen: Alf. Smith leaves this afternoon for Chicago, where he will reside in the future. Alf. has signed with the Chicago lacrosse team and will manage it. The team will enter in the most important lacrosse league on the American side and Alf. besides managing the twelve will play on it, figuring at outside home in all probability. Alf. played that position for the Capitals a few years ago and had few equals when he was in his prime. He will also play hockey at Chicago, which city, in all probability, will be in the international league next year, competing against Pittsburg Calumet, Portage Lake and the Soos. Alf. is also to have charge of the Chicago hockey team. He is not at all likely to return to Ottawa.

Alf's departure means that Ottawa loses one of its best football backs, as well as the greatest right wing playing hockey. His loss will be felt particularly by the Ottawa hockey team. Smith leaves at 4 p.m., going to Montreal and entraining from there to-morrow morning. There is a rumor that other Ottawa athletes are to play lacrosse and hockey with Smithy at Chicago. It is said that Harry Westwick may cross the border for the winter, but Westwick as yet has made no arrangements.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Rev. Mr. Philp, of Arnprior, himself a prominent athlete of an earlier date, addressing his congregation the other night on the subject of brutality in sport, said although he fully recognized and appreciated the value of sports and was in full sympathy with games, especially outdoor games, yet he thought that sport, especially hockey, for the last few years had had too large a place in many a life. His thought was that we were passing through a sort of craze for sport, and that this craze like many another craze was more or less contagious. In his hand Mr. Philp held a picture of a Mexican bull fight. There were many witnesses of the fight, many of them women, which led the preacher to recall the shock felt a short while ago when one of the royal blood of England became united to the Spanish king and witnessed a Spanish bull fight. The picture showed three gladiators and one bull in the arena, but Mr. Philp thought the picture did not exhibit more of brutality than had been put before the people of Canada in the newspapers in connection with hockey. In that picture three gladiators were after one beast; it was not one young man rushing after an opponent to slay him with a hockey stick. The question arises, What is our duty? We think the duty of the private individual is to stay away from all match games. If you think of this matter as I do, there would not be three persons present at a match game in Arnprior. We think it is the duty of the hockey associations to make such rules as will terminate the brutality that is a disgrace to our civilization, and if this is not done speedily then it should be the duty of the Legislature to legislate against it as against prize fighting.

Married In Dungannon.

LLOYD — SMITH.

The home of Mrs. John Smith, of Egan Creek, township of Dungannon, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday, April the 10th, when her second daughter, Mary Liddie, was united in marriage to Mr. A. H. Lloyd, of Holloway.

At 4 o'clock sharp the Rev. J. W. Mitchell, M.A., of Bancroft, who officiated, took his place in the parlor immediately in front of a beautiful arch of evergreens which was handsomely decorated. The groom then proceeded from the chamber to the parlor, followed by the groomsman and bridesmaid, who took their places under the arch; the bride then followed leaning upon the arm of her eldest brother, William, carrying in her hand a bouquet of white carnations and took her place beside the groom. The bride and bridesmaid looked charming dressed in gowns of white silk trimmed with lace and wearing white shoes. Miss Amelia Moore, of the Ontario Business College, Belleville, cousin of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and Mr. W. H. Cook, of Harold, supported the groom. After congratulations were given the bride and groom, all were invited to the dining hall where a sumptuous repast was partaken of. In spite of the inclemency of the weather and bad condition of the roads, about sixty guests were present and enjoyed themselves in music, games and recitations. The bride was the recipient of some handsome purses of cash and other numerous and useful gifts. On the following evening a reception was given the happy couple by Mrs. Lloyd, of Holloway, mother of the groom, when about forty guests assembled at her home and awaited the arrival of the wedding party from the north. After the wedding party had arrived, all were invited to the dining-room where tables were spread with all the dainties that could be wished for. The bride and bridegroom received a number of useful gifts, and the merry laughter expressed the good time enjoyed by all. —Com.

For the Future.

The secret of happiness is inward. People had good times when there were no friction matches, no brilliantly illuminated streets, no steamboats or railroads, no sewing machines, no postage stamps, no comfortably heated homes, no telegraphs or trolleys. The elements of happiness are not in things, but in human nature itself. But the fairer conditions, the greater opportunities, which the marvelous modern inventions afford to the masses of our humanity should augment our joy and expand our hopes. The most obvious fact of human history is that of progress. The race is following a flying and a growing ideal. It is inspired and saved by hope. Every helpful invention, every improvement of sanitary conditions, every new ray of intellectual and spiritual illumination, every scientific achievement, every amelioration of physical suffering, every new avenue of enjoyment, every victory of righteousness, every faithful deed in lowly and lofty places, increases the splendor and the power of our vision of the future.—Leslie's Weekly.

All the failures are sure they would be successful if only they could start at the top.

Mark the line where your skirt is to be turned either by basting thread or use the line of chalk already marked if you have measured it by a skirt gauge. Put the bottom of your skirt into the machine, right side of goods up, before crossing the hem.

Lay the braid along on the part that is to be turned under, letting one edge always touch the marked line. Stitch it on the other edge, which you can do simply by holding it as you sew and without basting or pinning. When the hem is turned up the braid is in place and stitched at the top edge.

If liked better to be fastened at both edges stitch twice, once near the marked line.

A little more intricate is sewing braid on in a roll. Get a bit of goods and braid and mark the turning line with a pencil for a sample, as it will save the time needed to work it out later on to have both the sample and directions pinned to a blank page in your sewing book. Lay the braid along the marked line just opposite from the way you did before. It will lie up on the skirt this time instead of down. Stitch it along the marked line, slipping it down just a hairbreadth, so that your stitching will come just below the basting thread. When stitched turn the braid down, but not the cloth. You will have to baste it this time, as pressing it over would make it flat instead of in a "roll." Stitch it again at the bottom edge, and when the hem of the dress is turned up it leaves the roll at the bottom.

A TASTY SALAD.

Grape Fruit Mixed With Celery, Apple and Banana.

A delicious and unusual salad is made of celery and grape fruit.

Cut the inner and crispest stalks of celery into half inch lengths. Skin a banana and cut it into neat cubes. Do the same with a tender tart apple. (A "snow apple" would be good for this purpose.) Have ready a couple of halved grape fruit, from which you have removed all the pulp so carefully that you have not torn the skin of either half.

Cut the pulp taken from one of the halves into small pieces in size corresponding to the apple and banana dice.

Put all these into a chilled bowl and set on the ice or in a very cold place for half an hour. You do not need to be reminded that the mayonnaise should be made first of all and left out in the cold while you are preparing the rest of the ingredients.

The emptied halves of the grape fruit should lie in ice (cracked) until you are ready to make ready for serving.

Then empty, wipe and fill them with the fruit mixture as soon as you have poured the mayonnaise into the bowl and tossed the contents up lightly with a silver fork to insure thorough incorporation of fruit and dressing.

Put a half teaspoonful of the mayonnaise on the top of each portion of fruit and serve the filled skins upon small plates.

NURSERY NOTES.

Don't pick the baby up every time it cries.

Never force a baby to sit up. It will sit up of its own accord when its spine and muscles are strong enough.

The baby's stomach is intended for food and drink. Avoid therefore giving medicines unless they are actually needed.

Never lift a baby by its arms, but under the arms. A child's arm is very easily dislocated, and lifelong injury may result from its dislocation.

A prominent physician claims that there will be no diphtheria or scarlet fever for children if they eat plentifully of onions every day, especially when there is a scarcity of fresh fruit.

Among the various causes for crossness of children are some very common ones, such as hunger or thirst, improper sleep, overeating, uncomfortable clothing and the pernicious feeding of sweets.

A very neat and useful powder puff is made in the following way: Cut a circular piece of flowered silk, run a casing near the edge and thread with ribbon. In the very center attach a small round puff that may be bought anywhere. Powder sprinkled on this now and then is all that is necessary, and the puff is washable.

What Not to Wear.

A poorly fitting corset under a well made dress.

White muslin petticoats for street wear.

Bordered lace veils unless they are worn below the chin and dotted veils with weak eyes.

Trailing skirts on a stormy day, ripped or torn kid gloves at any time.

Large buttons for fastening a waist over a stout figure.

Rose pink accessories under or over a wrinkled face or neck.

Gray or navy blue veils over a sallow complexion.

Round hats with a full face and a peaked crown with sharp faced features.

Linen collars with a homely neck or linen cuffs with dark, thin or wrinkled hands.

Tightly drawn back hair with a thin face and a high coiffure with a long head.

To Clean a Copper Kettle.

Cut a lemon in half, dip it in salt and rub over the kettle with it. The kettle should afterward be carefully rinsed in cold water and given a final polish with a clean soft cloth.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Handy Little Conveniences That Oil the Domestic Machinery.

One of the greatest conveniences of the kitchen sink is a piece of pumice stone. It may be bought wherever painters' supplies are sold or usually in a drug store, a large piece costing only a few cents. Get the irregular rough stone, not the polished down toil variety.

Every cooking utensil may be cleaned with it, and its irregular form makes it reach the most inaccessible corners of every dish. In using it you will find that it soon shapes itself, if it is not already quite satisfactory, as the rubbing works it off to fit wherever it is most needed. It does not work as well when new because of its irregular surface, but this soon disappears. Kettles which have been burned black, as they will be sometimes, are restored by pumice stone to their pristine smoothness and polish. No chain dishcloth ever can approach it, and one who tries it will never be without it again. A piece lasts a long time.

When a kettle threatens to boil over grease the rim lightly all around with a bit of butter. The contents will touch this danger line, but will not pass it. Stewpans in which vegetables are boiling may be treated in the same way.

To clean dainty table covers or silk rub magnesia on the soiled spots and put away for a few days. Put plenty on both sides. When wanted for use again brush well, and the spots will be gone.

To wash woolen blankets dissolve soap enough to make a good suds in boiling water and add a tablespoonful of aqua ammonia. When scalding hot turn over your blankets. If convenient use a pounder or any way to work thoroughly through the suds without rubbing on a board. Rinse well in hot water. There is usually soap enough from the first suds to make the second soft. If not add a little soap and ammonia and after being put through a wringer let two persons, standing opposite, pull them into shape. Dry in the sun. White flannels may be washed in the same way without shrinking.

A NEW WALL PAPER.

Effective Stripes Headed by a Framed Medallion.

The Georgian paper illustrated is quite a new departure in wall papers, although the style is an excellent sample of the period it represents. The great feature is that the design is entirely outline; there is no "mass" or space of color or tone. Some of the outline is in burnt sienna and some in a rather dark blue arranged so as to form interesting stripes, headed by a framed medallion, and herein is to be found one of the special features of the wall covering, for it is possible to introduce in these oval spaces various hand colored views or anything else suitable which the individual taste of the owner suggests, or the medallions can be left, as there is already a design printed on them. The paper itself is an ivory colored silk fiber and forms an excellent background to the mahogany furniture so much in vogue during the reigns of the Georges.

A Woman's Smile.

It is just as easy to face the world and its people with a smile as with a frown. The cheery woman finds that she can be a comfort to others and do good service in various helpful ways, social, personal and charitable. Mothers soon learn that she is one of their faithful aids. The little children love her, as she enters into their amusements and sympathizes with their small griefs. Young men and maidens confide their petty secrets to her discretion, and older people enjoy the delicate attentions she delights to bestow.

Sleep While You Can.

Some have the gift of sleep, and others haven't.

The secret of more than one notable instance of beautiful mothers and grandmothers is acknowledged to be due directly to the power of sleep, to take a quiet little nap at any time of the day when a busy afternoon or long evening is before them.

It really seems, then, one of the cleverest attainments open to the eternal feminine, this capacity of capturing forty winks whenever she pleases.

PORTRAIT OF A GENTLEMAN.

(Chicago News.)

I always rise at 6 a.m.
And to the office hurry down.
I'm partial to a graham gem
And like my buckwheat cakes baked brown,
My hair on top is rather thin.
The scalp in spots is growing bare,
I wear thick flannel next my skin,
But no one really seems to care,

I'm neat and careful in my dress
And often wear an Ascot tie,
I like the ladies, but confess
That in their company I'm shy,
I'm irritable now and then;
Of temper I possess my share,
I always use a fountain pen,
But no one really seems to care,

I've lots of habits, good and bad;
I have my little hobbies, too,
At times I'm grave, and sometimes sad,
The color I prefer is blue,
But I've achieved no sort of fame,
To make the people gape and stare,
So all this information's tame
And no one really seems to care,

GHOSTS IN EVENING DRESS.

Hampton Court Policeman Sees Spooks in the Palace.

Around Hampton Court Palace there clings innumerable legends of apparitions of hapless individuals who from one cause or another are unable to rest in their tombs, and whose shades continue to revisit the glimpses of the moon.

Perhaps it was the knowledge of these circumstances that led Police-constable 265 T, with over 20 years' service in the Metropolitan Force, to assert that recently, whilst stationed in the palace grounds about midnight, he saw a group of figures walking towards him along one of the walks, and that when they came within nine yards of where he was standing the whole party suddenly vanished.

The officer is certainly very circumstantial in his account, which runs this way:

"On this particular night I went on duty at the east front of the palace at 10 o'clock. I was quite alone, and was standing close to the main gates, looking towards the Home park, when suddenly I became conscious of a group of figures moving towards me along what is known as the Ditton walk. It is a most unusual thing to see anyone in the gardens at that time of night, but I thought it probable that some of the residents in the palace had been to a party at Ditton, and were returning on foot.

"The party consisted of two gentlemen in evening dress and seven or nine ladies. There were no sounds except what resembled the rustling of dresses. When they reached a point about a dozen yards from me I turned round and opened the gates to let them in.

A Vanishing Party.

"The party, however, altered their course, and headed in the direction of the Flower Pot gates, to the north of the gardens. At the same time there was a sudden movement amongst the group; they fell into processional order, two deep, with the gentlemen at the head. Then, to my utter amazement, the whole crowd of them vanished, melted, as it seemed to me, into the air. All this happened within nine yards of where I was standing, in the centre of the broad gravel walk in front of the palace. I rushed to the spot, looked up and down, but could see nothing or hear nothing to explain the mystery."

That all sounds real enough, and it looked as if the Psychical Society had scored. But a prosaic explanation of the vision has been found. It is this:

On the night in question it was misty, and the policeman when he saw the vision was standing opposite the fish pond. In the rooms behind him an evening party was in progress, and it is established that at about the time he saw the ghosts a number of ladies and gentlemen in evening dress trooped from an upstairs room and moved along the corridor, practically as he described it, in single file.

From his position the policeman naturally could not observe them in the actual flesh, but their reflections were thrown by the strong light at the back of them on the mist hanging above the fish pond.

No wonder that though they appeared to the policeman to be laughing he heard no sound, and that when he moved towards them he found nothing but shadows.

Spotted Fever Plague.

Prof. Osler, on a recent visit to Edinburgh, gave a lecture to the university medical students. He said in New York some 3,000 deaths had occurred in the last two years from the epidemic known as "spotted fever." The disease was not pandemic, but one of its peculiarities was to appear in widely separated places. Its mortality as an acute affection almost equalled that of plague. They knew of no disease which struck a patient with such lightning rapidity. It had probably the same degree of infectiousness as pneumonia in home epidemics. Many instances proved it could be communicated from one person to another. At present it was not widespread as an epidemic in Britain, and there was no reason why it should be. It was not likely to prevail beyond the winter season. As to treatment, it had been found that frequent hot tubs were a great comfort to patients. Prof. Osler thought it a hopeful feature that a serum had been prepared which had rendered monkeys immune, and it was not unreasonable to look for the elaboration of a similar serum for use in man.

Young Princes Go Shooting.

Under the personal tuition of their grandfather, the King, the little Princes Edward and Albert of Wales, had their first lesson in how to behave at a big shoot the other day.

In positions selected by King Edward the royal boys took up their stand, each with his own loaders. Their success was remarkable, and each had a good bag to his credit. His Majesty, who purposely remained near them to watch their progress, was greatly pleased with their performance, and as bird after bird fell to their guns showed his delight and appreciation by crying out "Well done."

Both the princes inherit some of the skill of their father, the Prince of Wales, who is one of the best game shots in England. They have been carefully trained in the use of the gun under his personal supervision. An estimate of their respective powers shows that Prince Edward is precise and steady, while Prince Albert, though quick and eager, is a very safe shot.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 15.—(Special.)—Cable advices from Liverpool and London on Canadian cattle were unchanged from a week ago, at 12¼c. Exports from Portland and St. John, N.B., last week were 2862 cattle.

At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end, Montreal, the receipts of live stock for the week ending April 13 were 3363 cattle, 64 sheep and lambs, 3192 hogs and 2499 calves, and the arrivals for local consumption for to-day were 1100 cattle, 931 hogs and 239 calves. There was no actual change in the condition of the market for cattle, as compared with this day week. The supply was somewhat larger, but, as the average quality was generally up to the standard, prices were well maintained. A feature of the trade was the improved demand from exporters for choice steers and bulls, owing to the continued strong European advices. Cables from Liverpool on Saturday quoted a further advance in prices of ½c per lb., and reported trade firm, which induced shippers to operate more freely, and they paid $5.25 to $5.40 per 100 lbs. for a number of steers, and $4.50 to $4.75 for bulls. In addition to this, there was a large attendance of butchers, and, as they all wanted beef, the demand was good and an active trade was done, which resulted in the supply being well bought up by noon. Choice beeves sold at 5¼c to 5½c; good at 4¾c to 5c; fair at 4¼c to 4½c, and lower grades at 3c to 4c per lb.

Pausing sure that the two servants were as before to follow him, he flung himself round the corner into the darkness and up the first alley and down the next, reckless of stabs in the back, until he was able to crouch in the first convenient doorway. He had thrown his spies off, that was something, and just as he was wondering what to do next a cloaked figure brushed past him. The Chevalier de St. Amant, as he lived! He grabbed at the cloak in vicious rage. The Chevalier at least should not escape him.

"Don't be so rude, Vicomte," laughed a woman's voice. "I won't vanish up the chimney."

Andre, in sheer astonishment, staggered against the door, glaring all the time into the darkness. "You will be wise to follow me," she continued, "and in silence."

In two minutes the pair were standing in a small and empty back room of the tavern Andre had just left. The woman threw back her hood, revealing the trim figure and saucy face of the impudent flower girl, who was no other than his long-lost acquaintance, the crystal-gazer.

"You will present," she said mockingly, "my humble duties to Madame la Marquise de Pompadour——"

Andre had recovered his bewilderment. "What is the meaning of that?" he demanded, brusquely, thrusting the slip of paper into her hands.

"I don't know," she retorted coolly, and then tore the slip into a dozen pieces, "and I do not care to know."

Andre was so startled by the studied insolence of the act that for a few minutes he could neither speak nor move. When he did, it was to put his back to the door very significantly.

"One question, Madame," he demanded. "You are aware that George Onslow is in Paris, that he spoke to you, gave you that paper?"

"Certainly. Mr. Onslow mistook me for some one else. I have just convinced him of his mistake." She was positively smiling.

"You expect me to believe that?"

She shrugged her shoulders. "No," she answered, "the truth told by women is never believed, least of all at Versailles by men."

Andre ran his eye over her. As in the past, so now something in her voice and figure reminded him of some one else, but of whom he could not recall. "Madame," he said earnestly, "I urge you to tell the truth. You were never in such danger as you are now."

"Perhaps not. But I am not in such peril as you are, Monsieur le Vicomte."

Instinctively he turned sharply round. The woman laughed and the laugh maddened him, for they were alone and the door had been locked by himself.

"My friend," she said quietly, "you are being spied on. To-morrow the ministers, the Comtesse des Forges, and the Comte de Mont Rouge will know how the Vicomte de Nerac, who gave out he was going to visit Madame his aged mother, has spent the evening in the company of Mr. George Onslow and disreputable women. I feel sure the Marquise de Beau Sejour will hear it, too, with additions."

"Well," said Andre, stonily.

"Monsieur le Vicomte also is known to frequent the society of one Yvonne. Innocent peasant girls, when put on the rack, are sometimes obliged to tell lies, poor things, but lies useful to those who rack them. The Marquise de Beau ——"

"Hold your tongue."

"No, I will not. Monsieur le Vicomte is also the lover of Madame de Pompadour. You deny it? Then why go in the darkness with the King's private key to her apartment? The noble whose arm you slit will enjoy taking that delightful scandal about the Captain of the Queen's Guards to the King,—and the King—mon Dieu! the King—" she laughed bloodthirstily, nor was it necessary to finish the sentence.

Andre wiped the sweat off his brow. The woman came close to him. "Supposing," she said in a low voice, "supposing you had been arrested to-night with that slip of paper in your pocket, would all your services, all your oaths, your nobility, have saved you? Think, my friend, think. I did a bold thing, perhaps, in destroying it, but it was in your interest, Vicomte, not mine."

Andre was silent, appalled at her knowledge. The tables had been turned on him with a vengeance, and this astonishing woman was right, which was hardest of all.

"You would know," she proceeded, divining marvellously his confused thoughts, "how I have all this information. I have my crystal," she laughed, "but I also hate the King and the woman who rules him. You and she are not the only persons at Versailles to whom it is a matter of life and death to discover the secret of 'No. 101.' Monsieur, I am the paid agent of the foes of that wanton, the King's mistress, and of yourself."

Unconsciously Andre's fingers clutched the hilt of his sword.

"Why do I tell you all this?" she asked in a low voice. "Does that confession amuse or startle you? Am I the first woman who would sacrifice herself for the Vicomte de Nerac or the first to confess her love? No. And to prove I speak the truth I will reveal to you the secret of 'No. 101' that I alone have discovered, but on one condition"—she paused to put her hands on both his shoulders—"that you will promise from this moment to abandon Mademoiselle Denise, who is not worthy of you, and to love me alone."

Dead silence. Andre stood hypnotised, half by fear, half by the witchery of her womanhood.

"I have beauty, wealth, power," she whispered caressingly. "Yes, I am as fair a woman as Mademoiselle Denise; I can make you a greater man than Madame de Pompadour can; I can reveal to you the secret that is worth the ransom of the King's crown; and I love you. Say yes, Andre, for your own sake; you will never regret it."

Andre looked into her blue eyes, so resplendent against the cream tint of her skin, and at her magnificent black hair. Passion and ambition began to sap his will. Then slowly he dragged himself from his intoxicating dream and disengaged her hands.

"No," he said gently but firmly, "I do not love you. I cannot—I cannot, because," his voice rang out, "I love Denise."

She was trembling, he thought, with rage, but there was no rage in her eyes, only a mysterious pity and pathos as of a woman who had staked all on one throw and lost, yet was not wholly sorry.

"Ah! well," she said, controlling herself. "I know now that you will never discover the secret of 'No. 101'—never!"

"I shall," he answered, with unfaltering confidence, "I shall succeed because I must."

She shrugged her shoulders with scorn. "Open that window," she commanded, in the most matter-of-fact tone, "before you leave you had better be sure the King's police are not waiting for you."

With the key of the door in his pocket Andre quietly threw the shutters open and peered out.

"Well? No one?" said a voice at his elbow. "I fear, Vicomte, I cannot wait while you make up your mind what you will do with me. You will hear interesting news at Versailles to-morrow. Thank you. Good-night!"

A sharp push, the vision of two small boots, and a flutter of short skirts, and she had lightly vaulted into the street. When Andre recovered his balance the darkness of the network of slums had swallowed her. Tricked and baffled again by a woman, and with these questions above all crying out for an answer: why had he mistaken her for the Chevalier? Was she really in love with him? And was she an agent of the plotters against Madame de Pompadour?

CHAPTER XX.

Midnight had struck, the same night, more than an hour ago; the black and squalid Carrefour of St. Antoine was deserted; the houses that fringed it lay in darkness, yet in the main salon of one of them, though they could not be discerned by a passer-by, the lights still blazed, for the shutters were closed and bolted, the thick double curtains were drawn tight. On the table in the centre of the room were ample traces that two persons had recently supped, and supped sumptuously. But there was only one now in the room, a woman copying from a roll of manuscript, and absorbed in her task. Save for the monotonous tick of the clock, and a curious muffled murmur which trickled through a door that faced the main entry, the silence in the strangely brilliant glare of the numerous candelabra was oppressively eery. Presently the woman threw down her pen and walked with a quick but graceful step in front of one of the many long mirrors that lined the walls. She inspected herself with a charmingly insolent cynicism. The glass, with truthful admiration, flashed back the reflection of a supple and exquisitely moulded figure, fair hair, bright blue eyes, and a skin on face, neck, and shoulders amazingly delicate in its blended tints of snow and rose. A young woman this, in the heyday of health and beauty, noble of birth, too, if the refinement of her features, and the ease and dignity of her carriage, did not strangely lie; and at every movement the costly jewels in her hair and on her breast, in her artfully simple dress, and on her fingers, only heightened the challenge to the homage claimed by her youth and beauty. Very soon, however, she ceased to find pleasure in looking at herself. A soft pathos swept over the artificial audacity of her eyes and lips. She sat down, her elbows on her knees, then stretched her arms wearily and sighed that most pathetic of all sighs, a sigh from a young woman's heart.

Suddenly she sprang up, and, after listening attentively, seized a hand lamp and left the room. When she returned, it was with a man, who flung off his cloak and stood blinking now at her, now at the brilliant lights.

"So it is you they have sent?" she said contemptuously; "you!"

"I volunteered," George Onslow answered, "because I wanted to come." His gaze lingered hungrily on her. "And, by God! I am glad. You," he laughed wearily, "you pretend you are not?"

"What does it matter to me whom your accursed government sends? Any man is better than a woman, such women, at least, as they employed last time."

His eyes roamed from her jewels to the supper table.

"You have had company to-night, Enchantress?" he asked in a flash of jealousy.

"Yes," she answered over her shoulder, "two can make very good company—sometimes. But here is what you wanted. Take it and go."

He scanned the roll of manuscript eagerly, his eyes sparkling.

"You have not signed," he remarked, half jestingly.

The woman opened a penknife and pushed back the lace which fringed her splendid arm at the shoulder.

"Don't!" cried Onslow, in genuine pain. "I can't bear——"

"Pooh!" With the few drops of blood produced by the knife she made a symbol with her pen on the roll. "From as near my heart as any man will ever get anything," she said, replacing the lace again. "And now my pay, please."

Onslow handed her a small bag of gold, which she locked in a drawer. "You will drink," she continued, pouring out two glasses of wine. "Your health, skulking spy, and damnation to Louis XV. and all his crew of my fascinating sex!"

"To your trade and mine, ma mignonne, to yourself and—to the damnation of Louis XV.!" He drained his glass, refilled it, and drained it again. "You are a witch," he cried, tapping the roll. "How do you do it?"

"Come this way and I will show you."

She opened the side door, revealing a small room lit by a single candle. On the bed lay a man bound hand and foot, and gagged. One boot was off, showing whence the despatch had been taken. "A confidential messenger of the King

CRUSOE THE SECOND.

By Constance D'Arcy Mackay.

Copyright, 1907, by E. C. Parcells.

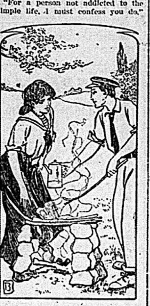
As Peyton's sailboat, the Gull's Wing, ducked her way between myriads of anchored craft, mostly steam launches, Viola Ainsley looked at the receding shore with a sigh of relief. The sail filled with a brisk breeze and spray dashed against the bow as they tacked for the open bay. The air was keen and fresh and full of relish. The sun shone strong and warm.

"Splendid, isn't it?" cried Miss Ainsley.

Peyton smiled. I thought you liked that sort of thing better?" he said, with a backward glance at the summer colony of Cliffcrest, rows of cottages and a big hotel that stood a little back from the water front.

"Don't I look as if I was enjoying myself?" she parried.

"For a person not addicted to the simple life, I must confess you do,"



TIME WENT SWIFTLY IN PREPARING IT.

said Peyton, regarding her as she perched on the seat before him in her trim white yachting suit.

"What a salty tang!" she sniffed. "It's strange, but one never seems to get the full flavor of it near the shore."

"One has to get out, away out, to get the full flavor of most things, I fancy," Peyton answered, his brown hand on the tiller, his keen eyes looking straight ahead.

"Why did you come here at all, then?" Viola questioned. "You must have known what a summer hotel would be like!"

"One has one's duty to one's family, you know, and my mother and sister are here. And then there's another reason for my coming. I followed a girl."

"A girl!"

"Yes, a girl I saw on the train. She had the seat across the aisle from me, and there were a lot of people with her, a very gay, noisy, fashionable crowd. The girl was laughing with the rest of them, and I thought she was their kind till I saw her eyes. And then I knew, for they were neither hard nor shallow nor full of surface lights. They were very deep and beautiful. If she were moved by love I think they could be exquisitely tender."

"But who is she?" cried Miss Ainsley in utter innocence and then flushed suddenly as Peyton's look answered her.

"Oh!" she said breathlessly and turned away her head.

"Of course I know it was extremely foolish of me," Peyton Fernald went on, "because rumor has already engaged her to Millionaire McNugget."

Miss Ainsley bit her lip. "Rumor," she said, "is often very impertinent."

"Then it isn't true?"

"It is not true—yet," said Miss Ainsley and dabbled her hand over the edge of the boat.

"Ah!" he began.

"No," she said quickly; "you've made a great mistake. The girl isn't at all as you've imagined her. She's very fond of money. She's hard and selfish and doesn't care for simple things a bit. She'd hate not to have lots of houses and clothes and a good time."

"You think, then," said Peyton, "that because I'm not very well off in this world's goods it would be quite useless if I asked her to marry me?"

"Quite useless, I'm afraid," returned Miss Ainsley gently, "though I know what the girl's missing, for there aren't many men in the world who"— She paused as the boat gave an abrupt lurch, nearly sweeping her from her feet. Peyton reached out a strong arm and steadied her. The keel of the Gull's Wing scraped against something hard and slippery; then, with a slide and splash, the boat righted herself and went on. But the cockpit was rapidly filling with water.

"A derelict dory, by jingo!" cried Peyton as a dark object drifted past them beneath the surface of the water. "Take the tiller and the main sheet," he directed, "and put for that little island over there. I'll have to bale like blazes."

Viola did as she was bid, crouching on the seat to be out of reach of the water that swished in the bottom of the boat. The trees of the little island they were approaching stood out sharply against the blue sky. Its sandy beach lay white and shining in the sun.

"Do you think we'll make it?" she asked quietly.

"We'll try," he answered, with equal repression. Their eyes met in the understanding of a common peril. There was much against them, but wind and tide were with them, and when the Gull's Wing sank it was within a few feet of the island's shore.

Peyton stepped out and carried Miss Ainsley to land. Then he pulled in the boat as far as he could and made it fast.

"Marooned!" cried Miss Ainsley lightly. She did not refer to their past danger, nor did he, save to say solicitously, "Miss Ainsley, you're soaking wet!"

"So are you! But the sun's strong and hot on this little beach, and we'll soon dry. When do you think they'll come for us?"

"I'm afraid we won't be missed till nightfall, and it's only 3 o'clock now. Thank heaven my matches aren't damp, and we can build a fire!"

"Crusoe the second!" laughed Miss Ainsley. "Do you think the wreck will yield us anything? It should, according to the best story books."

"Nothing but the bailing pail and a coffeepot and two tin cups in the stern locker."

"Get them," she besought. "We'll use them to cook with."

"Cook what?"

Miss Ainsley's eyes danced. "Oh, Crusoe, Crusoe! Haven't you any imagination? Don't you know there's always food on a desert island—sea gulls' eggs and things like that? Come along and let's explore."

"There! I told you!" she exclaimed as their wanderings brought them to a little spring. "Isn't that pretty, the way it bubbles up between the moss and ferns? And I do believe there's been a picnic here. Look at that bit of orange peel."

"Yes, and see this!" cried Peyton, emerging from a thicket with a brown paper parcel in his hand.

"Something the picnickers forgot!" cried Miss Ainsley ecstatically. "Open it, quick!"

Peyton caught the fire of her enthusiasm. "Tea and sugar and a loaf of bread," he laughed.

"Bread!" exclaimed Miss Ainsley. "Do you think that it's stale?" She pulled a bit from the heel of the loaf and nibbled it furtively. "No! It's fresh. There must have been a picnic here this morning. We'll have a feast, a regular feast."

Time went swiftly in preparing it. Peyton found some blackberries, and Miss Ainslie made plates of leaves. They built a fire of driftwood on the beach, and over a pile of stones the coffeepot sang pleasantly. It was sunset when they seated themselves luxuriously on the sand and ate what Viola Ainslie called the fruits of their toil.

"This tea is the best I ever tasted," Peyton declared.

"You didn't know I was such a good cook, did you?" Miss Ainslie inquired as she sat opposite him poking at the fire.

"They will be coming for us soon," said Peyton, "and then our day will be over."

"Yes," said Miss Ainslie with something strangely like a sigh.

Behind them the woods of the little island were deepening into the shadow; the waves broke softly on the beach; the rosy flames of the fire shone brightly out into the gathering dusk.

"Listen," she added. In the distance could be heard the faint, steady puffing of a steam launch. "They've seen the fire," she exclaimed, shielding her eyes with her hand.

"There's McNugget," cried Peyton almost savagely, "and I suppose you're glad." He was kneeling on the sand picking up the tin cups.

Miss Ainsley smiled. "Oh, Robinson Crusoe," she said softly, "how very blind you are!"

Peyton dropped the cups and stared at her. "You mean"— he breathed.

"I mean that—this afternoon when I thought that perhaps we—we wouldn't reach the shore—it didn't seem as if the other things mattered at all. I knew then what really counted most. I knew that wealth was nothing and that I only wanted you—you—you!" The last words were almost inaudible, and Peyton had to lean very near to catch them. Then the voice of the millionaire McNugget reached them through the megaphone.

"Coming!" cried Miss Ainslie in answer. "Hurry up, Crusoe. Why on earth are you carrying that old coffeepot under your arm?"

"It's a trophy," said Peyton, "of a shipwreck that has made me the happiest man on earth."

Cautious.

A few days ago a new male resident of this city, recently arrived from Ireland, having made a favorable impression upon the manager of a wholesale house on Market street, secured a position. The merchant the next day, having made out a large number of statements, called the new employee into his office, directing him to "go out and post these bills." "Where?" inquired the young man. "Oh, yes," said the business man, "I forgot that you have only been in this country a short time. There's a mail box on the telegraph pole at the corner. Post the bills there." The son of Erin soon returned, laying the bills on the merchant's desk. "I may be a little green yet, sir," said he, "but I'm not posting them bills with a big policeman watching the box." "Not posting them? Why not? What about the policeman?" asked the astonished storekeeper. "That's all right, but you're not fooling me all the same. If I do appear to be green. Sure, didn't I see the sign on the pole over the box, 'Post no bills under penalty of the law?"—Philadelphia Record.

ENLISTS IN THE RANKS.

English Army Officer's Mysterious Disappearance Accounted For.

Debonair Lieutenant Tryon, who mysteriously disappeared from the Hotel Metropole on the early morning of January 31, has for three weeks past been the darling recruit of the Seaforth Highlanders in Edinburgh Castle. Now, to the great regret of his comrades, he is guarded as a prisoner in the castle.

It was at the beginning of the frenzied search for him by private detectives and Scotland Yard that on Thursday, February 7, a tall, clean-shaven young fellow walked up to a recruiting sergeant in Stirling, and after an introductory word remarked: "I would like to enlist in the Seaforth Highlanders." The recruiting officer, with a keen eye for a fine man, regarded the young six-footer as a "find." He asked him particulars as to himself.

"My name is John Fraser," said the young man, "and for eighteen months I have been at a place near Stirling." There was more conversation, the upshot of which was that the stranger was given a railway warrant for Edinburgh, and on February 9 found himself with the Seaforth Highlanders at Edinburgh Castle, an accepted recruit. He entered himself as having been born in the parish of Waterloo, London, and his trade or profession as that of a laborer.

John Fraser soon proved himself no ordinary laborer. A giant in physique, he had the upright carriage and the lithe movements of the athlete. Critical drill sergeants turned an approving eye on him. He was really a wonderful recruit. Within a week John Fraser had been tentatively selected to beat the big drum, though it was fated that he should never reach that honor.

Scrubbing the Floors.

His comrades liked him very much because, speaking and behaving as a cultured man, he yet showed nothing in the shape of "swagger." In athletics he excelled, and he carried out his new duties as though to the manner born. On getting up in the morning he would quickly make his bed, and after recruits' drill would take his turn at the ordinary duties of the newly joined soldier, helping to carry in the food of his colleagues, sweeping the floors and scrubbing them. The men were instinctively impressed with John Fraser, and in the course of a week or two he became a favorite. He put on no airs, visited the canteen with the others, but nevertheless gave little or no information about himself.

It was in the canteen on Monday evening last that there arose a dramatic scene. A lance-corporal was reading a paper which contained a portrait of the missing Lieutenant Tryon, and suddenly looking up at Private John Fraser near him, called his attention to the picture and the strong resemblance.

The new recruit turned not a hair. Smilingly he admitted that he and Lieutenant Tryon were one. The men were staggered into silence. But then came the surprising thing. These stalwart Scotsmen, having found a good man, had no idea of telling tales about him. The news spread like wildfire among the Highlanders, but although many scores knew of the identity of John Fraser, all kept the news religiously from the authorities. How it eventually crept out is not known, but two days later, on the Wednesday night, John Fraser was placed under arrest. Under the name of Lieutenant Tryon he still remains under arrest.

Colonel's Statement.

The following statement was issued the other morning by Colonel Macintosh commanding the regiment: "Private Fraser, who enlisted three weeks ago into the Seaforth Highlanders, quartered at Edinburgh Castle, has been identified as Lieutenant Tryon, who absented himself without leave from his unit at Gosport. He is at present detained at Edinburgh Castle."

Speaking the other day, Colonel Macintosh remarked: "I do not think there is anything else to say. A large number of the men knew of his identity, but they kept it to themselves. Now, all I have to do is detain him. What action the authorities will take I cannot say. As to any explanation of the lieutenant's action, I have heard nothing."

Break, the sergeant major of the Seaforths, a splendid specimen of the muscular Scotsman, was a little dejected the other day. "You ought to have seen him (Lieutenant Tryon) walking at the end of that detachment of recruits on parade. He was 'great.' There was only one other man in the regiment to equal him in physique," said the sergenat major sadly.

A fellow-private with Lieutenant Tryon remarked on the ease with which he did his military tasks. "You ought to have seen him, sewing the buttons on his clothes. He did it perfectly." Another private remarked: "One of the smartest chaps we ever had. A splendid fellow," and a sergeant added: "He was just the man for our big drum, and we shan't get another like him." Altogether, an air of melancholy lies over Edinburgh Castle.

Some Peeresses' Jewels.

Many society women are the owners of jewels worth the proverbial king's ransom. Perhaps the largest collections belong to the Duchess of Portland and the Duchess of Marlborough, but Viscountess Iveagh is the possessor of one of the most valuable necklaces in England. Her pearls are worth over £70,000, and took Lord Iveagh a long time to collect. Lady Rothschild, the Countess of Dudley, the Countess of Annesley, and Lady Denman all own most beautiful pearls. The Duchess of Roxburghe and the Marchioness of Dufferin both have a large number of turquoises.

Lord Mayor Soldier and Sailor.

"You would hardly think, to look at me, that I am colonel of the regiment," said the Lord Mayor of London at the distribution, at Guildhall of the prizes to the First City of London Royal Garrison Artillery, of which he is honorable colonel. He is also Admiral of the Port of London.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

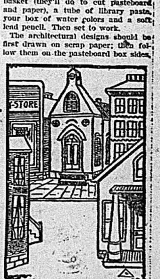
BUILDING A CITY.

How to Make a Town With Pasteboard, Scissors and Paints.

When it is cold and rainy and the little ones are tired of playing nursery games, let them try their hands at building a city—yes, building a city. Now, don't look incredulous, for it can be done, and in one day too.

Supply yourself with all the empty pasteboard boxes you can find about the house, a pair of scissors that your mother has thrown out of her workbasket (they'll do to cut pasteboard and paper), a tube of library paste, your box of water colors and a soft lead pencil. Then set to work.

The architectural designs should be first drawn on scrap paper; then follow them on the pasteboard box sides, cutting out carefully, and putting together with thin paper and paste. All doors and windows must be cut and completed before joining the four sides of a building. The roof goes on last. After the paste has dried thoroughly begin tinting with water colors. Some of the buildings should be made to resemble brick, others stone and still others frame. As soon as the tints are dry the bricks, stones, boards and shingles may be brought into shape with the lead pencil.



MODEL FOR A CITY.

A large table in the center of the room will answer for the city's site. If the builders do not like a level site, they may have as many hills as desired by laying small pillows about the table and covering with a bedspread, smoothing it over the ups and downs made by the pillows to give a good surface on which to place the houses.

A public square may be laid out, with the public buildings, such as stores, a church, a courthouse, a schoolhouse and a public library, grouped about it. Arrange the residences along streets opening into the public square. On account of the uncertainty of "pillow ground" it would be more satisfactory to keep the table surface flat and hard for the city site; then there will be no danger from a careless little hand or arm resting against the hillsides to tumble the houses into the hollows below.

CANADIANS! The majority of us were too skeptical and easy-going to inform ourselves concerning Cobalt in the beginning, and saw others step in and reap enormous profits.

Cobalt is only the beginning of mining in New Ontario, the richest mineral field in the world, and there are, and will be, other opportunities as great and greater.

The Larder Lake goldfields are the next in line. Inform yourself at once. Don't wait to see what the other follow will do, but do it yourself, and do it now. That's the way the man on the ground floor gets there.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

HORTICULTURAL.

Fruit Spraying.

The Minister of Agriculture for Ontario has, for the past two years, had under consideration plans for further assisting the fruit growers of the Province. Spraying has now become, in producing a superior grade of fruit, the most important operation of the year, and while widely practised in certain sections, has not yet been given the attention that it requires in the apple sections. The advent of the power sprayer is of such recent date that the advantages it gives, especially in the spraying of apple orchards, is not yet appreciated.

For many years the Department of Agriculture has been advocating more and better spraying. Demonstrations in the use of hand and power outfits, and the preparation and application of the most effective mixtures, have been given throughout the Province with satisfactory results. It is now felt that such information has been sufficiently diffused and another step forward is proposed.

The Provincial Fruit Growers' Association has within the past three years assisted in organizing a large number of fruit growing associations. One of the aims of these associations has been the co-operative spraying of orchards of their members, and it is now proposed to assist these and kindred organizations in such spraying work. With this aim in view, the Minister of Agriculture has asked the Legislature for a grant of $6,000 to be devoted to the assistance of fruit growers in the purchase and operation of power spraying outfits. Many associations already own and are operating such machines and these will receive the same aid as those organizing during 1907. The conditions, under which the grants are available have been made as simple as possible with the hope that a decided stimulus will be given to the proper spraying of orchards during this and coming seasons. Following are the regulations covering the payment of the grants:

A grant of $50 will be made to any five or more farmers who unite to form a fruit growers' association for the purchase and operation of a power spraying outfit during the season of 1907. These associations need not be incorporated to qualify for this grant, though incorporation of co-operative associations should be obtained if the full benefits of co-operation are desired.

Co-operative fruit growing associations owning and operating two or more power sprayers will be eligible to draw a grant for each machine operated.

The number of such associations receiving assistance during the present year shall not exceed 100.

At least 25 acres of fruit trees must be thoroughly sprayed during the proper season with each outfit.

A reasonable portion of such spraying must be done on the farms or orchards of each of the parties forming the association.

Such associations before receiving any portion of the grant shall satisfy an inspector of the Department of Agriculture that the above conditions have been complied with and shall make such reports as shall satisfy the Minister of Agriculture.

Associations desirous of participating in this grant must apply to the Department not later than the first day of May.

AGRICULTURAL.

In the Sugar Season.

Around the old sugar orchard cluster the traditions of nearly 150 years. It is said that the first maple sugar made by white people in Vermont was produced in 1763 by Capt. Robinson, the first settler in Bennington, though it was made by the Indians long before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth

The method used by the early settlers was to cut a gash in the tree with some sharp instrument, insert a spout made of hemlock, in the form of a gauge, so that the sap would drip into a trough hollowed from a log.

The sap was boiled down in a heavy iron kettle swinging from a pole supported by crotched sticks, the fire being built between a couple of logs, or possibly within a rude stone arch. The resulting compound, black and strong, flavored with ashes and flying leaves, differs as much from the modern product as does its method of manufacture.

The Opening of the Sugar Season depends entirely upon the weather. Some years the trees can be tapped the first week in March, but more frequently it is two or three weeks later before work can be begun even in the earliest orchards. During the winter the sap of the maple, as of all other trees, retreats to the roots of the trees, where it remains until the approach of spring, when it begins its upward course in response to the warmth of the sun. It is at this time that the sugar maker gathers it in. Some farmers consider the first appearance of the bluebird as a sign that the sugar season is at hand.

The sugar maker now gets out his buckets, washes them and makes ready for the first good run. At last there comes a warm, sunny day, following a sharp freeze; the wind is in the northwest, white clouds are flying, and sap will run. When the frost comes out of the ground slowly and the nights are cold enough to freeze the snow into a solid crust, then the flow of the sap is retarded during the night, and consequently the season is considered favorable for sugar making. A sudden thaw, or long continued warm weather, means a sudden rising of the sap and a short sugar season.

The first step in the manufacture of maple sugar is the tapping of the trees. With bitstock and auger from two to four holes are bored into the tree an inch or so deep and about half an inch in diameter. Spouts of metal or wood are driven into these holes under which buckets holding from 12 to 15 quarts are hung to catch the sap. The cover of the bucket is an important point. Scrupulous neatness throughout the entire process is absolutely necessary in order to make a first-class product. When covers are not used, rain or snow, flying dirt and leaves are almost certain to lodge in the sap and injure its color and flavor. The sap of the maple tree is as colorless as water. By exposure to light and air it becomes colored a little. If it were possible to boil sap in a vacuum the syrup would be as clear as water. This condition is not practicable, but it is the aim of every good sugar maker to make syrup as light in color as possible. If the product is darker in color than honey of the very best quality, it is probable that the law of perfect cleanliness has not been observed, though some orchards where there is iron in the ground naturally produce sap of a darker color. Later in the season if the sap drops slowly and is somewhat discolored, the flow is increased and the color improved by retapping the trees with a bit a size larger than the one originally used. Sap is gathered once a day and sometimes twice in the case of a good run It is important that it should be gathered often, by the time there are two or three quarts in the buckets if possible, as sap taints as easily as butter. In the majority of orchards the sap is gathered from each bucket in pails and poured into a tank fastened to a low sled drawn by horses or oxen. In a few orchards the following device has superseded the gathering team: Station tanks are located at convenient places in the orchard. The sap is gathered and poured into them from which it is carried in pipes to the storage tank in the sugar house. The flow from the station tank to the sugar house can be regulated at will. The sap is strained when it enters the storage tank, whether it is piped from the station tank or from a gathering tub drawn by oxen. As the sap leaves the storage tank it is again strained and flows through a small rubber pipe into a gauge placed in a corner of the evaporator, so called because in it the water is evaporated from the sap by the process of boiling. Externally the gauge looks very much like a two-quart tin pail: internally it consists of a float, to which is attached a standard. At the upper end of the standard is fastened a steel clasp, through which the rubber pipe passes. As the quantity of sap in the evaporator is diminished by boiling, the float sinks the clasp relaxes its pressure and more sap flows in. As the evaporator fills up again the float rises, the clasp renews its pressure, thus lessening the flow of the sap. The evaporator is a large pan made of galvanized iron set upon a stone arch, in which a good fire is kept burning day and night in busy seasons. It is about four feet wide, from eight to fifteen feet long, and is divided by traverse walls into two or three compartments. There is a gate in each partition between the compartments and the pan is slightly lower at the back end, so the sap can make a leisurely circuit of each compartment, boiling merrily all the time. In each compartment are several smaller partitions, not more than three or four inches in height. These small partitions do not reach quite across the evaporator, but leave a small space at alternate ends, so that the sap as it boils flows across the pan from left to right and back again between partitions. Whatever impurities are left in the sap after it has been strained boil out and are left upon the sides of the evaporator. The sap is frequently skimmed as it boils, and the syrup tested with a thermometer to see when it is ready to draw off. It is now light straw color and should weigh eleven pounds to the gallon. As soon as it is taken from the evaporator it is again strained through a felt strainer if the farmer is up-to-date in his methods. The felt strainer not only removes any dirt that may remain, but also removes the "sugar sand" or malate of lime which is always present in syrup. City people finding this lime in the bottom of their cans are quite likely to think the syrup adulterated. By far the greater part of the syrup is put into tin cans holding two quarts each and sent to market.

There is a good quantity of sugar made, however, its manufacture entailing simply an extension of the boiling process until it is hard enough to cake well. Several tests are made to see if it has reached this condition. Sometimes the hot syrup is poured upon snow; if when cold it is brittle, further boiling is considered unnecessary. Experts can tell by the way sugar boils when it is hard enough to cake well. The caking consists simply in pouring the hot sugar into moulds of different shapes and sizes. The best syrup is sugared off in small quantities, not more than two or three pounds at a time, in porcelain lined kettles, stirred to a creamy consistency, and caked in small tins of fancy shapes. These small cakes are carefully wrapped in white paper, packed in boxes, and sold to be eaten as confectionery. Thus prepared it fairly melts in the mouth and rivals the most expensive candies.—G. A. Burrington.

DAIRY DEPARTMENT.

Getting at the Cream.

Of the three methods of cream separation, shallow-pan setting, deep-setting in "shotgun" cans, and centrifugal separation, the last named is conceded by experts to be the best. The separation is done more thoroughly and quickly, the skim-milk is in the best condition for feeding young animals, and more butter is obtained from a given quantity of milk. It has been ascertained that a cow giving five thousand pounds of milk will yield fifty pounds more butter by use of the separator than by any other process.

A good separator carefully fed and operated is one of the best paying machines on the farm. To get the best results from a separator there are certain conditions necessary..

In the first place we should have a herd of cows of large milk production, and that milk rich in butter fat. The breed is a matter of choice with the individual. We will suppose, however, that a person going into the dairy business will choose a dairy breed, as it is a pretty well-established fact that, although there are individual cows of great merit as milk producers among the beef breeds, on the whole they are not satisfactory as dairy cows. Then those cows need to be fed in such quantities of nutritious, palatable and succulent foods as will enable them to produce milk to their fullest capacity. They also require an abundant supply of pure water and access to salt, as they will not do their best without it. The stables in which they are kept should be dry, warm, well-lighted and well ventilated; these four conditions are of very great importance to milk production.

The milking should, as far as possible, be done regularly as to time, and the same person milking the same cows, and in the same order. For the purpose of butter making, or for that matter for any purpose, guide, turning will be steadier, and the oil cups and other details so necessary for good work will be more carefully observed. A separator should be thoroughly washed each time it is used. Cleanliness in every part is absolutely necessary to secure a first-class product. Have the cream duct regulated to give you twenty-five or thirty per cent. cream. The richer the cream the lower the temperature for churning. When the separating is done, cool the cream at once to about 58 degrees to 60 degrees. In Strike At Marsh & Henthorn's Foundry.

MACHINISTS DEMAND AN INCREASE OF 25 PER CENT.—REFUSED, THEY LEAVE WORK.

At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon some 25 of the machinists employed in Marsh & Henthorn's foundry struck for higher wages. It appears that the men made a demand upon the firm a few days ago for an increase of wages of 25 per cent., and at the same time intimated that if their demand was not complied with by the hour of 5 o'clock on April 15th they would go out on strike. The firm evidently considered the demand was exorbitant and did not comply with the request, with the above result..

In conversation with some of the strikers this morning The Intelligencer was informed that they considered they were not asking too much, considering that the cost of living has of late advanced considerably, and that mechanics in other lines of trade had been granted increases.

The men stated that they were out to stay unless the increase they asked for was given them.

A Society Funeral.

REMAINS OF LATE MR. EDWIN TAYLOR BURIED BY FORMER COMRADES YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

That the late Mr. Edwin Taylor, who for many years was a trusted G. T. R. engineer, was much respected was evidenced yesterday afternoon, when the obsequies were held. The funeral was under the auspices of the I. O. O. F., and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and many members of both organizations turned out. Services at the family residence, Emily street, were conducted by the Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Bridge St. Church. A brief service by the Oddfellows was also held. After the service the cortege, to the strains of a dead march, played by the I.O.O.F. band moved off in the following order:

I. O. O. F. Band
Oddfellows in Regalia
B. of L. Engineers,
Hearse
Mourners
Citizens on Foot
Citizens in Carriages.

The cortege proceeded to the cemetery by way of Mill street to Mill street, to Front street, across lower bridge to Commercial street. Many citizens viewed the procession as it passed by.

A large number of beautiful floral tributes were placed upon the casket by the societies, relatives and friends.

The bearers were Bros. T. Marshall, Geo. Teale and W. Gorton, representing the I.O.O.F., and T. Collins, R. Foster and T. Daly, representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

BIG LAUGHING SUCCESS COMING

Mr. Dave Derden, who plays the title role in "The King of Tramps," which will be at the Carman next Monday, is a comedian of wide reputation. He has been connected with Hoyt's, Schubert's and Frohman productions for many seasons, and is known as one of the best entertainers on the American stage. He has made a specialty of character work, and in this particular part with his quaint sayings, singing and dancing, has made the hit of his career. He is supported by a clever company of comedians. A treat is evidently in store for lovers of farce-comedy.

A Consul Retires.

HENRY FOLGER, U. S. CONSUL AT KINGSTON, QUITS AFTER 31 YEARS SERVICE.

Kingston, April 16.—Henry Folger who has been United States Vice-Consul for Kingston since 1873, is retiring on account of ill-health. Mr Folger has served his Government for 31 years gratuitously, and performed valuable service. He has served longer than any other Vice-Consul or Consul in the United States service.

The Executive members of the local branch of the Lord's Day Alliance say they are not considering so much the opening of the Kingston post office lobby on Sunday afternoons as the amount of labor done in the office on Sunday. They consider that the clerks should not be required to work to such an extent on the Sabbath Day, and are of opinion that the number of clerks in the local office should be increased so as to lessen the amount of Sunday labor imposed upon those now on the staff. The Provincial Alliance officials will carefully consider the whole post-office question, since it has been raised by the opening of the lobby in Kingston on Sunday.

QUEEN ZEPHRA.

There is just a possibility that not merely the citizens of Belleville, but the people of the villages nearby, are underrating the beauty and attractiveness of Queen Zephra, regarding it as an ordinary amateur effort. It is well worth going miles to see. It is impossible to see the like with any travelling company, and it is the nearest approach to the spectacular opening of an English pantomime ever presented on any stage. It is a great undertaking by the ladies of the Belleville Hospital, and it merits great patronage, and we predict capacity houses at each performance.

Cherry Valley Man Shot Himself Dead.

SHOOTING IS THOUGHT TO HAVE BEEN ACCIDENTAL.

Picton, Ont., April 15. — Frank Blackley, a prominent farmer of Cherry Valley, was shot Saturday afternoon. He had been shooting muskrats near his farm, and not returning for supper, a party went searching for him and his dead body was found in a pile of brushwood. The shot had completely shattered the back of his head. The shooting is believed to have been wholly accidental as it was seen where he had tripped on a gnarled root in the ground.

Mr. Blackley was prominent in dairying interests.

Manager Hays Talks On Railway Rates.

Montreal, April 15.—Mr. Charles M. Hays, second vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk System, arrived in Montreal to-day on his return from a trip to England.

Speaking of the Grand Trunk shareholders' meeting, recently held in London, Mr. Hays said that it was particularly satisfactory to all concerned, for the reports showed a very prosperous year, "but there is always this to remember," he remarked, "increased income always means increased expenditure, and we are always being urged to make our expenditure go beyond our income. I do not mind the increased expenditure as long as we are allowed to earn the money to pay the interest on that expenditure, but to urge us to make expenditure, and at the same time to endeavor to cut down our revenue makes a state of things which cannot be met satisfactorily. With an outcry, such as there is all through Canada, about a lack of transportation facilities, shortage of cars, engines, and so on, it hardly seems consistent to curtail the power of the railways to pay interest on the extra expenditure that is called for.

"I refer more particularly, of course, to the agitation to reduce passenger fares, and a general disposition to question freight rates. My view is that competitive conditions fix the rates. We have to meet rates of the lines to the south, and the rates of the water routes when navigation opens. Having to meet these conditions regulates the rates the same as the crops regulate the price of grain."

Touching on Grand Trunk Pacific matters, Mr. Hays said that while he was in London a very successful issue was made of five millions of Grand Trunk Pacific debenture stock, which was sold for the purpose of providing equipment for the new railway.

EYE STRAIN IN CHILDREN.

Is often neglected until permanent injury is done to one or both eyes. The parents often object to put glasses on their children, thinking as long as they can see apparently well there is nothing wrong; yet there may be a great deal of trouble present and the child have normal vision, with one or both eyes. I frequently find in children that one eye is of very little use to them, they have been doing all their work with one eye, and in most cases the parents or child did not know this until after consulting us. Some of the symptoms of E. S. in children: May be dull in studies; health may be below normal, redness of lids or twitching of same; the eyes may be hot and painful at times, scowling, or blinking, headache, etc. If any of these symptoms present themselves in your children, you had better bring them for free consultation, and find out before it is too late if anything is wrong.

EARTHQUAKE IN MEXICO.

Three Cities In Ruins—Many Killed and Injured.

Chilpacingo, Mex., April 16.—This city has been completely destroyed by one of the most serious earthquakes that has ever visited this section.

Up to last night the known dead number eleven, and the badly injured twenty-seven.

A panic prevails everywhere, and people are fleeing to the open country. The earth continues to rock at half-hour intervals, and many minor shocks are completing the work of destruction of the first earthquake.

All telegraph communication with the outside world ceased shortly after 11.50 o'clock Sunday night, when the first shock was felt. The telegraph officers have installed temporary quarters in an open square.

Word has reached here that the Town of Chilapa, forty-two kilometers to the northeastward, has also been destroyed. As yet no details have been received as to the number of dead and wounded, but it is feared the number will be large.

This city is the capital of the State of Guerrero, and four years ago was visited by an earthquake which killed and wounded many of its inhabitants and destroyed a large part of the town. The population of the town is 7,496, and until the panic into which the citizens have been thrown abates it will be impossible to state accurately to what an extent this earthquake has decreased it.

The population of the City of Chilapa is 15,000.

Third City May Be Gone.

Midway between the cities of Chilpancingo and Chilapa is the City of Tixtla. This is a prosperous and progressive community, and as no word has been received from there it is feared that it also has been destroyed.

Judging from the movements of the earthquake, Tixtla would be directly in its line, and if the city has escaped it has been only a miracle.

The nearest big town, Aculpe, is 131 kilometers to the southwest of this place, and has not been heard from.

Both the volcanoes of Colima and Jerullo are in this region, and the people fear that the seismic disturbances may cause these mountains to become more active.

The inhabitants hereabouts are known as "Pintos," because of the spots on their faces. They are noted for their hardy, warlike spirit, and for their stoicism and fanaticism, but the recent catastrophe seems to have completely unnerved them.

Americans In Danger.

The city is located 97 kilometres from the nearest railroad line, and it will be impossible for the people to flee, except on foot or on horseback.

This fact caused a considerable amount of anxiety, because the state is inhabited by a large number of Americans, who are engaged in prospecting for mines.

Will Be Bye-Election.

Fredericton, N. B., April 16.—Yesterday morning Hon. Clifford W. Robinson was sworn in as Provincial Secretary. This makes vacant Robinson's seat in Westmoreland County, and a writ for the bye-election has been issued. Polling will take place on May 7.

Hand Amputated By Train.

Stratford, April 16.—E. J. Bloney, painter and paper-hanger, had his left hand severed by falling from a train yesterday morning. While passing between two coaches, his hat blew off, and, in attempting to recover it, he fell, the wheels passing over his hand.

CANADIANS BUNCOED

Germans Are Reaping Benefit of British Preferential Tariff.

Foreign-Made Goods Being Shipped to Canada Through English Ports—Mr. Bourassa Would Abolish Preference—The Laughing Stock of the Commercial World — Col. Hughes and the French-Canadians.

Ottawa, April 16.—On motion to go into supply yesterday Mr. Armstrong of Lambton read official communications to show that German and Belgium goods are being transshipped to Canada from England, thus obtaining the benefit of the British preference. Watches, bicycles, carpets and cutlery were among the items mentioned. Razors made in Germany were being shipped to England there stamped with the word "Sheffield." Mr. Armstrong favored a mutual preference.

Mr. Fielding replied that Mr. Armstrong in one breath complained of the German surtax and in the next breath complained that the surtax was not enforced, but that the German imports came in under the preferential tariff. He insisted that no frauds were being practiced, but he would call the matter to the attention of the Customs Department.

Mr. Foster thought that the Government should proceed more vigorously. The people of Canada had been buncoed in the matter of this preference. It only benefitted the British middleman and the German manufacturer.

Mr. Bourassa said a system of lower preferential tariff invited this kind of fraud. England being a free trade country, it was natural that German manufacturers should ship their goods to that country for the purpose of dumping them into Canada. Canada had become the laughing stock of the commercial world. He favored the repeal of the preference.

The Colonel and Ecclesiastics.

A lively debate ensued upon Col. Sam Hughes rising to explain that he meant no offence to his French Catholic friends when he said a few nights ago that the exiled French priests coming to Canada were a curse to the country. He thought that all people agreed that ecclesiastical tyranny was a curse. He did not confine his remarks to any one religion. He believed that the exiled French priests now in Canada were misleading the youth by teaching the French language and disloyalty.

Mr. Bourassa submitted that the remarks of Col. Hughes were inspired by ignorance and bigotry. The French priests had preserved Canada loyal to the British crown.

R. L. Borden paid a tribute to the Catholic clergy of France and quoted from the famous scene between the bishop and Jean aljean. He criticised Col. Hughes and regretted the phrase that he had used.

Mr. Lemieux also protested.

Col. Hughes repeated that he had nothing to apologize for, but he felt that some members were distorting his remark and making a mountain out of a molehill. He said that he had brought about the sending of Canadian troops to South Africa, although Sir Wilfrid and Sir Charles Tupper had united to oppose it.

Officials In Elections.

R. L. Borden called attention to the fact that Zaccheus Hall, postmaster at Hampton, N. S., had been convicted of bribing in two elections, but he still continues to serve as a postmaster. Two fishery inspectors had acted as scrutineers and canvassers for Mr. Fielding at the last election and a number of other officials and civil servants had taken an active part. He therefore moved a vote of censure.

Mr. Fielding fell back on the old argument that the Conservatives did worse than the Liberals. It was impossible to enforce the rule too strictly against petty postmasters getting $25 a year. Zaccheus Hall had resigned as postmaster.

Mr. Borden's resolution was defeated 40 to 70.

BATTERED BY STORM.

Everything Movable Swept From Deck of Steamer.

St. John, N. B., April 16.—Battered by the terrible storm that has been sweeping the coast of the North Atlantic for the last few days, the schooner Fanny, Capt. Halfyard, from the West Indies, arrived at St. John with every movable thing swept from her decks.

The vessel was almost on her beam ends for twenty hours, and the crew had to smash in the heads of a hundred poncheons of molasses and let it run into the hold, so that it could be pumped out to allow the ship to lift enough to the head to get her under sail.

WANT ONTARIO'S LAND

Premier Whitney Makes Vigorous Protest in the House.

Cool Proposal to Appropriate 55,000 Acres of Land in the Province For Militia Purposes—No Compensation Offered—Power Bill Rules Out Conmee Act—Further Supplementary Estimates—Central Prison.

Toronto, April 16.—"I regret this occurrence. Heretofore our intercourse with the Dominion Govenment has been of a pleasant character. Personally I do not believe that the leader or the principal members of the Canadian Government accord in this arbitrary course. It appeals to me rather as the action of one man—the Minister of Militia, an individual clothed in little brief authority.

"But let me say to the people of Ontario and to the members of this House that the Provincial Government will have no stone unturned to stop this outrageous action by the Minister of Militia at Ottawa (applause). We will go to the foot of the Throne if necessary, and I mistake much the character of British justice as evidenced in the traditions, history and experience of her people, if the property of the individual of the community and of the province is not amply safe against all attempts at gross and arbitrary confiscation."

The Legislative Chamber rang with applause, repeatedly re-echoed, in which several of the Liberal members joined.

The Prime Minister, Hon. J. P. Whitney, did not mince words. The doctrine of Ontario was defined as "what we have we'll hold. He had laid on the table the correspondence from the Secretary of State and Minister of Militia at Ottawa declaring that 55,000 acres in the Petawawa district of new Ontario had been taken over by the Dominion under section 117 of the British North America act for the purpose of "fortification or for the defence of the country."

Disturb Plucky Settlers.

Mr. Whitney pointed out that on this vast territory the Province had numerous outstanding timber licenses, which would come up for renewal on April 30. The stumpage value to the Province was over $100,000 and the dues ranged from $25,000 to $30,000. In addition—and even more serious—hundreds of worthy and plucky settlers had located upon it. They were living out their settlement duties and establishing their little homes. This Sir Frederick Borden, without a word of notice, undertook to confiscate for the purpose of establishing a shooting ground, or something of that character.

"I hazard the opinion," declared Mr. Whitney, "that we have reached a strange stage of affairs in a British country when such an unnecessary, unwarranted and arbitrary action on the part of any responsible Minister will be tolerated for a moment." (Applause).

The Prime Minister roundly scored Sir Frederick Borden. With the insolent assurance that he did not intend to recompense either Ontario or the private individuals he had acted in a wanton and disgraceful manner, taking advantage of his little brief authority to confiscate the land without a thought as to the rights of the settlers, the licenses, or the Province. Mr. Whitney declared his conviction that the clause quoted in the British North America act permitted no such outrage as this. "It neither authorizes nor excuses any such action," he declared amid renewed applause.

Will Uphold Rights.

So far as Ontario was concerned the Province had promptly replied that the territory could not and would not be taken—and Ontario would stand by her rights and the rights of the people. Mr. Whitney declared the whole action was redolent of the animus that pervaded the system of the Minister of Militia, and exonerated Sir Wilfrid Laurier from any connection therewith.

Just prior to adjournment Hon. Adam Beck introduced an important Government measure "an act to provide for the transmission of electric power for municipalities," which got its first and second readings. The bill defines the power of municipalities which have contracted for power with the commission to serve outside municipalities. It enacts that the Conmee clauses cannot apply to municipalities entering contracts with the commission, provides that line loss is part of the cost of operating and will be apportioned among the municipalities and sets forth in detail the proceedings of the municipality and the commission on an application being made for power.

Smoky Chimneys.

The House went again into committee on the municipal amendment act. A modified "smoke clause" was proposed by the Provincial Secretary to take the place of that stricken out last week on the suggestion of the Prime Minister. Under the new clause the person with the offending chimney cannot be prosecuted within 90 days of notice being given him by the officials of the municipality that his chimney is a nuisance. Locomotives and steamboats are excluded from the reconstructed clause.

"Remember that the Municipal Association is formed of reeves and clerks," observed Hon. Mr. Mackay. "I am arguing for the people."

Mr. MacKay's declaration succeeded Hon. Mr. Hanna's announcement that the Municipal Association were responsible for the clause providing that no person injured through a defective highway could sue the municipality responsible unless notice of the defect had been given to some municipal officer.

On Hon. Mr. Whitney's suggestion the question was allowed to stand till the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Dr. Reaume's bill to amend and consolidate the law respecting the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway was also put through committee without discussion, and got its third reading.

Two bills by Mr. Downey were also put through committee, viz., to amend the municipal light and heat act and to amend the act respecting municipal sanatoria for consumptives.

Further supplementary estimates were brought down totalling $9,050.00, and including a grant of $5,000 to the widow and daughter of the late Speaker St. John.

To Fight the Floods.

Messrs. Racine and Labrosse appealed to the Government for a grant of $30,000 towards fighting the floods caused by the Nation river.

The Prime Minister said he had a personal knowledge of the district and knew the damage done by the floods. So much money had been sunk in similar efforts, however, that Mr. Whitney "hesitated to offer further monetary sacrifice to the floods of the Nation river at the prisent time." The matter was under consideration.

Central Prison Removal.

Proceeding with the consideration of the supplementary estimates, Hon. Mr. Hanna stated, in response to an enquiry from Mr. Smith (Sault Ste. Marie) that the Government expected at the next session to submit a carefully prepared plan for the removal of the Central Prison. The Prime Minister also intimated that next session a Government plan for further aid to the winter fair at Guelph would be submitted.

The third readings included:

Bill to incorporate the village of Hepworth—Mr. MacKay.

For the improvement of public highways—Mr. Reaume.

Respecting the mortgage of real estate—Mr. Eilber.

To amend the municipal waterworks act—Mr. Torrance.

To amend the act respecting investments by trustees—Mr. McNaught.

DELMAS HAS RETIRED.

How Thaw Got Rid of His Leading Counsel.

New York, April 16.—Interest in the case of Harry K. Thaw now centres about the probable changes he will make in his staff of lawyers. While no official announcement has been made in this regard, intimations have come from the lawyers themselves that changes have been made, and that others will follow. Delphin M. Delmas, who led the fight at the recent trial, has, it is stated, severed his connection with the case. In this connection a story of the remarkable proceeding of Thaw, at a critical period of his trial, were published here yesterday.

The story recites that when the trial was resumed after the report of the lunacy commission, Mr. Delmas called Dr. Hamilton to the stand to have him testify as to Thaw's mental condition when the murder was committed. He was just about to question when he received a note from Thaw, which read: "You are no longer in charge of my case."

Thaw Fired Him.

Delmas, surprised, secured the court's permission to confer with his client, the story states, and when he asked Thaw what the note meant, Thaw is said to have replied: "It means just what it says. You are not going to make those men testify that I am insane. I am sane, and you know it. You are no longer in charge of my case."

Mr. Delmas then asked Thaw for permission to withdraw, but his request was refused. Delmas, under the law, could not voluntarily retire from the case, and Thaw, having told him that he (Thaw) was the leading counsel in his own case, Mr. Delmas asked him what he wished done.

"I want you to take Dr. Hamilton off the stand and begin to sum up for the jury," was the reply.

Delmas thereupon announced that the defendant rested his case, and Dr. Hamilton was excused without testifying.

Daniel O'Reilly makes the announcement that he is now counsel of record for Thaw, and will be in active charge hereafter. He was appointed to that position a couple of weeks ago, he says, succeeding Clifford W. Hartridge. Thaw appointed O'Reilly the day Mr. Hartridge started to cross-examine Dr. Mabon, Mr. O'Reilly says, and tried to frame a hypothetical question which the judge ruled out.

Mr. O'Reilly is authority for the statement that he is the only one of the five lawyers re-engaged, but he says that Thaw is fond of Lawyer Peabody, and that he will be retained.

After a consultation with Thaw, Mr. O'Reilly said that at the second trial the defence will be practically the same as that at the first trial—insanity of the defendant at the time he shot White.

POSTAL RATES REDUCED.

Two Cents a Pound Instead of Eight For Newspapers.

London, April 16.—The postage on newspapers, magazines, and trade journals between Great Britain and Canada will be reduced to two cents per pound May 1, instead of the present charge of eight cents, thus putting Great Britain in a more favorable postal position towards Canada in respect to these classes of publications than any other country.

In making the announcement in the House of Commons yesterday, Postmaster-General Buxton said the concession must not be regarded as a precedent for a reduction in other classes. It was based on the special and peculiar position offered by Canada, geographical and otherwise, by which British newspapers, etc., were unable to obtain a footing in Canada.

The arrangement, Mr. Buxton added, was experimental, and was limited at present to four years.

Shelter Agent Assaulted.

Peterboro, April 16.—George Cochrane, agent of the Children's Aid Society, was viciously assaulted on Saturday evening while calling at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Duncan, Sherbrooke street, to remove a child to the shelter. Duncan, his wife, and a neighbor and two dogs, tried to forcibly eject the agent, who was considerably battered. He was saved from more serious injury by the arrival of a policeman, who arrested Duncan after a strenuous struggle.

EVELYN THAW'S MOTHER.

Says She Would Have Killed White Had She Known.

Pittsburg, April 17.—The Pittsburg Leader yesterday afternoon prints a six-column statement from Mrs. Chas. J. Holman, mother of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, in which she defends herself against the accusations expressed and implied against her during the Thaw trial.

The statement opens by saying that two nights after the night upon which Harry Thaw shot Stanford White she received this telegram from her daughter: "It is most important for you to say absolutely nothing."

Until now she has remained silent and has been forced to take the defensive because of the attack made upon her by Mr. Delmas in his closing address to the jury. She denies that she aided the district attorney in any way.

In Love With Stage.

"Florence," she says, "was in love with the stage." She did everything to discourage her, but it was useless. The story of Florence's first meeting with Stanford White, she says, is substantially as told by the former on the witness stand. When Florence returned she told her mother she had met the grandest man. White, she says, warned her specifically against several young men with whom Florence had been acquainted, but did not refer to Thaw. His manner, words and actions were the personification of wholehearted, disinterested generosity, Mrs. Holman says, and if ever a woman reposed implicit confidence in a man she says she did.

Mrs. Holman then asserts that if Florence underwent the experience that is said to have befallen her, she did not take her into her confidence.

Continuing, she says: "Had she told me what she told the Thaw jury it would not have been necessary for Harry Thaw to kill Stanford White. I would have done it myself."

"My love for my daughter is as deep and intense as it was when I first held her in my arms a helpless baby."

Rupture Between Counsel.

New York, April 17.—The first open indication of the oft-repeated trouble between the array of attorneys who represented Harry K. Thaw in his recent trial came yesterday, when Henry C. McPike, associate of D. M. Delmas, called on Clerk Penny of the Supreme Court and demanded the immediate surrender of some of the exhibits introduced by the defence during the trial.

Acting on instructions from Daniel O'Reilly, who claims to be the only lawyer retained for the defence, the application was refused.

"BOBS" AND GEN. BOTHA.

Former Adversaries Joke Now About Their Experiences.

London, April 17.—The colonial Premiers were presented with the freedom of the Guild Hall yesterday and subsequently were entertained at luncheon by the Lord Mayor, Sir William Treloar, and the corporation. Each of the visitors received letters-patent as a freeman, enclosed in a gold casket. The Premiers drove in procession to the Guild Hall, Gen. Botha, the Transvaal Premier, as "the Benjamin of the Brotherhood," riding with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Canadian Prime Minister, and bringing up the rear. The decorations of the streets through which the procession passed were not pretentious, but the visitors received a hearty welcome from large crowds of people.

The luncheon at the Guild Hall was a brilliant function. It was attended by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Premier Campbell-Bannerman, and other Cabinet Ministers; Field Marshal Lord Roberts, who cracked jokes with Gen. Botha about their experiences on the veldt; many peers and members of the House of Commons, and military and naval men in uniforms sparkling with decorations, while the women present were dressed in the most elaborate costume.

The Boer flag captured by the City Imperial Volunteer at Jacobsdal, which usually ornaments the banqueting hall, was removed on this occasion, so as not to offend Gen. Botha and his party.

EMPIRE STILL AN ENTITY.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Says the Conference Will Prove It.

London, April 17.—Replying to the Lord Mayor's toast to the Premiers at the Guildhall luncheon, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was seated on the Lord Mayor's right, predicted that the results of the conference just opened would demonstrate to the world that the British Empire was a living entity and that its success was assured. The presence of General Botha and Dr. Jameson at the same conference board, the speaker added, showed that the meeting could not be a failure.

Carnegie Gift Dedicated.

New York, April 17.—The beautiful new engineering societies building, presented to the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and the American Institute of Mining Engineers, by Andrew Carnegie, was dedicated yesterday. The building is located at 29 West 39th street.

A Terrible Death.

Port Arthur, April 17.—A Hungarian was killed at the Canadian Northern elevator while feeding the conveyor belt, while attempting to step over the rapidly revolving shaft. A set-screw caught in the leg of his overalls. His left leg was torn completely off, and neck and back and skull broken.

In Railway Subsidies.

Premier Whitney Will Keep Faith With the People.

No More Wholesale Giving Away of Ontario Lands—Only Small Grants Made—Electric Power to Be Supplied At Cost—Evasions of License Act—Child Labor In Hotels—Defective Highways.

Toronto, April 17.—"Whatever else this Government may do or fail to do it will earnestly endeavor to keep faith with the people," declared Hon. J. P. Whitney, the Prime Minister, at the Legislature yesterday in outlining the Government policy in relation to applications of railways for subsidies and land grants.

"We believe that the time has come to stop granting any of Ontario's lands to any scheme whatever. The policy upon which we asked the confidence of the people—a confidence which we are proud to have had extended—was that the time had come to call a halt on all such gifts except in very exceptional cases. What ought the people to think if we now, enjoying their confidence, turn our backs upon our professions and virtually declare ourselves dishonorable.

"The time may come when it is wise in the interests of the Province to amend our course, but ere this takes place we must have something clear and unmistakable from the public mind of the people." (Applause.)

Accordingly only one small grant of $5,000 was made.

Grants to Railways.

Mr. Whitney said it was proposed to grant $5,000 in all to the railway from Thessalon to the Algoma branch of the C. P. R.; to extend the time limit to Dec. 31, 1910, for the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway; to Dec. 1, 1909, for the Toronto, Lindsay and Pembroke; and to Dec. 31, 1907, for the Bracebridge and Trading Lake, providing that the promised $35,000 is spent.

The Canadian Northern have been granted a revival of the $2,000 per mile bonus passed by the former Government on condition that they swing their line round westward so that it does not compete with the Government-owned Temiskaming road. The application for land grant was refused.

The Algoma Central's application for the guaranteeing of $8,500,000 was refused, the Government taking the ground that the guarantee of the Soo loan was sufficient to this company. The time for earning the land grant was, however, extended two years.

Electric Power at Cost.

The popularity and non-partisan character of the power policy was evidenced in the applause on both sides of the House which greeted the announcement of Hon. Adam Beck that the Hydro-Electric Commission was in a position to more than make good the prices it had quoted to the municipalities. Further evidence of the co-operation of both parties in the power project was demonstrated by the felicitations extended to the Minister of Power by Mr. Preston and Mr. Graham and the graceful response of Hon. Adam Beck that he was indebted to the Opposition—and particularly to the member for Brant—for valuable and helpful suggestions in his campaign. He also impressed the fact that it was the intention to supply power to the people at cost, a declaration the Prime Minister hastened to emphasize.

Mr. Preston (Brant) congratulated Mr. Beck on his campaign for cheap power. The whole Province wished him success. He heartily concurred in the wisdom of the course in excluding the applicability of the Connee clauses. He asked if the thirty years in the contract referred to the general charter or to the cost of power. He also urged that the Government quote the maximum amount which the municipality would have to pay.

Mr. Beck said the thirty years was the term of the debentures issued to pay the cost of the right of way and transmission line. If the Government proceeded at once, as Mr. Beck intimated was probable, to build a transmission line this enterprise would be paid for in thirty years by the sinking fund.

Commission Make Good.

Regarding the price Mr. Beck said that the aim of the Commission was to fulfill the promise of the Prime Minister and supply the people with power at cost. (Mr. Whitney—"Hear, hear!" Applause.) The amount would depend in its finality on the cost of power, the amount used, how it was measured and the liability of the generating company for non-fulfilment of its contract. "Let me say on behalf of the Commission and the Government," added Mr. Beck, "that we are in a position to more than make good the prices quoted to the people." (Applause.)

Mr. Preston rejoiced in the Minister's announcement. He was heartily in accord with his power policy and had not asked his questions in a carping manner. (Applause.)

Mr. Beck understood this. He also desired to make public his appreciation of valued suggestions received from the Liberal member for Brant. It was the adoption of his idea that had resulted in the abolition of the Connee clauses. Cheap power was, he was glad to say, not a party issue. (Applause.)

Mr. Graham also took occasion to commend the policy of cheap power. The sincerity of the Minister was displayed in his readiness to receive and consider suggestions from both sides of the House.

Mr. McDougal (Ottawa) asked if the ten-year contract limited the liability of the municipality.

Mr. Beck replied that it did, so far as the taking of power was concerned, but the debentures extended over thirty years.

Liquor License Act.

The Provincial Secretary's bill to amend the Liquor License Act was presented for its second reading. It provides that in local option municipalities the bar cannot be leased and released to other parties than the proprietor to prevent the courts from getting past a first conviction, for which imprisonment is the penalty. In Owen Sound this idea found great favor. Hotel-keepers who had been fined, leased the bar to another, who being fined also, would in turn lease to another. The bill is to prevent such evasions.

Mr. Preston (Brant) asked concerning the basis of taking the vote on local option, whether it should be one man one vote, also whether 25 per cent. of the voters meant 25 per cent. of those on the list or of those entitled to vote. He asked, too, if a voter could authorize another to sign his name to a petition.

Hon. Mr. Hanna pointed out that in view of the consolidation of the statutes which would be brought down next session, it was thought well to leave the act as it was in the meantime.

Mr. Graham expressed the opinion that the selling of liquor to a habitual drunkard, after notice had been served on the hotel-keeper, should be placed among the serious offences.

Children In Hotels.

Mr. Preston advised consideration of the employment of children in hotels. The child labor committee thought children under 16 years should be prohibited from such employment. He also advocated holding the hotel-keeper liable for misdemeanors of the bar-tender.

The bill passed.

The second reading was given Mr. Foy's bill for the preservation of Butler's burying ground at Niagara-on-the-Lake, and the bill respecting stationary engineers was put through committee, marine and locomotive engineers being excluded from its general provisions.

On the third reading of the municipal amendment act, Mr. Ferguson moved an amendment striking out the clause which removed the liability for accidents from defective highways from the municipalities unless they were notified. The amendment carried and the much-talked-of clause 606 got a new lease of life.

The bill providing for increases in the salaries of the Cabinet Ministers was passed in committee.

34 Years For Burglary.

New York, April 17.—Clifford M. Smith, a 23-year-old youth, who was detected in the act of extracting pennies from a child's bank in a house which he had entered by force in the night, was sentenced yesterday to serve 34 years and 4 months in Sing Sing Prison.

Thirty years of the term was imposed on the burglary charge, and the four years and four months for having assaulted Mr. and Mrs. John Oestreicher with a loaded screw driver when they interrupted him.

Fatal Duel Over Girl.

New York, April 17.—After a quarrel over a girl to whom both were paying attention, two Italians fought a duel with revolvers in Ozone Park, L.I., yesterday, as a result of which one of them, Buca Piandiane, was instantly killed.

Vincenzo Cica, the other duellist, was found hiding in a closet in the home of his victim. As the police burst in the closet door Cica shot and killed himself.

The two men had been close friends.

Prince May Come.

London, April 17.—It is rumored that the Prince and Princess of Wales will pay another visit to Canada in the near future.

The cry for help in the West grows louder in spite of the hundreds of new people who are rushing in. There is a cry for help in Ontario, says the Ottawa Journal, so strong that a great injustice will be done the older province if all the energy of the Government is devoted to the promotion of the settlement of the prairie lands. The Government is doing something at this end to secure locations for persons willing to engage as farm laborers in Ontario, but there is reason to doubt it in the fields whence the immigrants are drawn there is so much heard, as there ought to be, of the opportunities which Ontario offers to the home-seekers.

Hon. Sidney Olivier, appointed Governor of Jamaica in succession to Sir Frank Swettenham, is well known in Canada. He has been acting colonial secretary of British Honduras and was sent on a special expedition to the Leeward Islands to reorganize the finances there. In 1898 he visited Washington in a vain attempt to negotiate with the United States a reciprocity treaty on behalf of the West Indies. He was colonial secretary of Jamaica from 1889 to 1904 and has acted as Governor there. Once he was a Socialist. Is he still a Socialist? If so how will he reconcile his socialism with the use of the iron hand in the velvet glove which every Governor of Jamaica must resort to in his treatment of the blacks? His recreations are stated by himself in "Who's Who" to be "loafing and dilletantism."

It has been proved that two children who were found dead in a baby carriage at Seattle had been poisoned with soothing syrup, the special brand of which is not given by the paper. The police have begun a raid on patent medicines offered for sale in the drug stores of that city, which are known to contain morphia and cocaine. One decoction, which is apparently an innocent tooth wash, is described as containing so much alcohol that a person can get a most enjoyable jag by drinking it, as it contains a large percentage of alcohol, and a bottle of a certain remedy for women's diseases carries sufficient alcohol to knock a strong man off his feet.

In 1750 the king of France accidentally shot and killed one of his courtiers instead of the hare at which he was aiming. The budget of state was saddled with an annuity of $2,400, which has been paid regularly to the heirs of the seigneur, who had the honor of being killed by the king. The last of the heirs died recently, and the annuity was stopped. This bit of bad markmanship on the part of the king cost the state $371,200, for the annuity was paid for 156 years.

Lord Alfred Douglas, who was mixed up in the scandal that involved the author of "Lady Windemere's Fan" in ruin, is a younger son of the Marquis of Queensbery. Lord Douglas fled from England when the author was tried and the late Marquis engaged in a fistic encounter with his eldest son, the present Marquis, on Piccadilly one fine Sunday afternoon. The late Marquis was a patron of cock-fighting, boxing and pugilism, and framed the rules that are now in use by all pugilists. Lord Alfred Douglas, who is now happily married, has just been appointed editer of the Academy, a leading London literary newspaper.

A sensible woman has at last appeared at Seattle. She is rich and announces that she will build a rooming house in which will only be admitted as guests couples who have children. The larger the family, the warmer will be the glad hand which will welcome them to this model and modern hostelry. At other rooming houses in the western metropolis married people who apply for accommodation are asked: "Have you any children?" If they reply in the affirmative they are almost invariably told, "We never board children." We are glad that a hotelkeeper has at last been found who does not regard children as a nuisance, and their fathers and mothers as disgraced.

A Plan to Prevent Railway Accidents.

MAKES IT POSSIBLE TO TELEGRAPH TO AND FROM RUNNING TRAINS.

A young Canadian, Albert J. Hitch, of Windsor, Ont., has, according to the "Canadian Engineer," invented and patented a railway signal apparatus, which it is claimed will completely revolutionize railway operation, rendering accidents either by collision and derailment at open switches practically impossible. Operators will not be needed, at the smaller stations, since it enables despatchers to send messages to trains without the use of telegraphy. It will also enable him to know at all times where each train is, at what speed it is travelling, and whether the numerous switches are open or closed.

The device, which is protected by patents in Canada and the United States is known as the "Know-Hitch Railway Signalling Apparatus." Many prominent railway men have examined the apparatus, and all are of opinion that it is the most complete arrangement of the kind that has been invented, and in consequence they are much in favor of its adoption. Some are of the opinion that sooner or later the invention will be used on all first-class roads, and already Mr. Hitch has received offers for the purchase of his patent, although it has been made public only a short time.

For every few miles of road there is a "casing" just inside one of the rails, and of the same height. This casing has wires connecting it with the divisional point, and when the train passes over it a message is transmitted on the principle of telegraphy, opening or closing an electric circuit. The "casing" is about the same height as the rails and is set on springs, and beneath the spring plate are the ordinary telegraphic instruments. When the train passes over this casing the flange of the wheel depresses the spring-plate, and in so doing completes the circuit, thereby transmitting a message to the despatcher's office, where it operates an indicator giving the exact position of the train, and, at the same time distant telegraphic signal.

The system for sending messages to trains is entirely separate, and is done by means of a third rail of a much lighter material than the regular rail. This third rail is placed just outside the usual rails, and the locomotive is fitted with trolley wheels that run on the same. These rails are electrically connected, and connections are made with the despatcher's office that enable him to ring the bell in the cab, an incandescent lamp being lighted at the same time. The blocks are placed ten miles apart, and each one is connected with the main office by separate wires, so that the despatcher can send a message to any particular engineer, without sending one to every engineer along that line. When the signal is being sent an electric light in the office shows whether the line is in working order or not. These two systems will give the despatcher entire control over the line in his section.

The inventor, who was formerly an operator on the Wabash at Paynes' Mills, not far from St. Thomas, believes that the combination system can be put in at a cost not exceeding four thousand dollars per ten miles of road.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Jim Hill's Retirement.

The frequently reported resignation of Mr. Hill has come at last, and he has retired from the position of president of the G. N. R. system, passing the authority into the hands of his son, and retaining for himself the subordinate position of chairman of the board of directors. The retirement of this remarkable man from a position of absolute control to that of adviser marks an epoch in the history of railroad building in the Northwest and has created a widespread feeling of regret, especially throughout Ontario, Mr. Hill as is generally known, having been born in this province. Starting life in a humble position on a Canadian railway Mr. Hill's career has been one of unexampled success. He has triumphed where others failed, and his executive ability and foresightedness have never been called in question. During the period of the serious panic which hung like a cloud over financial enterprises in the United States Mr. Hill began and finished his Great Northern road without a dollar of Government money or Government land. Highly subsidized railways passed into the hands of receivers, but Mr. Hill continued to construct and never paused in the work of construction. From beginning to end he held the confidence of the capitalists who backed him and has lived to see his great system extended over other states and embrace other territories than those which he started out to conquer. He resigns the presidency of his great system covered with honor, and his resignation is evidence that his day of activity is past and that he will in future counsel where before he controlled absolutely. His son and successor is a man who has had the benefit of careful training and example of his father. It will be found that he will carry on the work where his father laid it down and that the great system will not suffer or retrograde in his hands.

The Deportation of Criminals.

In the Senate on Friday Senators Lougheed and Ellis took exception to the clause in the Bill to amend the Immigration act to make better provision for the deportation of undesirables who have been criminally convicted or who have become charges on the public within two years after their arrival in Canada, by which the municipalities in which the individuals had settled must bear the cost of deportation. In explanation Hon. Mr. Scott stated that it was the intention of the Minister of the Interior to only compel municipalities to pay for the deportation of individuals who had been for some time resident within their borders. This, says the Montreal Gazette, can hardly be accepted as satisfactory. If the law is a good one it should be enforced, and if the cost of enforcement is left upon the municipality there is more than good reason to expect that it will become a dead letter. Municipalities will not go to the expense of deportation when they may relieve themselves of the burden of a useless immigrant by allowing him to go either to the common jail, at the expense of the Provincial Government, or to the penitentiary, where he becomes a burden upon the Dominion Government. As an habitual criminal the chances are that the sentence would be one of confinement in the penitentiary. Would it not be better to utilize what could be spent in maintenance by the Dominion Government in defraying the cost of deportation? The point is of some importance at the present time because, as the cable despatches of the last few days show, British magistrate are again showing a disposition to release offenders on the undertaking of their relations and friends that their passage will be paid to Canada. Some of those banished ones may come to Canada and become good citizens, but the chances are against this coming to pass. A determination on the part of the Canadian authorities to deport every criminal undesirable would have a tendency to check this undesirable disposition of prisoners by British magistrates. No one in Great Britain can object, for the laws of Great Britain provide for the deportation of undesirables, and they are frequently enforced.

DO WOMEN GROW OLD EARLIER THAN MEN?

IF SO, WHY? A QUESTION OF VITAL INTEREST TO BOTH MEN AND WOMEN.

In the interests of science as well as of women generally, an investigation has been in progress for some time to ascertain whether the oft repeated statement that women age quicker than men is borne out by actual facts. Taking 100 men and 100 women of various ages the following facts have been found: At 15 years of age girls will average in appearance two years younger than boys; at 25, one year younger; at 40, about the same; at 50, two and a half years older; at 60, five years older; at 80, 10 years older. Many exceptions are, of course, recorded. Science is now at work investigating why this is the case, and whether a remedy can be found. It has been demonstrated that those women who use certain tonics and keep their blood pure and system properly built up form the exception to this rule. The greatest tonic and system building preparation, the one that exactly meets the requirements of science and of actual experience, is Psychine. It purifies the blood, keeps all the vital organs, especially the heart, lungs, stomach and nervous system in perfect condition, enabling them to do their work without waste and wear on the body. It keeps young people young and makes old people look young and feel young and full of vigor. It keeps vitality at the highest possible point, at all ages, both in men and women. Good health and permanent youthfulness and vigor are the birthright of every Canadian—man or woman—who will use Psychine.

"I have to thank Psychine for my present health. Last spring I was going in decline. I could hardly drag myself across the floor. I could not sweep the carpet. If I went for a drive I had to lie down when I came back; if I went for a mile or two on my wheel I was too weak to lift it through the gateway, and last time I came in from having a spin I dropped utterly helpless from fatigue. My father had three sisters died with lung trouble, and would give me no peace until I procured the Dr. Slocum Remedies. After taking two bottles of Psychine I must say the results were wonderful, and people were constantly remarking my improvement. I took Coltsfoot Expectorant with Psychine, and mark the change. Instead of a little, pale, hollow-cheeked, listless, melancholy girl, I am to-day full of life, I am ready for a sleigh ride, a skating match or an evening party with anyone, and a few months ago I could not struggle to church, 40 rods from my home.

MISS ELLA WOOD,

"Brownsville, Ont."

The British Umbrella

London tradesmen are bemoaning the fact that the habit of carrying an umbrella is no longer so general in England as in former years, says the New York World. Both manufacturers and shopkeepers feel the shrinkage in their sales. They lay their troubles to the popularity of the hardy derby, which is displacing the tender high silk hat without thoughts of what will happen to it in case of a downpour. So an umbrella goes with it as one glove goes with another.

It is sad to think of the gradual decline of the silk hat in England's capital. The correct London clerk in "topper" and long black coat has been an impressive spectacle. He was a standing announcement to the world that he had a proper sense of the dignity of his social station. In his way he was as much of a national institution as the British matron and her bevy of daughters, all capped with what Ruskin called "porkpie" hats.

As for the women in London, they are said to be using fewer umbrellas because, to save their finery, they can always run into tea-shops, omnibuses and underground railways. At the same time the American traveller finds the average women in London when outdoors dressed with far more regard for bad weather and dirty streets than New York women. In spite of the tyrannical decrees of fashion climate will not be denied in prescribing the style of costume.

But British footgear will help to preserve the traditions of the race, even if the umbrella tends to take its place in literature and the museums along with the sedan chair of Queen Anne's day and the smalls men wore one hundred years ago.

Dearness and Tightness Of Money.

One of the features in finances at present is the dearness and scarcity of money in circulation. The rates in the banks for loans have advanced, and there is a disposition to give less credit.

There are many reasons volunteered for the present situation, but an authority on finances puts the following forward as the primary causes: "The great destruction of the world's supplies of goods and the loss of the labor of many thousands of men during the wars of the past few years, in addition to the losses through earthquakes and other calamities, made a sudden demand upon all resources. The goods had to be replaced. The efforts to replace them called for all kinds of industrial expansion. In Canada particularly it was found by those who wanted iron and steel and other products, that the English, European and United States markets, which were formerly so keen to offer supplies, were unable to accept orders. Canada then commenced to manufacture the material. This occasioned calls upon the Canadian banks."

The snow storms in the west interfering with the movement of grain eastward was another leading factor in making money dear and tight. The railways being unable to bring grain forward, the owners who had borrowed money on it from the banks, were unable to realize on the goods, and the banks were unpaid. When to the foregoing is added increasing extravagance, by which the bank accounts of the people had already been impaired, the present condition of affairs cease to cause surprise. Naturally, the stock market would soon show the effects. In casting about for a means to improve his financial position, each would sell that which could most easily, and with the least loss or most profit, be sold. Stocks can always be sold. For some time past they have been costing more to carry than they returned. So stocks were sold as many have reason to remember.

How long dear money will continue no one may say. But it is plain that it will become easier as soon as the people add to the credit side of their accounts. This will be done to a very large extent after the opening of navigation. It is not easy to estimate the value of the products which will be rushed to market immediately facilities are afforded. But it is certain that the goods waiting to be shipped are of sufficient value to go an enormous way towards rehabilitating bank accounts throughout Canada. The domestic situation should be considerably relieved by the first of June.

Knives Are Tiny Saws.

Knives, no matter how carefully sharpened, are little saws. The grinding away of the steel, done by the stone, is not an even work, but when the edge gets thin is a process of tearing away tiny bits of steel by the grit of the stone. This tearing makes the teeth. A fine stone makes fine teeth, a coarse stone coarse teeth. A carving knife used on meat is sharpened on a coarse stone or a steel and has coarse teeth, although its edge is thick. Its action in parting the meat is more that of a saw than a fine wedge. No matter how soft it may be it will not cut easily unless it is drawn over the meat and not simply pressed down. A razor, however, with its paperlike edge, will cut into flesh with a simple pressure. It is a wedge dividing the fibers of flesh just as a wedge of iron divides the fibers of the log it splits. But a razor is a saw, too, only as it is ground on the finest stones and later finished with a leather strap, its teeth are very fine indeed—hundreds and hundreds to the inch of blade.—C. H. Claudy in St. Nicholas.

Origin of Curtain Calls.

The first curtain call took place on the evening of Feb. 20, 1743. On that memorable evening Voltaire's "Merope" was performed for the first time in Paris. The author was known to the Paris public, but nothing that they had seen of his had pleased them so much as "Merope," and the enthusiasm found expression in noisy demands to see the author. In a letter Voltaire says this of the incident: "They dragged me out and led me by force to the box occupied by the Duchesse de Villars and her daughter-in-law. The whole theater seemed to have gone mad—all shouted to the duchesse to kiss me. The noise became so great that the lady finally obeyed. So I was, like Alain Chartier, publicly kissed, but he was asleep, while I was wide awake." Now authors answer similar calls by appearing before the curtain. They gain in so far that they can be seen better by their audience, but they must dispense with the duchesse's kiss—at least in public.—Berliner Tageblatt.

A man makes allowances for his faults, even though his wife may be one of them.

Why do you shun real publicity. Failing to use the "wants" sometimes amounts to that."

Light of the Stars.

Various attempts have been made to estimate the light of stars. In the northern hemisphere Argelander has registered 324,000 stars down to the nine and one-half magnitude, with the aid of the best photometric data. Agnes M. Clerk's "System of the Stars" gives the sum of the light of these northern stars as equivalent to 1.440 of full moonlight, and the total light of all stars similarly enumerated in both hemispheres to the number of about 900,000 is roughly placed at 1.180 of the lunar brightness. The scattered light of still fainter celestial bodies is difficult to evaluate. By a photographic method Sir William Abney in 1896 rated the total starlight of both hemispheres as 1.100 of full moonlight, and Professor Newcomb in 1901 from visual observations of diffused sky radiance fixed the light power of all stars at just 728 times that of Capella, or 1.89 of the light of the full moon. It is not certain, however, that the sky would be totally dark if all stars were blotted out. Certain processes make the upper atmosphere strongly luminous at times, and one never can be sure that this light is absent.

Dog That Climbed a Tree.

Can a dog climb a tree? A correspondent writes: "While on a walk on snowshoes in New Hampshire we tracked a porcupine to a balsam fir, in which it had taken refuge. My Scottish terrier climbed the tree, pulling herself up from branch to branch to a height of about seven feet, where a space of bare trunk separated her from the porcupine, which had watched her progress with evident alarm. The terrier made several ineffectual attempts to scale the smooth bark and finally jumped down into the snow." And of another curious trait the same writer continues: "This little dog and her mate, now dead, though enthusiastic fire worshipers at home, never sat near the bonfires built at luncheon or tea time on winter walks, but dug holes in the snow at a little distance, in which they curled themselves up after the manner of their primitive ancestors."—Chicago News.

Processes Which Defy Analysis.

I think that the more thoroughly and conscientiously we endeavor to study biological problems the more we are convinced that even those processes which we have already regarded as explicable both by chemical and physical laws are in reality infinitely more complex and at present defy any attempts at a mechanical explanation. Thus we have been satisfied to account for the absorption of food from the alimentary canal by the laws of diffusion and osmosis. But we now know that, as regards osmosis, the wall of the intestine does not behave like a dead membrane. We know that the intestinal wall is covered with epithelium and that every epithelial cell is in itself an organism, a living being with the most complex functions. We know that it takes up food by the active contractions of its protoplasm in the same way as observed in independent naked animal cells.—A. Bunge.

Her Valentine.

A young woman wrote about the year 1750: "The night before St. Valentine's day I got five bay leaves and pinned four of them to the four corners of my pillow and the fifth to the middle. And then if I dreamed of my sweetheart Betty said we would be married before the year was out. But to make more sure I boiled an egg hard and took out the yolk and filled it with salt and when I went to bed ate it, shell and all, without speaking or drinking after it. We also wrote our lovers' names upon bits of paper and rolled them up in clay and put them into water, and the first that rose up was to be our valentine. Mr. Blossom was my man. I lay abed and shut my eyes all the morning till he came to our house, for I would not have seen another man before him for all the world."

Beethoven's Oddities.

Beethoven used the snuffers for a toothpick. It was one of his peculiarities that he never allowed his servant to enter his study. He insisted that this room should remain exactly as he left it, no matter how deeply the dust lay on the precious musical manuscripts. He seldom looked in the glass when he tied his stock. Half the time he forgot to brush his hair. Every morning he carefully counted out seventeen beans from the coffee canister. These served for his breakfast. When he composed, he would pour cold water over his hands, and often people below him would complain of the water that soaked through his floor.

Suggestive.

"Miriam," said her mother, "have you ever given young Mr. Stapleford any reason to believe you cared for him enough to marry him?"

"He seems to think so," answered the daughter, "because I told him the other evening that he was sending me too many costly flowers and ought to begin to save his money."—Chicago Tribune.

HER REASON.

(Chicago News.)

I think perhaps I should not have complied,
But then I was so urgently invited,
He said indeed he would not be denied;
I said, of course, that I would be delighted,
In fact, you see, it was too dull to stay
At home; as Bob says, there "was nothing to it."
You see, he had a very coaxing way,
I had to do it.

I should have been just cool and friendly, still
He seemed to get extremely sentimental,
He took my hand, too much against my will,
I thought at first it was quite accidental.
I told him that I ought not to allow
Such liberties, decidedly; it's true it
Was wrong for me to smile, but then somehow
I had to do it.

I should not have permitted his embrace;
I know quite well my manner should have checked it.
I should at least have turned away my face.
I hope he didn't think that I'd expect it,
Or that I would expect a kiss so soon.
But then it happened somehow—don't pooh-pooh it.
My reason? Well, I think it was the moon,
I had to do it.

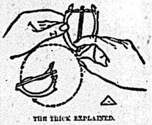
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

A WISHBONE TRICK.

How to Perform a Simple Yet Interesting Experiment.

When you have had fowl for dinner, preserve the bone shaped like a pitchfork, which is called the wishbone. That of the duck is the one which suits best for the construction of the little apparatus which we are about to make today. Twist a strong thread around one of the points of this forklike bone; then extend it to the other point, to which you will attach it solidly. Midway between the threads, extending from one point to the other, introduce a bit of wood not much bigger than a match, or a match itself, if you like, and turn it through several times in such a way as to twist the two lines of thread precisely as you would do in twisting the cord on a wood saw. The elasticity of the branches of the wishbone permits its extremities to approach each other slightly by means of this twisting. Draw the bit of wood back in such a way that its upper end alone will remain fixed in the thread and the other end will rest on the center of the bone and keep it with your finger there on the upper part of the same, as shown by the figure on the right in our illustration.



THE TRICK EXPLAINED.

When you take away your finger, the thread will untwist itself rapidly, and the bit of wood will instantly describe a complete circle in the direction indicated by the arrow on the left side of our illustration. All this has nothing extraordinary in it, but here is where the optical illusion comes in. For you who are performing the experiment and for each of the spectators the rotary movement of the bit of wood will be so rapid that nobody will perceive it. It looks as if the free end of the bit of wood passed through the center of the bone in order to get to the other side or as if it were cut in two. Repeat the experiment as often as you please. The illusion will, even to the most incredulous, always be the same.—Magical Experiments.

Luck In Falling.

"It's a peculiar thing the tricks that luck will now and then play a chap," said a prominent physician recently. "Take, for instance, the breaking of bones in one's body. Did you ever stop and think how very many hard and high falls a man can have, light on rocky ground with half his body twisted under the other half, so to speak, and come off with not even a scratch? Then, again, a fellow will just trip over his own foot and, falling to the ground, break a leg or an arm. A good many will say it all depends on how one alights, but that seems to have absolutely nothing to do with it, as I have seen a man alight in a certain way from a high fall and never injure himself and then again have I seen a second chap alight in the same identical way and break a leg and an arm."—Columbus Dispatch.

YIELDS UP THE DEAD.

Sale of Some Articles of Jewelry Leads to Solution of a Mystery.

A sensational murder mystery was partially solved last week when the body of a wealthy young man named Hentchel, who disappeared from home at Munich three years ago, was dug up on a piece of waste land outside the Bavarian capital.

Hentchel was the son of one of the wealthiest business men in Munich. He spent money lavishly, attended the pleasure resorts regularly, belonged to the fashionable clubs, gambled and kept race horses and motor cars.

He was very friendly with another young man named David Niederhofer, son of the proprietor of a stationary circus at Munich. Hentchel and Niederhofer were nearly always together, Hentchel finding the money for their amusements.

Disappeared In 1904.

Hentchel suddenly disappeared on May 24, 1904, and not the least trace of him could be found. Crime was suspected, but the police abandoned their investigations without finding the least clue.

A few days ago Niederhofer attempted to sell to a jeweler several articles of value which formerly belonged to Hentchel, and, as it happened, the jeweler remembered that they corresponded with particulars circulated by the police describing articles of jewelry which Hentchel commonly wore. There included diamond rings and an extremely expensive bracelet. The jeweler immediately communicated with the police, and detained young Niederhofer until they arrived to arrest him.

Publication of the news of Niederhofer's arrest brought other suspicious circumstances to light. A former employe at the Niederhofer circus informed the police that David Niederhofer ordered him about three years ago to dig a deep hole in waste land adjoining the circus. He had no idea for what object the hole was dug, but offered to show the police where the hole was made.

The Body Found.

Excavations on the waste land began early one morning, and continued all day without success. When they were resumed next morning, young Niederhofer was brought to watch the work, handcuffed and fettered, between two policemen.

After some time Hentchel's body was recovered, amid the intense excitement of all present. Niederhofer trembled violently, and was quite unable to overcome his agitation. He was then taken back to prison.

From the Depths.

After many attempts the sea has been made to disgorge part of a golden hoard which had lain in its keeping since a terrible shipwreck more than four years ago. This catastrophe occurred between Sydney and Auckland, N.Z., when the Elingamite, a passenger steamer, bearing between 100 and 200 passengers, and £17,300 in specie, went down on some dangerous rocks called the Three Kings. The majority of the passengers and crew were saved, but the sufferings of some who were cast adrift on a raft, and subsequently picked up by a passing steamer, read like the romance out of a story-book, many going mad from thirst and plunging into the sea.

Needless to say, the recovery of the specie has been a subject of no little thought, and several attempts were made to get possession of it. The first lot of treasure hunters could not locate the Elingamite; the second succeeded in locating the wreck; but, owing to the accompanying diver's unwillingness to descend, the expedition was abandoned.

A third expedition from Wellington, N.Z., was more elaborately organized. But, owing to bad weather, the difficulties of diving were very great, and, finally, the party returned to Wellington to await the summer and calmer meteorological conditions.

While waiting news came that an American syndicate was on the same errand bent, and that they meant to use scientific operations to assist them. At once the Wellington party set out for the wreck, and the diver's report was a very disconcerting one. The ship had been shattered by explosives, no portion of the wreck was more than 3ft. above the rock, and the bullion had vanished, it being the diver's opinion that the cases had been swept off the shelving rock into the sea.

Then a fifth expedition was made by a syndicate from Aratapu, N.Z., with the result that they report the recovery of 1,500 sovereigns from the wreck.

Village Bombarded.

The little Sussex village of Selsey has been thrown into a state of great excitement.

A 9.2 inch shell, weighing 380 lb., said to have been fired by the cruiser Warrior during target practice in the Channel, passed over the village, narrowly missing several houses. Its flight was marked by a shrill scream, which was heard by everyone in the village. The shell passed within a yard of the chimneys of the Fishermen's Joy Inn, the current of air drawing up clouds of soot from them. The ceilings in the upper floors and billiard-room were cracked.

A second shell hurtled over the spit of land on which Selsey stands, and plunged into the sea. The first shell buried itself four feet in a field. Mr. H. A. Smith, a local builder, was thrown off his feet by the shock.

War In the Air.

Col. J. E. Capper, commander of the balloon section at Aldershot, has given a lecture, in which he deals with the use of the aeroplane on the battlefield.

"In the near future we may expect to see both dirigible balloons and motor-driven aeroplanes used as aerial scouts. The former suffers at present from serious limitations, and its great bulk seems to render it most vulnerable in the daytime.

"The aeroplane when it comes will be different. It will move fast and be little liable to injury, as bullet holes in the surface will cause but little damage. It will be able to go considerable distances even against strong winds."

Winds of passion do not blow to harbors of high purposes.

A laugh is worth a hundred groans in any market.

BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1905) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

whose damnation you have just drunk," she explained, with careless calm, "and like all secret agents the prey of his passions. He went from my supper table—or rather I carried him—like that. There will be a pother in Versailles to-morrow or next day. It is not only at the palace, you see, that a beautiful woman can ruin a kingdom."

She slammed the door behind her and admired herself in the mirror, while George Onslow's glowing eyes gloated on the superb picture that the mirror and she made under the blazing candles.

"You are a wonderful woman," he said softly.

"I am not a woman, I am only a number."

"As I think I told you when I saw you last in London."

She wheeled suddenly. "And because you were such a fool as to show you had discovered it," she retorted, "I could send you to-night, or any night, to be broken on the executioner's wheel. Exactly."

"It baffles me why you do it," he muttered, ignoring the remark.

"Well, I will tell you. For three hundred and sixty days in the year I am a cipher, a sexless vagrant, unknown and a mystery; but for five days maybe I wear my jewels and am a woman rejoicing in my health and my beauty. These are my woman's hours, glorious hours. That is one reason; the other is—revenge!"

"Ah!" He rubbed his hands appreciatively.

"And you?" she asked, with a faint smile of the most tempting provocation.

"For love," he spoke with a hint of pain. "To the world you are a mysterious number, but to me you are the most beautiful, most splendid woman on earth, without whose love I cannot live. Had you not by chance crossed my path I would have dropped this dirty felon's game, but I go on and shall go on, taking my chance of the wheel, the halter, or the footpad's death in the gutter, till you are mine, wholly mine."

Her lip curled. "The wine is getting into your head," she said, in her passionless tones. "In your trade and mine that is dangerous. Remember the fate of all who, knowing what you know, have seen my face; remember your friend, Captain Statham, who recognized the Princess in the hut, near Fontenoy. Love? Love? You are a strong, vile animal of a man tempted by mere beauty of body. But I am not an animal, nor a woman as women are in Paris, London, Vienna. Love? a man's animal love? Think you if that was what I could feel or wanted I would be to-day a thief of state secrets, a cipher, a skulker from justice? No, I would be the mistress of the King of France and would rule a great kingdom. And you have the insolence to offer me the caresses of a felon, a spy, a traitor. You are mad."

"It is you who made me and keep me mad, thank God!"

She sat down, beckoning him to sit beside her. "Now listen," she said calmly. "The game is up. There will be no more papers for a long time. Why? Because my foes are on my track. The toils are being drawn around me. My sources of information are being discovered and stopped. And——" she paused—"and a man worth ten of you, unless I am very careful, will——"

"The Vicomte de Nerac?" he gasped out. "Curse him!"

"Yes, the Vicomte de Nerac, who balked you at Fontenoy."

"You let him balk us—you did."

"And if I did for my own ends, what then?"

"You love him? Answer! Answer or ——"

"What is it to you? He is worth a woman's love. But, my good friend, he does not love me. Give me your hand!" she suddenly commanded, soothing him at the same time by a caressing look. Ah! I thought so. There is death, a violent death, in that palm of yours, death coming soon. And yet, my friend, you can avert it. But unless you take my advice and forget me from this night, unless you cease to be a spy and a traitor, before long you will have to reckon with the Vicomte de Nerac—it is written there—and then—" She let his hand drop with icy indifference, "c'est fini pour vous!"

"A fig for your old wives' fables! I have sworn you shall be mine and you shall."

"Stand back!" She sprang up.

"No!" For one minute he faced her and then, with a hunter's cry on his prey, he had pinioned her wrist, and in that besotted grip she was powerless, though she struggled fiercely.

"No, ma mignonne, I, too, am strong. You shall learn you are only a weak woman after all." He had whipped the dagger from its concealment by her heart, his arm was about her, his eyes the eyes of a victorious maniac.

"Kiss me at your will," she murmured faintly. "See, mon ami, I resist no longer. Yes, you, too, are a man. I was only tempting you. I am not a number, but a woman. You have my secret, and I am yours!" No man could have resisted the intoxicating self-surrender in her eyes and voice, least of all George Onslow in the grip of unholy passion long thwarted.

Suddenly her released fingers closed like a vise on his throat. In vain he struggled, for he was choking. Her great natural strength was duplicated by rage and an insulted womanhood. She forced him on to the ground, livid, gasping for breath, and put a knee on his chest. "Mercy!" he faltered, "Mercy!"

With her left hand she tore the lace from her breast, and gagged him inch by inch. With her right hand still on his throat she produced a rope from her pocket and tied with practised skill his hands and feet. Then she rose and calmly rearranged her disordered dress and hair and quickly searched him for pistols and dagger.

"Carrion! scum!" she whispered, bending over him, "you deserve to die like the English dog you are. Miserable, insolent libertine!" and she struck him on the cheek. "No, I will not kill you, for you have my work to do and you shall do it. But a weak woman has taught you a lesson and your hour is not yet come. Another shall soil his hands or his sword with you rascallion blood. Go!"

She dragged him down the passages, loosened the rope on his ankles till he could just hobble, flung his coat about him, and with her dagger at his throat pushed him to the open door, where she propped him against the wall in the damp darkness of the court, and the silent serenity of the stars.

"It will take you," she said pleasantly, "twenty minutes to bite through that cord, and by that time I shall have disappeared for ever from your sight. But remember my advice, or as sure as you stand here, before long my secret will die with you." She drew the lace gag from his mouth and stuffed it inside his collar. "Cry out now if you please," she continued contemptuously, "and my secret will die with you in two days on the executioner's wheel. Oh, keep the lace; it came from a woman's heart, and on the scaffold will be a pleasant souvenir of a night of love with a cipher. Adieu!"

The outer door was locked. The woman who was a cipher had disappeared; whence and whither, who could say?

As George Onslow stood with rage, jealousy, baffled passion, humiliation, surging within him, he was startled by the sudden appearance of a stranger.

"Don't be alarmed," said the boyish voice of the Chevalier de St. Amant. "'Tis a friend." He muttered a reassuring password. "So that woman has treated you as she treated me?" In a trice he had set the helpless spy free.

Onslow's answer was an incoherent growl of gratitude, surprise, and relief.

"Well," said the Chevalier, "we are in the same boat. You will hear from me shortly, I promise you. And then you and I can have our revenge on her and the Vicomte de Nerac. Revenge, my friend, revenge will be sweet. Meanwhile have courage, and be careful till our turn comes!"

And then he, too, glided away to be lost in the night that divined and protected all the treachery and treason, all the dreams of love and hate, of passion and ambition, the tears and laughter and prayers that throbbed then, and will always throb, in the heart of Paris.

CHAPTER XXI.

Andre was not the only person at Versailles who, tortured with perplexity and fear, must now choose between loyalty to a cause or loyalty to the dictates of the heart. Poor Denise, whose womanhood, nobility, and devotion to her neglected and insulted Queen made her so bitter a foe of Madame de Pompadour, whose sensitive self-respect and self-reverence, whose ideal of purity so strange in the world of Versailles, whose indignation at Andre's desertion to the side of the ambitious mistress, had combined to make her despise and twice reject the hero of her girlhood; yes, poor Denise had at last been driven by a cruel necessity to acknowledge to herself and to the Chevalier that she really loved Andre, and that she could not sacrifice him even to victory over Madame de Pompadour. Ever since that hour of misery she had bitterly blamed herself for her selfish weakness. She had not only been untrue to her own cause, but perhaps had ensured its defeat—and for what? Because she loved, despite all, one who did not love her. And unless she made atonement for this folly and sin she must forfeit her own self-respect for ever and be punished as well. Denise, therefore, goaded by remorse, by a dim hope of saving Andre at the last hour, had steeled herself to conquer her pride and her modesty and to speak to Andre himself.

He, too, oppressed with misgivings and fears, had returned early in the morning to Versailles, and when he found himself alone in the antechamber with Denise, pale and resolute, instinct warned him as it warned her that both their lives might now turn on silence or speech.

"Will you answer a question?" she began with nervous directness.

He bowed with a singularly poor attempt at resolute indifference.

"Why," she demanded in a low voice, "why did you say you were going to Nerac when you really meant to visit a low cabaret in Paris?"

Andre had no answer ready, for it was not the question he had been expecting from Denise.

"I see," he said, after a pitiful pause, "that you are well informed, Mademoiselle."

Denise looked round the room as if to make sure they were not being spied on. Then she walked towards him, her trembling fingers revealing her emotion.

"I will tell you why I ask," she said. "This morning, at three o'clock, in the gutter outside the cabaret—where you were seen at midnight—one of the King's messengers was discovered by the police, gagged and bound, and his despatches gone—stolen, of course, by the traitor who has done this felon's work before."

"Good God!" The horror in his face was unmistakable, but was it due to guilty knowledge or innocent surprise? The crystal-gazer's last words, "There will be news in the morning for you at Versailles," were ringing in his ears, and now he stared dully and confused at the girl's pale face.

"You do not wish to tell me," Denise continued, "why you went to that cabaret?"

With the memory of the night still painfully vivid, aware how his path was beset by pitfalls, Andre was trying to decide whether Denise was asking as the agent of his implacable foes or for herself alone.

"You," she began again, "are the Captain of the Queen's Guards; you visit by stealth at an inn a wench called Yvonne, you refused to present our petition to the King, you visit a cabaret frequented by a foreigner suspected of being an English spy, under whose walls foul treason is committed, and you professed to have gone to Nerac —she paused, and looked at him wistfully. "Why do you do these things?"

"To discover the traitor; that is my reason," he answered.

"At the request of His Majesty?" she asked swiftly and significantly.

Should he lie to Denise? Andre's troubled eyes passionately sought her face.

"I can say no more," he replied slowly, and Denise, though she knew that he had admitted her accusation, was glad he had not told her a falsehood.

"Do you know that you are in extreme danger?" she asked.

"Yes, I know it." He spoke with great gravity.

"I have been unjust to you," she said quickly; "unjust and unkind. I am more than grateful for your generosity and honor in saving me by that duel. I am ready now to believe your word just because it is your. They tell me your are the lover of Madame de Pompadour and at heart a traitor, but it is a lie—a lie!"

"Ah!"—it was a true lover's cry of joy—"a lie, Denise!"

"Yes, a lie. I say so to you because I have said it to them. Andre, will you for your own sake—I cannot and will not ask for mine—will you not refuse now and henceforth to be the servant and ally of Madame de Pompadour? Will you not help me instead in the cause which is the cause of your nobility and mine—of honesty and honor?"

"I could wish," he answered earnestly, "for your sake, Denise, that you would refuse to have any part in this squalid struggle for power. Believe me it is no task for a woman such as we —I—would have you be."

"Do not I know it?" she answered wearily. "To the woman I would be it is hateful. It soils—it soils," she cried in a low voice of anguish. "But take my place, Andre, and I promise you I will leave Versailles for Beau Sejour till"—she looked up timidly, unable to check the tender radiance in her appealing eyes—"till you come to tell me, you are victorious and she has gone for ever."

Andre had taken her outstretched hands. Her words were like wine to a fainting man. Denise loved him—Denise loved him! Last night with another woman's hands on his shoulders, a woman promising him love, success, glory, the great secret whose fascination was so irresistible, he had refused to succumb to temptation, and Denise's look even more than her words was now his reward. He had only to promise and she would be in his arms for ever. And so for a few blissful moments of oblivion to the perils that beset them both he stood with her dear hands in his, her face close to his, supremely happy, as she was.

Suddenly they both stepped back. Some one had stealthily entered—only a lackey peeping cautiously, but a lackey, they both recognized at once, of Madame de Pompadour.

"Whom do you seek?" Denise demanded haughtily.

The man had obviously expected to find Andre alone. He now tried to sidle away.

"If," said the Marquise de Beau Sejour, "you have a message for Monsieur le Vicomte de Nerac, give it to him."

The man, thus sternly commanded, reluctantly handed Andre a small note and fled.

"Read it, I beg," Denise urged, her tone unconsciously cold and severe.

It was sealed with the crest of the Marquise de Pompadour, and Andre read these words:

"I must see you at once.—A. De P."

The crumpled note fell from his fingers. Ah! Sooner or later he had known even in his great bliss that he must answer Denise's appeal, but this message made a decision imperative.

"Will you save me as I asked you?" Denise said, and once again she came close to him.

"And if I cannot promise to take your place?" he questioned to gain time.

"Then I must go on alone—alone," she answered, "and God knows what I may do."

To be continued.

CATCHING THE TROLLEY.

By TAYLOR WHITE.

Copyright, 1907, by Homer Sprague.

Colbrook glanced at his watch and started to run. The Chester trolley started from the public square on the half hours. He had just time to make the 11:30. Could he do that there would be just time to speak to Enid and get back in time to take the western express that would connect in Chicago with the Overland. That would get him in San Francisco just in time to catch the Empress of China.

He wanted to tell Enid that his chance had come at last and ask if she would wait. An unexpected turn of affairs had put him in a position to speak of marriage, a thing he had not dared to even think of for at least a year yet.

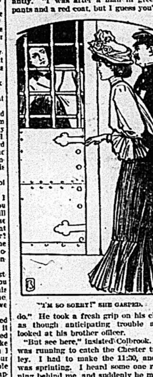
He slipped down the foggy street with the easy stride of a cross country runner and smiled as he heard behind the soft patter of other hurried footsteps. The man behind would never reach the car first if that was what he was running for.

Then suddenly the steps ceased, and a moment later a mob came tearing around the corner, raising the hue and cry. Colbrook kept on. He felt no interest in a thief with Enid in Chester and the car about to start. Then suddenly a blue coated form started up before him, and he almost ran into the policeman's arms. An instant later he had been scientifically collared and the mob had come panting up.

The last to arrive was a fat policeman, still violently puffing from his exertions. He took a fresh grip on Colbrook's collar and, with a flourish of his club, entreated him to come quietly. For the first time Colbrook realized that he was under arrest.

"Look here," he said, "you are making a mistake. I'm not the man you're after."

"I know it," agreed the officer pleasantly. "I was after a man in green pants and a red coat, but I guess you'll do." He took a fresh grip on his club as though anticipating trouble and looked at his brother officer.



"I'M SO SORRY!" SHE GASPED.

"But see here," insisted Colbrook. "I was running to catch the Chester trolley. I had to make the 11:30, and I was sprinting. I heard some one running behind me, and suddenly he must have dodged into a doorway. That was probably your man."

"Quite likely," was the cheerful response, "but all the same you can tell that to the sergeant."

"But I have to get to Chester and back in time to catch the western express," he pleaded. "I am leaving on that for China."

"Through train?" laughed the officer appreciatively. He evidently regarded Colbrook as a humorist.

"I am Jennings Colbrook," he said patiently. "I am with the Fontellen company. You can call them on the phone. Perhaps I'll have time to go out on the train if you will drop this nonsense."

"You drop yours," was the sharp command. "I know you fellows. Look out that he doesn't throw nothin' away, Rafferty." Rafferty nodded his understanding, and the trio headed a procession for the police station.

The desk sergeant was a newly promoted roundsman impressed with a sense of his dignity. Something in Colbrook's manner offended him, and he refused to listen to his plea that the Fontellen company be notified.

"What's the use of botherin'?" he demanded. "Sure I recognize you as Boston Mike. What have they to do with the likes of you? Tell that to the judge when you're arraigned."

At a motion of his head Colbrook was led back to the cells, and, this being his first arrest, he did not know that he could bribe the officers to get word to his employers.

His threats to have the whole matter shown up only added to the doggedness of the sergeant, and in answer to his third threat he was told that the sergeant would be back in the cells with a night stick presently if things did not quiet down.

After that he could only sit in silent despair and wonder what the outcome could be. If he did not catch the next steamer, the agents of the English company would be on the ground first. It was through his old time friendship for Garson that he had gained the early tip that led to his being promoted to be foreign salesman at more than double his old salary.

Now this mistake would cost him not only his promotion, but probably even his position, and he could only sit helpless in his narrow cell and rail at fate.

Then the grated half of the cell door was darkened by a form, and he sprang to his feet.

"I'm the bull in this precinct," announced the newcomer. "Don't throw that bluff," he added as Colbrook's eyes went up in inquiry. "You know what a bull is."

"I was always under the impression that they possessed four feet and horns," he said.

"That's a good bluff, but it don't go," said the visitor. "I guess you know what plain clothes men are by any title."

"The precinct detective? I see," said Colbrook.

"The fairy what had her leather swiped wants to know what you did with it."

"I'm sure I don't know what became of the lady's purse," he said pleasantly. This slang was more understandable.

"Stow that," admonished the detective. "I think she'll let you off, and it's a ten spot to me if you tell."

"But I tell you there is a mistake," he insisted. "Your men picked up the wrong man."

With a snort of disgust, the ward man turned away. Here was a chance to make $10 gone through the thief's stubbornness. He was back in a minute, though, and Colbrook caught the echo of a lighter step on the stone flagging.

"The dame wants to give you the third degree herself," he said. "Don't you give her none of your lip or I'll come in there."

"I am at the lady's service," said Colbrook hopefully. He understood from the previous conversation that she could free him by refusing to make a complaint. It should not be very difficult to convince her that he was not the thief.

He started as she spoke, but some impulse restrained the exclamation that sprang to his lips.

"What was in the purse that was so valuable?" he demanded, making his voice harsh and unnatural.

"I cannot explain," she said, with embarrassment — "some keepsake of which I am very fond. The purse was a keepsake. I am most anxious about that."

Colbrook's heart gave a leap. It was the purse he had given her that she sought, and it was Enid Sangston who was pleading with him to restore her property.

"I'll get you another purse just as good," he said, "if you will get me out of this, Enid."

With a scream she started back from the bars as Colbrook moved into the light. "You?" she gasped.

"I was running to catch a car," he explained. "It was misty, and the thief slipped into a doorway, and the mob thought that since I was running it must be I who was the culprit. Then the officer collared me and brought me here."

"I'm so sorry!" she gasped.

"I'm not," he disagreed. "I see the hand of fate. You see, I was running to catch a car to Chester to see you. You were in town, and I should have missed you."

"But why such haste?" she asked.

"I am leaving this afternoon for China," he explained. "My chance has come at last, and I wanted to ask you to wait for me, dear. Will you?"

"I think," she said, "that we must bow to fate. I ran into town unexpectedly, and— Suppose you had caught the car and gone out there. I should not have had a chance to say goodby."

"Now we can say it over the lunch table, and there's still time for a trip to the jewelry store, too, if you will explain to the officer that I was not the thief."

That formality was quickly accomplished, and presently they were passing the desk. Colbrook leaned over and shook the sergeant's hand.

"Goodby, sergeant," he said heartily. "I am very much obliged."

"I wonder what he meant," mused that official as he regarded the bill that had been left in his palm. "Sure, I thought he'd make trouble with the chief."

As to Liberty.

Liberty was first introduced into this country with a shipload of tea. Since then it has been seen occasionally in odd places.

Liberty has no permanent place of residence, but boards out. At present it is staying with friends just outside of Washington.

Liberty is a great traveler. It has visited in time New York, Boston, Philadelphia and all the other large centers. Having been introduced to the municipal government, met the leading politicians and visited the principal places of amusement, it has then left town.

Liberty is the one thing that everybody believes in, but no one has ever seen. Traces of it are occasionally found in public documents, but rudely and unintelligently speaking it is caviare to the general.

It is popularly supposed that some day Liberty will be in full charge of everything. When this day will be no one but Liberty knows.

In the meantime give us liberty or give us life in a republic.—Puck.

Careful.

"Mr. Pumpus is very careful of his dignity," commented the observing girl.

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "He naturally has so little that he has to be careful of it."—Washington Star.

THREE EPOCHS IN A WOMAN'S LIFE

MRS. ELVA BARBER EDWARDS

MRS. GEORGE WALTERS

There are three critical stages in a woman's life which leave their mark in her career. The first of these stages is womanhood, or the change from a care free girl to budding womanhood. The second is motherhood, and the third is Change of Life.

Perils surround each of these stages, and most of the misery that comes to women through ill health dates from one or another of these important crises.

Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs has carried thousands of young girls over the critical period of puberty, has prepared mothers for childbirth, and in later years carried them safely through the change of life more successfully than any other remedy in the world. Thousands of testimonials from grateful persons, two of which are here published, substantiate this fact beyond contradiction.

Mrs. George Walters of Woodlawn, Ill. writes:
Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I feel it my duty to tell you of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me in preparing for childbirth. After suffering and losing my children a friend advised me to try your valuable medicine, and the result was that I had very little inconvenience, a quick recovery and as healthy a child as can be found anywhere. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a blessing to all expectant mothers."

Mrs. Elva Barber Edwards of Cathlamet, Wash., writes:
Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I want to tell you how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound carried me through the critical period of the Change of Life without any trouble whatever, also cured me of a very severe female weakness. I cannot say enough in praise of what your medicine has done for me."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Walters and Mrs. Edwards it will do for other women in their condition. Every suffering woman in the United States is asked to accept the following invitation. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and helpful.

During its long record of more than thirty years its long list of actual cures, entitles Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to the respect and confidence of every fair minded person.

The Peculiar Frigate Bird.

The frigate bird is a native of tropical seas and rarely comes to land except during the breeding season. It has the habit, unusual among sea birds, of nesting in trees, large companies of them building together in the tops of the tallest mangroves. Like the cormorant and the albatross, the frigate bird lays but one egg. It lives by fishing and also by robbing other fishers of what they have caught. In plumage the frigate bird is brownish black, with metallic green and purple reflections. The dilatable throat sac in the male is of bright scarlet, while the female, of a duller general hue, has a white patch on the breast. It is a beautiful sight to watch one or more floating overhead against the deep blue sky, the long forked tail alternately opening and shutting like a pair of scissors and the head, which is, of course, kept to windward, inclined from side to side, while the wings are to all appearance fixedly extended, though the breeze may be constantly varying in strength and direction.

An Egyptian Custom.

More than 1,000 years ago Herodotus observed a remarkable custom in Egypt. At a certain season of the year the Egyptians went into the desert, cut off branches from the wild palm and, bringing them back to their gardens, waved them over the flowers of the date palm. Why they performed this ceremony they did not know, but they knew that if they neglected it the date crop would be poor or wholly lost. Herodotus offers the quaint explanation that along with these branches there came from the desert certain flies possessed of a "vivific virtue," which somehow lent an exuberant fertility to the dates. But the true rationale to the incantation is now explained. Palm trees, like human beings, are male and female. The garden plants, the date bearers, were females, the desert plants were males, and the waving of the branches over the females meant the transference of the fertilizing pollen from the one to the other.

The Dangers of the Mines.

Great and mystically dreadful is the earth from a mine's depth. Man is in the implacable grasp of nature. It has only to tighten slightly and he is crushed like a bug. His loudest shriek of agony would be as impotent as his final moan to bring help from that fair land that lies like heaven over his head. There is an insidious silent enemy in the gas. If the huge fanwheel on the top of the earth should stop for a brief period there is certain death, and a panic more terrible than any occurring where the sun has shone ensues down under the tons of rock. If a man may escape the gas, the floods, the "squeezes" of falling rock, the cars shooting through little tunnels, the precarious elevators, the hundred perils, there usually comes to him an attack of "miner's asthma" that slowly racks and shakes him into the grave.—Stephen Crane.

Ptolemy's Big Boat.

Ptolemy (Philopator) was fond of building big boats. One of these is said to have been 420 feet long, 57 feet broad and 72 feet deep from the highest point of the stern. This vessel had four rudders or what some would call steering oars, as they were not fastened, each forty-five feet long. She carried 4,000 rowers, besides 3,000 marines, a large body of servants under her decks and stores and provisions. Her oars were fifty-seven feet long, and the handles were weighted with lead. There were 2,000 rowers on a side, and it is supposed that these were divided into five banks. That this extraordinary vessel ever put to sea is doubted, but that she was launched and used at times, if only for display, several historians are agreed.

Getting Round It.

A famous mountaineer said of mountain climbing at a dinner in Brooklyn:

"Peaks that seem inaccessible may be climbed by turns and twists. Mountain climbing is a question of getting around the bad places. Getting around your difficulty—that is the secret of mountain climbing. Liszt, the great musician, had the ability to get around things; hence I am sure he'd have made a good mountaineer. Once at a dinner Liszt's hostess cried in a horrified voice that there were thirteen at table.

"'Don't let that alarm you, madam,' said Liszt, with a reassuring smile, 'I'll eat for two.'"

If Lion Pulls and Horse Pulls.

If a lion and a strong horse were to pull in opposite directions, the horse would pull the lion backward with comparative ease. But if the lion were hitched behind the horse and facing in the same direction and were allowed to exert his strength in backing he could easily pull the horse down upon his haunches or drag him across the ring, so much greater is his strength when exerted backward from the hind legs than in forward pulling.—Chambers' Journal.

The Nursery of Statesmen.

A debating society in which the members are really keen is an institution of immense value in a school or a house. Success in the school debating society is frequently the beginning of a great career. — O. C. Williams in "The Captain."

Then the Mercury Froze.

"I think London is a lovely place for a honeymoon. Don't you, dear?"

"Yes, darling," he replied in an abstracted manner. "I shall always come here in the future."—Stray Stories.

Some evils admit of consolations, but there are no comforters for dyspepsia and the toothache.—Bulwer.

Diplomatic Reticence.

The social reformer was paying a visit to the convicts in the penitentiary and asking them various questions.

"And what are you doing here, my friend?" he said to a good looking man in the shoeshop.

"Making shoes," was the reply that discouraged any further inquisition in that direction.

Discharging the Cook.

"Well, cook's gone at last, John," said Mrs. B.

"Good. You must have had more courage than I gave you credit for to discharge her."

"I didn't do it. She discharged herself. I flattered her so about her cooking that she thought she was too good to stay with us, and off she went."

HINTS ON HOME BUILDING.

The man who is thinking of building a home (and who is not, in these prosperous times) must have prominently in mind, economy, durability and appearance.

The wise builder will select materials that are good and inexpensive, as well as handsome in appearance. Take the roof, for instance. It should be proof against lightning, fire and water, and should also possess a handsome appearance.

Wood shingles have had their day. As now manufactured, they soon rot and crack, thus making it necessary to reshingle.

"Safe Lock" Galvanized Steel Shingles solve the problem in every way. They lock at the top, bottom and both sides, so that they are absolutely proof against every element. Being heavily galvanized, they cannot rust and are practically indestructible. Moreover, the smooth surface of the shingle will not permit dust or dirt to lodge on the roof, and defile the rain water.

The Metal Shingle & Siding Co., Limited, of Preston, Ont., offer to send you, free, their literature containing names of those who have used "Safe Lock" Shingles in your own locality. 47

PULL SNAKE'S TEETH.

Eighteen Men Sit on Python While Operation Is Performed.

Feast day for Salome, the longest python in the Zoological Park, proved to be the busiest day the attendants have had for many months and the liveliest occasion in her career. After all arrangements had been made to feed a brace of rabbits to the twenty-four foot serpent the discovery was made that fourteen of the snake's teeth were decayed, and the intended feast became a tooth pulling.

Salome eats only once in a while. Her last feast was on New Year's Day, when the attendants forced five rabbits down her throat. A peculiar restlessness during the last few days led the attendants to believe that she was feeling the pangs of hunger again and plans were made to feed her more rabbits. Three were dressed and tied together, Salome was untangled and hoisted into a corridor and twelve sturdy men were instructed to range themselves along her coils. Dr. Ditmars stood by with a ten foot pole, to be used in placing the rabbits in the proper place, and at the proper moment the jaws were pried open.

A Patient Python.

Up to this point Salome had been a patient python. She hadn't so much as opened her eyes. But when her jaws were forced she writhed and squirmed and kept the dozen bodyguards busy. Dr. Ditmars was surprised to find that fourteen of the forty teeth in the upper jaw were decayed and the whole mouth badly swollen.

Pincers of large size were obtained, and while eighteen men sat and stood on the snake, which made desperate efforts to switch its massive tail and wiggle out of the grasp of the impromptu dentists, Dr. Ditmars drew out the affected teeth.

Salome was left in a rather ugly mood, and no effort was made to force upon her the delectable feast that had been prepared. Instead she was carefully rolled up into the conventional coils and was carried back to her cage. Dr. Ditmars expects she will recover from the operation and will be an improved python.

In two or three weeks she will be fed—if her condition is normal. If the feast were deferred for several months it would not worry Salome, the attendants said. Eating is the least of her worries.

An Ancient Office.

Almost as ancient as the office of Lord Chief Justice of the realm is that of Master of the Rolls, to which Sir Herbert Cozens Hardy has just been appointed. The master has precedence over all the other judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature, with the exception of the Lord High Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice, next to whom he ranks alike in dignity and emolument.

One hears of the master of the rolls already at the beginning of the thirteenth century, and there is no doubt that in the origin he had charge of all the patents, and grants, and writs issued under the great seal, and that he often fulfilled the duties of the Lord Chancellor and Keeper of the Great Seal during the latter's absence.

In fact, at one time he used to be known as the Vice-Chancellor. Formerly he was eligible to a seat in the House of Commons, but he was deprived of this privilege, enjoyed by no other member of the judicial bench, by an act of Parliament passed in 1873, debarring all judges of the High Court of Justice, Court of Appeal, from sitting in the House of Commons. He has custody of all the national records, which date back for more than 1,080 years—since times prior to even the Norman conquest—and which, comprising Doomsday Book, are preserved in a huge building known as the Rolls house, which opens on to Chancery lane through an arched gateway.

It is precisely on account of his keepership of the state records that the Master of the Rolls is more frequently consulted by the monarch than any other law officer of the crown on points concerning his prerogatives and duties as sovereign. He receives a salary of $30,000 a year, which is $5,000 more than the lord justices, or the judges of the High Court of Justice, and is usually created a peer of the realm on his retirement or promotion, which latter fate has overtaken that genial Irishman, Sir Richard Henn Collins, who now becomes Lord Collins, and who will be remembered in this country as one of the arbitrators of the Venezuelan boundary controversy.

Jack Tar's Song-Book.

Despite the time the Lords of the Admiralty devote to schemes for the cutting down of Britain's fleet, they still find a space of that fleeting commodity to issue an official song-book for the use of bluejacket vocalists.

One recently published contains seventy-two songs, which have all been selected to suit naval requirements. The first is, as one might imagine; the National Anthem, and the book closes with, "Off to Philadelphia."

Other old favorites contained in the volume are "The Death of Nelson," "Tom Bowling," and "They All Love Jack." Of course, the sister countries are all represented with songs, and those of Scotland, Ireland, and Wales respectively are "Bonnie Dundee," "Father O'Flynn," and "Men of Harlech." Instructions have been issued to all naval and marine bands to obtain a copy of this book.

The Youth of Ellen Terry.

Ellen Terry, who has been repeating again her early successes with the public, is just 60 years of age. This vivacious heroine of a hundred parts began acting when she was only eight years and two months old—her wages, as Mamillius in Charles Kean's production of "The Winter's Tale," being fifteen shillings a week. "Do you know," she said, nearly fifty years later, "that my difficulty with Sir Henry Irving was that I could not convince him that I had grown too old for youthful parts? He couldn't see it, and so, after twenty-two years, we parted." And Sir Henry when he heard it, confirmed this explanation, saying: "I never thought Ellen Terry too old for any part she ever played."

CONSUMPTION

MAINLY CAUSED BY CHRONIC COLDS AND HANGING-ON COUGHS.

A prominent scientist has given a good deal of time to the study of consumption, and finds that comparatively few cases are hereditary.

Mostly all are caused by neglected coughs and colds, which gradually weaken the whole pulmonary system, and before people realize it there is a diseased spot in one lung; spitting blood soon follows and eventually a collapse.

Such an unnecessary end, such a pity, for we all could have been so different. We know of many instances where our valuable cod liver preparation, Vinol, has been most beneficial in such cases.

Vinol is able to cure hanging-on colds, stubborn coughs, strengthen the lungs, and thus prevent the development of consumption, because it is the most perfect cod liver preparation ever compounded; it contains no oil or grease to upset the delicate stomach, yet it does contain, every one of the fifty odd medicinal curative elements actually taken from fresh cods' livers, with tonic iron added. We ask all Belleville people to try Vinol for weak lungs, chronic coughs, hanging-on colds, or run-down and debilitated conditions, and will pay for the medicine ourselves if it fails to benefit.

How can we express our faith in Vinol more emphatically? J. S. McKeown, druggist.

Kitty and The Cabinet.

By JOHN BEAUMONT.

Copyright, 1907, by Homer Sprague.

"See here," said Chester hotly, "if you think I stole the ring why don't you say so and search me?"

"Vincent," cried Elvia, "how can you say such a thing?"

"I'm simply putting into words what Miss Celeste has been hinting for the last ten minutes," he cried.

"Celeste may have been unfortunate in her remarks," said John Noailes soothingly, "but she meant nothing of that sort."

Vincent Chester laughed. Ever since Miss Celeste Noailes descended upon her brother's household at the death of his wife she had fought Vincent. He was a boy then, but even then in love with Elvia, and Miss Celeste had higher ideas of matrimony for her very attractive niece.

This evening the two had been examining a ring, and somehow, none knew how, it had disappeared. They had hunted all over for it, but it could not be found, and it was to be expected that Miss Celeste's acid tongue would but thinly veil her suspicious thoughts.

"If Mr. Chester's conscience is uneasy," chuckled Miss Celeste, "I can understand that he takes to himself purely impersonal speeches."

Vincent turned to Mr. Noailes. "Will you search me, sir?" he asked.

"Nonsense!" cried his host. "Celeste, for heaven's sake keep still. My boy, no one believes that you would steal anything—except one thing."

He patted Elvia's shoulder meaningly to explain his last sentence and thereby added fuel to Miss Celeste's flame.

"I don't see why he should not be searched," she fumed. "The ring was here a moment ago, and now it is gone."

"You see," said Vincent. "Again I ask you to search me."

"My boy, you were not a day old when I first took you in my arms," said Mr. Noailes. "I would as soon accuse myself of crime as to believe it of you."

"Well, if you won't," said Vincent briskly, "I'll have to do it myself, I guess."

Rapidly he turned out the contents of his pockets, spreading them on the table. John Noailes sprang forward as though to stop him, but Elvia laid a detaining hand upon his shoulder.

"It is better so," she whispered. "It is the only way to convince auntie."

They stood silent until the things had been returned to Crawford's pockets; then Mr. Noailes stepped forward.

"This should satisfy you, Celeste," he said sternly. "I want to tell you that if you ever raise the question again I shall not condone your second offense."

"Very well," said Miss Celeste, with a shrug of her shoulders. "Since I seem to be so much in the way here I suppose that Mr. Crawford will permit me to retire."

She swept grandly from the room, leaving the three to face each other uncomfortably. All knew that Miss Celeste was not satisfied and were fearful of her next outbreak.

Each tried to appear at ease, but the pleasure of the visit was gone, and presently Crawford made an excuse for taking his departure. Elvia followed him to the door.

"Will you drop in tomorrow evening?" she asked. "We shall probably be able to tell you then where we found the ring."

"I am afraid that I cannot get around," he said uncomfortably. "If you find it, will you write?"

"Won't you come over?" pleaded Elvia, but Vincent shook his head. He had been shocked by the accusation, and not even the belief of Elvia and her father could salve his wounded feelings yet. It seemed almost as though he were passing out of Elvia's life.

Up in her room Miss Celeste was sitting at her writing table while her busy pen covered sheet after sheet of note paper. Not until she had written a dozen pages did she cease her work, and then, going over to her bureau, she unlocked the upper drawer and drew therefrom a paper covered book with a gaudy title page. From the inside of this she clipped a coupon, which she attached to the letter before slipping it into an envelope.

A year before while visiting the city she had been tempted to visit a vaudeville theater at which a man and woman known as the X-Rays were creating a sensation with some mind reading accomplishments. Always inclined to the supernatural, she had been greatly interested by the Rays' accomplishment and had slipped back the next afternoon to purchase some of the books which gave her the right to ask questions by mail.

Once or twice since then she had consulted the oracle, and now she was writing for advice as to the whereabouts of the ring. It was well for her faith that she was not present at the answering of her question.

Two young men sat before a table in a cheap theatrical boarding house when a messenger entered with a package of letters to add to the pile on the table. One of them caught the thick blue envelope up.

"Here's another whole book to be answered," he laughed as he slit open the cover. "Twelve pages," he gasped as he turned over the closely written pages.

"She must want her money's worth."

"What's the question?" laughed the other. "Love or theft?"

"Something about a ring," chuckled the first as he read the first paragraph. "Listen. 'At several crises in my life,'" he read, "'I have turned to you for advice, and you have never failed me. Now, in sore distress of mind, I come to you for advice as to a ring which I have reason to believe was stolen. I will acquaint you with the facts in the'"—

"Cut it," urged the other. "Just use the old standby, 'Your first suspicion was correct.' That'll do as well as anything."

The reader scribbled on the pad of paper before him and slipped it in the return envelope. A couple of days later Miss Celeste read the confirmation of her suspicion and bore it in triumph to her brother.

John Noailes came as close to swearing at a woman as he had ever done in his life, but he checked his temper and solemnly warned her of the folly of giving heed to the charlatans, but even as he spoke he knew that nothing would convince her of Vincent's innocence save the finding of the ring.

Gradually it became noised about the town that the spirits had told Miss Noailes that Crawford was a thief. Vincent had not been near the house since that night, and his apparent break verified the gossip. It began to look ugly for his prospects when Miss Noailes was moved to entertain a few friends.

Elvia sat apart from the rest trying to appear interested in the conversation while her thoughts were with Vincent when suddenly Miss Celeste sat up in her chair.

"That miserable kitten has brought a bone in here!" she cried as an irregular rattle on the hardwood floor broke upon their ears. "She is forever playing with bones."

Elvia sprang toward her aunt. The kitten was one Vincent had given her and for that reason disliked by Miss Celeste. Just as they turned to the heavy cabinet under which the kitten was playing Shah bounded out from under the low setting cabinet in pursuit of his plaything.

Elvia's startled cry scared him, and he scampered off, abandoning his toy. Elvia pounced upon it.

"Do you remember that Shah was playing in here that night?" she cried. "This is what he was playing with." She held up a jeweled circle. "The ring dropped on the floor, and the sparkle of the diamond attracted Shah. As long as he was on the rug we did not hear him. He must have knocked it under the cabinet. Nellie never sweeps under there. Look!" She caught up a light cane and poked under the cabinet. The dirt she swept out showed that the ring could easily have lain there since its loss.

"Perhaps you will believe the Rays now," laughed John Noailes, coming forward. "I guess I'll call up Vincent."

"I'll call him," volunteered Elvia.

"I guess that you had better, daughter," he laughed. "You can promise anything if he will come over."

Elvia's promise must have been attractive, for Crawford borrowed an automobile to come in, and after Miss Celeste had humbled herself to an apology John Noailes insisted that that ring be the engagement one.

Gallery Gods.

The gallery is blase as compared with the rest of the house. It knows all the tricks of the craft. It does not give itself with quite the same abandon to the emotional moment, but it knows when a thing is done to its liking, and it expresses opinions with unmistakable directness.

It was in "The Queen of the White Slaves," I remember, that a scene occurred where the villain in a climax of insolence struck the unhappy brother of the heroine in the face with his gloves.

You could hear the blow to the top seat of the top gallery and the wicked laugh that accompanied it. The audience recoiled, caught its breath, and above the storm of hisses that ensued you heard a shrill shout from amid the gods, "Biff him back, George!"

As George had been previously drugged with opium by Lionel it was obviously impossible for him to take the hint, but the uproar continued until Lionel, with a leer and another fiendish laugh, left the stage.—Harry James Smith in Atlantic.

America's First Cannery.

The first man to introduce canning into the United States was an Englishman named Thomas Kensett, who learned the business in the old country from Peter Durant, who, in 1810, obtained a patent for putting up food in hermetically sealed vessels of glass, pottery or tin. In 1825 Kensett established a factory in Maryland, where fruits, vegetables and oysters were plentiful and cheap, and that state continued to be the center of the industry for many years, but it did not make much progress until the civil war, when there was a great demand for vegetables and fruits in the army. After the war the invasion of the mountains by miners and the settlement of the prairies by ranchmen and farmers kept up the demand.—W. E. Curtis in Chicago Record-Herald.

A Mediterranean Delicacy.

I have met people who practically lived on sea hedgehogs and bread for weeks and months at a time and seemed to be none the worse for their peculiar diet. That it has extremely nourishing properties is a fact that cannot be disputed.—A. Pitcairn Knowles in Wide World Magazine.

Ambiguous.

Lady (meeting servant whom she had recommended for a situation)—I am glad to hear that you are getting on so well in your new place. Your employer is a nice lady, and you cannot do too much for her. Servant (innocently)—I don't mean to, ma'am.—Punch.

"THE KING'S NAVEE."

More Efficient and Readier Than Ever Before.

The Chronicle's naval correspondent says: The taxpayer may estimate the value of recent Admiralty administration by contrasting the state of things prevailing at the time of the Kaiser's telegram to Mr. Kruger and the instant readiness for war that now exists. After the Kruger telegram it was resolved to mobilize a flying squadron. The squadron was composed of units which Parliament were assured were ready for war. Five days and nights of heavy work were consumed in effecting the mobilization. At that time the only sea-going force in home waters fully manned was the Channel fleet of seven or eight battleships, and this fleet was the training school for young seamen.

Superb Fleet.

To-day the Channel fleet combines the eight battleships of the King Edward VII. class with six other modern battleships and four armored cruisers. The Atlantic fleet, based upon Berehaven, will have six battleships and four armored cruisers, while the first division of the new home fleet is a battle squadron comprising six ships, with the Dreadnought carrying the flag, and a group of armored cruisers, known as the fifth squadron, fit to lie in the line of battle with the German fleet.

The skilled men on board will be carried throughout the commission, a number exceeding three-fifths of the crew; the unskilled men shipped on board will not be moved more often than every eight months. In addition to these squadrons are four flotillas of destroyers, forty-eight craft in all, and about thirty submarines.

Ready For War.

It stands to reason that so great an addition to the actual fighting strength of the navy, instantly ready for war, is only obtained by extracting from the whole navy greater exertion, longer hours, and more work than was thought necessary ten or even three years ago. This, coupled with the cessation of foreign battleship-building for eighteen months, is the true reason why a stronger navy at a smaller cost is possible at the present time.

REGIMENT OF GIANTS.

Famous Corps Did Good Service at Kingston During Earthquake.

Policemen as a rule think they are some inches, but they ought to see the members of the Royal West Indian Regiment who were doing police duty in Kingston, Jamaica, during the earthquake. Many of these men are three inches above six feet, and built like giants. All are negroes, the flower of the dusky population, being selected by the British Government for this famous corps of colonial troops. It is more than a fine looking body of men, it is imposing. Every member of it feels pride in every inch from heel to helmet. As they sweep down from their barracks beyond in the hills, twelve hundred strong, towering like Gullivers above the little brown men, the small whites and other blacks of the town, they seem like bronze warriors of another age—colossal, overpowering, devoid of fear.

And they do more than look the part. Their officers tell great tales of their feats of strength, bravery and endurance in Africa and at other hard stations where they shared in deeds done for old England's glory, without thought of self.

Theirs is a more peaceful mission in Jamaica. Here they rest in the cool hills, to be called in great emergencies to police the town, as at earthquake time. One of their duties was to stand at the depots where food was given out, to preserve order. The pressure of the poor through the fenced in passages from street to counter was terrific. One of these West Indian giants in uniform had but to raise his hand and the half-starved mob in sight of food stood still, and perfect order and quiet reigned, without words or even a show of weapons.

Ghosts Explained.

Telepathy, ghosts, and other occult phenomena were explained on a natural basis by Dr. Bernard Hollander at the London Lyceum Club recently.

It is by brain energy, whether electrical or not we do not know, said the lecturer, that men acquire influence over others. That such energy exists has been proved by experiments on hypnotized persons, who in a perfectly darkened room can see a glow at the finger-points of the hypnotizer; and metallic objects rubbed by the latter acquire a luminosity strong enough to make their surroundings visible.

Supposing a person to be the victim of foul play, his mind-energy will be exerted to the utmost, and is projected with such a force that it will cling to the room or place in which he lost his life. If, then, some person of a sensitive nature, and not pre-occupied, pass through that room, his brain may receive such a stimulus as to produce some more or less defined image, which will appear real to him, and the vision of a "ghost" will be the result.

The same theory, said Dr. Hollander, makes it possible that sensitive subjects when in the hypnotic state, and holding an object belonging to the dead or the living, or being in a room once inhabited by them, may have visions of and be able to describe them.

Sir Redvers Buller's Story.

Sir Redvers Buller is a strong advocate of temperance. He tells of a young fellow who was left a legacy which made him a drunkard all his life. A friend of his, by way of warning, read him a spontaneous combustion story—a story of a man so saturated with liquor that once, when he went to blow out a candle, his breath took fire from the flame, and he was burnt to death. At the end of his story the speaker looked at the reprobate young man, and said solemnly—"There, Jim, let that be a warning to you." "It will," replied Jim, in an awed voice. "I'll never blow out a candle again as long as I live!"

MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve, the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

Alleged Perjury In A Liquor Case

On Thursday, the 25th inst., Robt. Marshall, who resides in the Township of Elzevir, will be tried here on a charge of perjury. It appears that a few days ago a liquor case was tried before Mr. Jos. James, J.P., of Actinolite, and it is alleged that Marshall at that trial committed the offence charged against him. Thos. Hogan, a hotel-keeper, was charged with supplying Marshall's son with liquor, it being alleged that the young man was under 21 years of age. The father in his evidence testified that his boy was 21 years of age, having been born in 1885. A few days previous to the liquor case another case was tried before Mr. James and young Marshall was in some way connected with it. At that trial the father swore that his son was only 18 years of age. On account of the father swearing to the son's age in such a manner he must now answer to a serious charge.

Traffic Tied Up East Of Peterboro.

Peterboro Review: Traffic is nasily tied up on the Grand Trunk on the section east of Peterboro to-day, on account of a small wreck at Birdsall, a few miles out from the city. Five freight cars are off the track and the train for Belleville, which leaves Peterboro at two o'clock, had not pulled out at a late hour this afternoon.

The train which met with the mishap was a doubleheader, which left Peterboro at noon. Particulars could not be obtained as to the cause of the accident. All that could be learned was that five cars were off the track and that it would be some time before the way would be cleared. The wrecking auxiliary at Lindsay was sent for, but had not arrived at the time of going to press. The way freight which pulled out of the G.T.R. station about 12.30 is tied up somewhere between Peterboro and Keosall, owing to the track being blocked by the derailed cars. It is expected that there will be considerable difficulty in getting the track cleared, as the snow which was falling all afternoon left everything in a very slippery condition.

Druggist Fined For Illegal Liquor Sales

Acting on behalf of the Crown, Mr. P. J. M. Anderson, on Monday at Springbrook, prosecuted Dr. Towle, a druggist of that village, on two charges of selling unlawfully spirituous liquors. Springbrook is situated in the Township of Rawdon, where local option is in force and it is alleged that the temperance people have for some time been suspicious that liquor was being secured from the drug store for other than medicinal purposes. The charges were investigated before three local magistrates, namely, Messrs. Welsh, Thompson and Meiklejohn. The accused was convicted upon both charges and a fine of $50 and costs in each case was imposed. Mr. J. E. Halliwell, for the accused, intimated that an appeal would be entered.

HELPS HOME INDUSTRY.

Mr. Fielding's Excuse For Laxity In Customs Laws.

Ottawa, April 17.—The House yesterday afternoon took up the consideration of some amendments to the Customs Act, and Mr. Paterson, in reply to a query by W. F. Maclean (South York) admitted that the custom laws were enforced by the Federal Government, and that he called upon the Minister of Justice for that purpose.

Mr. Maclean thought it peculiar that other federal laws were not enforced, and called attention to the fact that enormous quantities of native spirits were being doctored up and sold as Scotch whiskey, Holland gin and French brandy, and other high-priced liquors, thereby defrauding the Revenue Department and also defrauding the public.

Mr. Paterson said that it wasn't a matter in his Department. It belonged to the Minister of Inland Revenue. Mr. Templeman thought that the matter belonged to Mr. Paterson, and Mr. Paterson being thus appealed to suggested that the matter belonged to the Finance Department. Thereupon Mr. Fielding startled the House by saying that this sale of adulterated liquor encouraged home industry.

Mr. Maclean pointed out that the excise duty was less than the customs duty, hence the revenues of the country were decreased by hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. Not only this, but the public were cheated and imposed upon and honest merchants who were anxious to sell imported goods were subjected to unfair and dishonest competition.

Mr. Templeman then remembered that the matter might, after all, be under his jurisdiction. He was unable, however, to suggest a remedy.

Ontario Land Grab.

Col. Sam Hughes drew the attention of the Government in the House yesterday morning to a report from Toronto in regard to the expropriation of the Petawawa camp site by the Government.

Mr. Fielding said that any information available would be submitted to the House without delay.

The militia department in the absence of Sir Frederick Borden is unwilling to make any statement, beyond that the whole subject had been transferred to the Department of Justice and is out of its hands.

Shanghai, April 17.—Investigation shows that the plans of the famine relief committee are admirable. There has been no leakage of the funds administered by foreigners.

M'GILL LOSES AGAIN

Medical School Destroyed by Fire—Loss $500,000.

Priceless Specimens In Museum Destroyed—Medical Library Partially Saved—Second Disastrous Fire In Two Weeks—Collection Was Work of Seventy-Five Years—Incendiarism Suspected.

Montreal, April 17.—The second disastrous fire within two weeks visited McGill University at an early hour yesterday morning and practically destroyed the Medical building, one of the oldest and most valuable of the splendid collection on the college grounds. The results of the fire were most disastrous, as, in addition to the usual equipment of the college Medical building, the museum, one of the best on the continent, was destroyed. The loss in this cannot be considered by a money standard, as the museum has been collecting for nearly three-quarters of a century, and contained many absolutely priceless specimens. The actual loss will exceed half a million dollars, but the greatest loss is not in what dollars and cents can replace, but in the museum, library and expensive laboratory equipment.

Origin of the Fire a Mystery.

The fire alarm was turned in at 1.15 yesterday morning, followed shortly by a second and then a general alarm. How the fire originated is not known. It started in the centre of the building on the second floor, where the lecture rooms are situated, but nothing had been going on there to start a fire. The fire burnt with great force, and was almost beyond control before the firemen reached the scene, and then for some time the water pressure was light and the firemen could not get the blaze under control. Every few minutes the roar of the flames was punctuated with loud explosions, as the chemicals in the laboratory exploded. Often the fumes from the burning chemicals colored the flames and gave a weird, uncanny effect to the scene.

Fireproof Library Only Saved.

The present Medical building was built in 1873. In 1885 and again in 1893 large additions were made. Again proving too small, a thorough reconstruction and enlargement of the buildings had just lately been completed. The alterations and extensions consisted of three wings, one a laboratory wing on the north; another ran east, and a third on the west side of the main central building. The building was of stone and brick, four storeys high. The total length was 280 feet, and the width 145 feet. The central part of the building is entirely destroyed, and all the wings more or less gutted except the fireproof library, which escaped, while buildings on all sides of it are destroyed. The library contained many valuable volumes, and while these will be somewhat damaged with water and smoke, the authorities are rejoicing that the library did not burn with the museum.

The Medical building was erected at a cost of $350,000 some few years ago. Lord Strathcona contributed $125,000 to help in the alterations.

Collection of a Lifetime Gone.

The greatest loss will be in the museum. Dr. Sheppard stated that the fire destroyed for him the collection of a whole lifetime, his anatomical collection being part of the portion destroyed. This collection was famous throughout America, and with its destruction passes a chapter in the history of anatomical science on this side of the ocean. Dean Roddick, who was early on the scene of the fire, said:—"Don't ask me what the damage will be; it is too awful to think of, and really we ourselves are at a loss to place any estimate on it."

Immediately after the disastrous fire which wiped out the Engineering building the university authorities, it is understood, placed half a million dollars of extra insurance on the whole university plant. The Medical building will share in this, but it is doubtful whether the insurance will cover half the loss.

Caretaker Cook, who for over a quarter of a century has had a room in the basement, knew nothing of the fire until aroused and rescued by the firemen. He had gone to bed shortly after 11 o'clock. He, with the authorities, is mystified as to the origin of the fire.

There was $350,000 insurance on the building and its contents, shared between 21 companies.

Waterford Hotel Burned.

Waterford, April 17.—The Beemer House was burned to the ground Monday night. The cause of the fire unknown. No insurance.

An "All-Red" Service.

Vancouver, B. C., April 17.—Beginning next year a direct line of 11 fast steamers will ply between Vancouver and Great Britain, via Australia and New Zealand, completing another "All Red" girdle about the world. This will divert to Vancouver the Australian freight, passengers and mails, which formerly, passed through San Francisco.

A feature is that a direct line to Vancouver from the old country, by way of Suez and Australia, will be furnished. This will be a tri-weekly service.

Riddled With Bullets.

New Orleans, La., April 17.—Charley Strauss, the negro who was charged with attempting a criminal assault on a white woman near Bunkie, La., Sunday, was taken from the officers by a mob and hung to a tree about six miles from Bunkie yesterday while being taken from the jail.

His body was riddled with bullets.

Badly Hurt.

Toronto, April 17.—Charles Hong, a reamer at the Polson Iron Works, sustained severe injuries about the head by falling twelve feet from an upper floor yesterday. His face was badly bruised, and he was removed to Grace Hospital.

Peeps Into Women's Letters.

If our readers could spend one morning looking through the letters received from all over Canada by the Zam-Buk Co., it would bring home to them with irrestible force the healing virtues of this great household balm. Old women, young women, wives, mothers and even young girls have something to say about how Zam-Buk did this or that good office in their home. Many of these writers give permission to make extracts from their grateful testimony. From these the following were taken at random:

"I was troubled for some weeks with salt rheum in hands and arms and was using a salve which did me little good. On receiving a supply of Zambuk I applied it, and it really seemed to act like magic! The itching and burning ceased, and in a few days the skin was cleared and healthy." So writes Miss E. A. Butchard of North Keppel.

"Three boxes of Zam-Buk cured me of Eczema, from which I had suffered a long time." So says Mrs. Gladden, of Mansonville, Que.

"Zam-Buk cured a case of blood poison in my family, and I wish to thank you for the great blessing it has proved," is the effect of a letter from Mrs. Webb, of Dovercourt.

And so one could go on quoting extract after extract, showing how Zam-Buk cures chronic sores, ulcers, abscesses, bad leg, itch, and blood poison; takes the soreness out of cuts and burns, and grows new healthy skin over injured or diseased places. All stores and druggists sell at fifty cents a box, or the Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, will mail for price.

GREAT DAMAGE IS DONE

Many Deaths Reported as Result of Mexican Earthquake.

Towns of Ayutla and Ometepre Practically Destroyed — Severe Shocks Continued Through Night—Traffic Entirely Suspended—Acapulco Partially Submerged—People Fleeing to Country and Living In Tents.

Mexico City, April 17.—The extent of the damage wrought by the earthquake are greater than hitherto has been reported.

The first belated press telegrams to reach this city for 24 hours past were received by the Associated Press at one o'clock yesterday afternoon. From them it is learned that the Town of Ayutla, to the east of Acapulco, and not far from the Pacific Coast, and the Town of Ometepre, about 70 miles to the east of Ayutla, have been practically destroyed.

The shocks continued at Chilpancingo, 125 miles south of here, all Monday night, and were quite severe. Many of the buildings that were left half standing by the previous tremblings were levelled to the ground.

The last shock at Chilpancingo occurred at four o'clock yesterday morning. The general in command of the troops were severely injured. The jail, the hospitals and the school buildings at this town were destroyed. The people have deserted the town and are living in improvised structures in the open air.

The Federal Government is extending aid to the Town of Chilpancingo, but it will be impossible to restore calm until the shocks cease.

The number of deaths reported to date is 37. Fourteen persons were killed in one house. The number of injured is placed at 39.

These figures, however, are not exact, and it is believed that the casualty list eventually will be found to be much larger.

Traffic between Mexico City and Vera Cruz has been completely suspended, as large sections of the track of both the International and Mexican Railroads are sinking.

The port of Acapulco is reported to be partially submerged.

The entire Pacific Coast between Acapulco and Salina Cruz, a distance of some 50 miles, is said to have suffered more or less severely.

CAYUGA MURDER CASE.

Grand Jury Charged By Judge Mabee Yesterday.

Cayuga, April 17.—"Gentlemen, you will bear in mind you do not try the guilt or innocence of this woman. Your duties end when you come to an agreement as whether or not you have heard satisfactory evidence from the crown to warrant you in bringing in either a true bill or no bill to have Mattie Perkins tried before a petty jury in the charge of poisoning Henry Perkins."

In these terms the grand jury, sitting at the opening of the spring assize court of the County of Haldimand, were admonished by Justice Mabee to consider the bill of indictment charging Mattie Perkins of Canfield with poisoning her husband, who died last Christmas, by administering strychnine.

With no report from the grand jury at 5 o'clock Justice Mabee adjourned the court until to-day.

The names of 49 witnesses are endorsed on the bill of indictment. If a true bill is found it is unlikely that the trial will close before Saturday evening. There appears to be a strong feeling in favor of the prisoner.

Justice pleaseth few in their own house.—Herbert.

Big Steamer Ashore.

Detroit, Mich., April 17.—The new steel steamer Ogdensburg, of the Rutland Line, stranded on Pointe Aux Barques Monday night. The steamer is leaking some forward, and the cargo is being thrown overboard. The cargo included 50,000 bushels of corn, a big consignment of flour and general merchandise.

MEETING OF THE KINGS.

German Journal Talks War—Paris Is Perfectly Satisfied.

Berlin, April 18.—King Edward's approaching meeting with King Victor Emmanuel is attracting much attention in the German press, which comments on the event as being an effort to isolate Germany and win Italy away from the triple alliance.

The Cologne Gazette says public opinion in Germany sees in King Edward's course an attempt to disturb the European equilibrum, which is calculated to awaken misgivings regarding his disarmament proposal and, finally warns Great Britain, "that war with Germany would be dangerous for any opponent or any coalition of opponents."

Paris, April 18.—The forthcoming meeting of King Edward and King Victor Emmanuel at Gaeta is viewed with the utmost satisfaction in Government circles here, where the royal conference is considered as not only likely to strengthen the cordial relations existing between Italy and Great Britain, but as binding closer the ties between those two countries and France, and as exerting a good effect on the European situation.

Succeeds Swettenham.

London, April 18.—Sydney Olivier, until recently principal clerk of the West African department of the Colonial Office, ex-Colonial Secretary of Jamaica and acting governor of the island in 1900, 1902 and 1904, has been appointed to succeed Sir Alexander Swettenham as governor of Jamaica, and sails for Kingston May 4.

Unconscious From Gas.

Deseronto, April 18.—John Freeman, Jr., of Deseronto, and Harry Ryan of Marysville, were found unconscious from escaping gas in their room in the Arlington Hotel yesterday morning. Ryan is still in a precarious condition, but is expected to recover. The valve of the gas pipe was defective.

Steals Wife And Child.

Strange Story of Kidnapping From Lobo Township.

Young Farmer's House Forcibly Entered by Three Men --Owner Tied to the Bedpost--Drove Away With Woman--Turned Team Adrift and Joined Train At Windsor--Motive a Mystery.

London, April 18.—Three men forced an entrance into the house of Frank Attwood, a young farmer of Lobo Township, at 3 o'clock yesterday morning and after tying him securely to a bedpost, drove away with his wife and three months old child.

This is the story Attwood told the police yesterday when he swore out a warrant for Arthur Scott, a neighbor, on a charge of kidnapping.

The county police say the kidnapping was carefully planned. They have learned that a young man, answering to the description of Scott, came to a local livery Tuesday night and hired a team of the best horses, saying that he wanted to drive to the country. Yesterday morning the team was returned by a boy, who said they had been turned over to him at a hotel by some stranger, who asked him to take them to the livery. The horses gave every indication of having been driven a long distance.

The police have also learned that a man and woman answering the description of Scott and Mrs. Attwood boarded the train which leaves for Windsor at 6.30 a.m.

NO MOVE TO RELEASE THAW.

O'Reilly Sees Jerome But Bail Was Not Talked About.

New York, April 18.—Although District Attorney Jerome returned to his office from a visit to his home in Lakeville, Conn., yesterday, no move has as yet been made toward an application for the release of Henry K. Thaw on bail.

Lawyer Daniel O'Reilly called on Mr. Jerome yesterday afternoon, but he said the matter of bail for the prisoner was not mentioned. Mr. Jerome said he would continue to oppose in every possible way the release of Thaw on bail.

When questioned about the signed statement issued by Mrs. Nesbit Holman, mother of Mrs. Harry K. Thaw, yesterday, Mr. Jerome said: "I can assure you that when she said that she furnished the district attorney no information for use in connection with the trial of Thaw she spoke the truth."

Thaw informed the keepers in the Tombs prison that he was ill when A. Russell Peabody of his counsel called at the prison yesterday. Thaw was still in bed, but, on being informed that he could not confer with Peabody in his cell, he went to the conference room and consulted with Peabody for two hours.

Mrs. Evelyn Thaw, asked if she had any reply to make to her mother's statement, replied: "Not a word to say on any subject."

WINNIPEG EDITOR ARRESTED.

Nichols, of Telegram, Charged by Wood With Criminal Libel.

Winnipeg, April 18.—M. E. Nichols, editor of The Telegram, of Winnipeg, will appear in the Police Court to-day on a charge of criminal libel. Tuesday afternoon detectives raided the editorial rooms of The Telegram and secured the copy of an article which appeared in the paper last Friday afternoon commenting upon alleged methods used by George W. Wood in conducting the business of the Canadian Stock and Grain Co., of which he is president.

The Telegram says: "George W. Wood and his solicitors may be assured in advance of the Police Court proceedings that The Telegram has made no statement which cannot be substantiated by evidence. The spectacle of a man, committed for trial on a criminal charge, taking an action against a newspaper for exposing the methods which brought him within the clutches of the law requires no comment."

ALLEGE FALSE PRETENCES.

Toronto Man Committed for Trial—Factory Was Never Built.

Stratford, April 18.—John A. Mitchell of Toronto, who, along with William Bullock, is interested in the Toronto Industrial Financial Co., and Scientific System Brick Co., was committed for trial yesterday, on a charge of false pretences.

Information was laid by James L. Holmes of this city, who, it is alleged, paid $2,000 into a company organized by Mitchell for the manufacture of sand lime bricks.

An agreement between Mitchell and Holmes called for the erection of a factory at Thornhill by Sept. 1, 1906. The factory was never built and Holmes alleges fraud and receiving money under false pretences.

A charge of conspiracy against Mitchell and Bullock was also taken up yesterday afternoon, but postponed until April 15.

Mitchell is out on $4,000 bail, and his trial takes place at June sessions.

Woman of 89 Assaulted.

Bowmanville, April 18.—Thomas J. Moore, a farm laborer, who came from Ireland with his wife two years ago, the wife having died since, was arraigned before Magistrate Horsey a few days ago for housebreaking.

Information has now been received that Moore assaulted a respectable woman 89 years of age, who lives alone in the house into which he broke. She had fainted with fright.

The community is greatly aroused over the outrage.

General Booth at Tokio.

Tokio, April 18.—General Booth of the Salvation Army was accorded an enthusiastic reception on his arrival here yesterday from America.

The governor and mayor of Tokio were among those who welcomed him at the railroad station.

THREE SLASHED WITH RAZOR.

Frank Cameron Attacks Citizens in Peterboro Hotel.

Peterboro, April 18.—Frank Cameron of North Bay, an electrician, 23 years old, got on the rampage here yesterday in the Royal Hotel. With a large knife he attacked and wounded three men. All were severely cut about the head and face.

Levi Thorndyke, late of Lindsay, had his nose cut through to the nasal cavity. When falling he sustained a very serious injury on the left side.

Patrick King had five bad gashes on the head and neck, one six inches long.

Gilbert Blezon sustained a deep gash in the face.

Cameron was slightly intoxicated when arrested, a razor and large knife being found on him. No motive is attributed for his murderous assault, as the injured men were all strangers to him.

CHAUFFEUR WAS NEGLIGENT.

Assessed $700 Damages for Injuries to the Driver.

Brockville, April 18.—Yesterday afternoon the jury in the civil action of Wilson v. McDougall awarded the plaintiff $700 damages for injuries sustained in August, 1906, in the Township of Lansdowne, by his horse running through taking fright at automobile driven by the defendant, an iron manufacturer of Montreal.

Wilson is one of the best known dairymen of Leeds County. He swore that for a long distance before the auto reached him the occupants of the auto could see that his horse was becoming uneasy, yet the auto shot past him at 25 miles an hour.

McDougall and his companions said 10 miles. The jury took the view that McDougall had been negligent. Wilson had asked $5,000.

CRIMINAL APPEAL COURT.

Innovation in the Legal System of Great Britain.

London, April 18.—A bill constituting a court of criminal appeal, which has not heretofore existed in Great Britain, was introduced in the House of Commons yesterday by Attorney-General Walton.

He explained that the measure would create the right of appeal against conviction for crime, similar to that now existing in civil cases.

The bill passed its first reading.

France Prodding Morocco.

Tangier, April 18.—A menacing French naval demonstration is taking place off Megador and the general situation is grave, owing to the resentment of the Moors over the French occupation of Oudja.

Native opinion is unanimous that France is seeking to pick a quarrel with Morocco, in order to make further annexations of territory.

In the meantime the country is swarming with "provocative agents."

Mr. Chamberlain's Health.

London, April 18.—A telegram yesterday from Mr. Chamberlain was received at the Colonial Office in reply to a message of sympathy addressed to him by the Colonial Premiers. Mr. Chamberlain reciprocates the good wishes expressed by the conference, and incidentally observes that he is making satisfactory progress in regard to his health.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Belleville expects a big celebration on July 1st, but it now appears doubtful whether winter will be over by that time.

The old adage: "Never halloo until you are out of the woods," is quite as applicable nowadays as when it was first coined. Witness the cases of many estimable citizens, who, a couple of weeks ago chortled and said "Haven't had a thing the matter with us this winter." Then they asked their neighbors who had suffered with colds, "Why don't you be robust like us?" These good people, of course, thought the winter was over then, but it wasn't and now the people who did so much crowing are laid up with the grip, which follows the postcript of winter. The law of average rules Canada pretty well.

A brewing company in Port Hope has failed and is being wound up. This is an incident so unusual as to demand an explanation. It may be that the people of Canada are becoming more temperate, says the Ottawa Citizen, but the probability is that the consumption of beer is becoming less and the consumption of hard liquor becoming greater, a condition which is not promising to the propagation of temperance principles.

That nine learned medical men should be found upon one side declaring positively Thaw was insane when he committed the foul deed, and that he was not now insane; and that eight others standing equally high in the profession should testify to the contrary, was not a spectacle calculated to favorably impress the average layman. The "brain storm" has failed to make good. So have the experts.

JUST A PART OF THE WORKS.

(Winnipeg Tribune, Ind. Lib.)

The insurance commission was purely a party machine. As such it did good party work. The outrage is that the people of Canada should have to pay the bill for such work — bill that should be paid by the government party organization.

A remarkable statement was made at the Polytechnic institute, Regent street, London, with reference to the recent death of Dr. Allan Macfadyen, the famous bacteriologist. Professor Smith said that Dr. Macfadyen's life had been sacrificed to duty. Dr. Macfadyen was connected with the Lister institute. For some time past he had been experimenting with the bacteria of typhoid and Malta fevers, with a view to discovering a vaccine which should prove a preventive of those diseases. It is believed that in the course of his investigations he accidentally contracted both fevers, and his death was attributed to a combination of the two diseases.

A BOLD CHARGE.

(Kingston Whig.)

The Ottawa Citizen discusses the beauty of the women of Belleville, Brockville, Kingston and the capital but on the authority of a visitor "Ottawa is entitled to first place." For what? The boldness of its women, not their beauty.

Of the school population in Montreal a medical inspection revealed the fact that over 20,000 were suffering from inflammation of the glands of the throat, skin disease, defective vision, decayed teeth, enlarged tonsils, and other ailments. Despatches from Toronto indicate something which will be welcome news to parents all over Ontario, namely, that the cost of public school text books will be reduced 50 per cent. by the Whitney Government. A Toronto paper says: "The first test of the policy will be made on the Public School Readers, and upon them, the Government's declaration will likely be made. The Department of Education, it is likely, will announce its intention of immediately advertising for tenders for the supply of Public School Readers for a stated time, probably five years. Canadian publishers will alone be considered, and if the prices quoted in the tenders approximate the estimates a contract will be awarded. The standard material and character of the books will be materially raised, and the subject matter will be determined by a special consulting body which will likely include representation from the Advisory Council as well as prominent outside educationists. Notwithstanding the improved character of the books, the figures before the Department warrant them in anticipating a reduction of some 10 to 50 per cent. in the present prices."

THE WAR OVER.

(Ottawa Citizen.)

The Russo-Japanese war ended on Monday officially when the troops of both nations evacuated Manchuria and handed it back to China. As will be remembered, the real cause of the war was that Russia refused to evacuate Manchuria as she had agreed to do by treaty and the powers did not see fit to insist on the treaty obligations being carried out. It was therefore up to either China or Japan to evict Russia or let her steal the province. The Jap "seen his duty and he done it" and on Monday last the job was completed

Nothing like brag and check. A Mr. C. R. Devlin, in addressing a meeting of the Reform Club in Montreal, boastingly exclaimed: "Let the flashlight be turned upon our leaders in Parliament for they can stand it." Yes, Mr. Devlin, and just as soon as the "flashlight" is turned on, in steps the Speaker with a forced ruling, and extinguishes the light, leaving all in darkness, thus preventing the blurred reputation of the leaders from being seen, and Sir Wilfrid whips in his followers to sustain the Speaker and prevent any investigation.

The action of Sir Mackenzie Bowell in the Senate, and W. B. Northrup, M. P., in the Commons, in bringing under the notice of the Government the non-fulfilment of the conditions upon which the Grand Trunk Railway Company accepted bonuses to repair and run the railway between Madoc and Eldorado, has had some effect upon that corporation, as it appears that Grand Trunk officials are now engaged in estimating the possibilities of a line to be operated between Madoc and Eldorado, in North Hastings. A party from Belleville inspected the old roadbed between these points last week and also the mines and quarries that would be reopened along the right-of-way. They were highly satisfied with the prospects for profitable business, as there is an enormous quantity of mineral lines that cannot be profitably worked without railway facilities.

ANOTHER GERM DESTROYER.

Herpicide is Death to Dandruff Germs.

The germ burrows into the scalp, throwing up the cuticle in thin scales, called dandruff, or scurf, and digging at the root of the hair where it saps the hair's vitality. First comes brittle hair, then lusterless and dead-like hair, then falling hair, and, finally baldness. Nine-tenths of the hair troubles are caused by dandruff. Without dandruff, hair will grow luxuriantly, as nature intended. "Herpicide" kills the dandruff germ leaving the hair to grow unhampered, as it does with the American red man. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Institute Notes.

(Canadian Mute.)

To supply our little family at breakfast on Easter Sunday morning it took only about fifty dozen eggs.

Belleville is booming and house property is changing hands. This has caused several of ~~our~~ staff to move to other habitants. Mr. Stewart, Mr. Dowrie, Mr. Burns and Mr. Minns have all made or are about to make changes and are not always able to get places to suit them.

Mr. Rickett, for several years our messenger, resigned his position on the first of this month. He has purchased an outfit and will go into business for himself as a carter in Belleville. He was a very faithful worker and deserves to succeed. He leaves the service with the best wishes of every one.

We regret to say that Mr. Mathison and family are passing through a time of much anxiety in Toronto. Mrs. Mathison was lately taken to the hospital and operated on for a throat trouble of long standing. She passed through the trial safely and has been taken home. Her recovery is very slow, but we sincerely hope soon to hear of her complete restoration.

Hard On Vessels

About four inches of snow fell last night, which tended to make navigation dangerous.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Lord Milner on the Colonial Conference.

Lord Milner, in a review article, puts in plain words what is passing in many minds when they think of Imperial unity and the means of consolidating Imperial interests. It is that "the several states of the Empire, however independent in their local affairs, however dissimilar in some of their institutions, should constitute for certain purposes one body politic; that, in their relations to the rest of the world, they should appear, and be, a single power, speaking with one voice, acting and working as one great unit in the society of states."

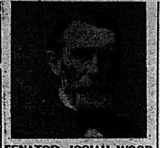
Colonists, Lord Milner asserts, repudiate the idea that their loyalty is owed to Great Britain, but freely give it to the King and the Empire. The British Empire, as the London Standard points out, is, indeed, favorably situated for a start towards unity. Already every man of European race who is born under the British flag is entitled, ipso facto, to full citizen rights in every state of the Empire. From this and other causes, not only is the claim of filial love to the Mother Country felt, but a strong feeling of fraternal unity is springing up—a good and joyful thing—between the different states of the Empire over-sea. This Lord Milner rightly asserts to be a point of vital importance. He favors strongly the proposal emanating from Australia for an Imperial council or for giving the present conference a permanent constitution, in some way. Three weeks once in four years, he regards as too short a time to settle the questions affecting the Empire which are likely to arise, and if the outlying parts of the Empire are to have a voice in shaping external relations, some permanent representative body will be necessary, since such questions are always arising in new forms.

It is in Milner's view unfortunate that the proposal for the establishment of preferential trade, the one new tie of a practical kind which all the colonies, including Canada, are as yet unanimous in desiring, should have met with no better reception in the Mother Country. "The historian of the future," he says, "will rub his eyes with wonder, as foreign observers already do, at the national infatuation which has led one of the fittest opportunities ever offered to any nation of recovering what it had carelessly thrown away."

Allusion is here made to the shilling tax on corn," which would give a preference satisfactory to Canada and Australia.

Lord Cromer's Legacy

Students of modern Egyptology will find much to admire in the beneficent work accomplished in recent years by Lord Cromer, whose retirement from the direction of Egyptian affairs marks an epoch in the most beneficent era the land of the Pharoahs has known for many centuries. The retirement of that wise statesman calls to mind the great work he accomplished quietly and unostentatiously not only in Europe, but in the vast Soudan, and his labors are not likely to be soon forgotten by the people of Great Britain, nor, let us hope, those whom he has done so much for. It is nearly a quarter of a century ago that he went to Egypt, nominally as British agent, but in reality as ruler. He found a people debased and poverty-stricken, in a condition of slavery. Corruption was rampant in every branch of the public service, the taxes farmed out to leeches who extracted the last farthing from the people, the exchequer empty and the country bankrupted by the extravagance of a series of khedives. To-day he leaves it greater and more prosperous than it was in the days of the Pharoahs, the arable land doubled in extent by immense irrigation works, the people happy, free and contented, evenhanded justice administered alike to rich and poor and the affairs of the country honestly and economically administered. And all this accomplished in face of the captious opposition of the leading European powers, which did not want to see the work of regeneration prove successful. Lord Cromer was a firm ruler, an able diplomat and financier. He has retired from office almost as poor as when he went in, but he can have the satisfaction of looking back at the land he has left and see nine millions of people whom he has made prosperous and free.



SENATOR JOSIAH WOOD

Director of Record Foundry Co.

Senator Josiah Wood, of New Brunswick, well-known throughout Canada, is connected with several manufacturing concerns, the largest of which is the Record Foundry and Machine Co., of Moncton, N.B., and Montreal, P.Q. This important industry, established in 1853 by the late Mr. C. B. Record, on a very small scale, has grown to be one of the largest, if indeed not the largest, stove manufacturing concern in the Dominion of Canada, and sell from Halifax to Vancouver. Their "Calorific" and "Admiral" furnaces and "Penn Esther" ranges are known from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

A Modern Solomon.

(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

Joseph Choate, the famous lawyer, related at a dinner party at Lenox some interesting reminiscences of the bar and bench. "A striking case," said Mr. Choate, "transpired in the sixties. It was a case of a workman who claimed to have lost the sight of his left eye in an explosion.

"There was no doubt about the explosion, and there was no doubt that the workman's eye had been injured; but the physicians claimed that he could see out of it, while he stoutly declared that the sight was utterly destroyed.

"The judge heard all the evidence pro and con. Then, sending the workman from the court-room, he said; "Get a blackboard and write a sentence on it with green chalk. Also get a pair of spectacles with ordinary clear glass for the left eye and with red glass for the right."

"This, in the course of an hour or so, was done. Then the workman was brought back and he was ordered to put the queer glasses on.

"He put them on and the judge said to him;

"Turn the blackboard round and see if you can read what is written."

"The man read the sentence without hesitation, whereupon the judge said to him sternly:

"Your case is dismissed. You are an imposter. You must have read that sentence with your left eye, for the red glass over the right one turned the green writing black and made it quite invisible on the blackboard."

Princess And Sweep

(London News.)

Mrs. Charles Hart, a chimney sweep of Hoaxton, has just had the time of his life. He has met and taken tea with a princess, and that, too, by royal command. How it all came about was told by Mr. Hart himself yesterday to a representative of the Daily News.

"Yer see, it was this wye. I was dahn Banner street one dye wiv me and 'eart adein' chimneys ter Mr. Cox as employs me. Close by was a noo building about ter be started fer the Church Army, an' my mate sez to me, he sez, 'Let's go over an' see the princess.' So, in course, over I goes. I shoved over inter the front line like, so as I could see, an' just then along comes Princess Louise Auguste wiv a lot of toffs as was to take part in the layin' of the stone. I puts out me 'and an' sez, ''Ow d'ye do, mum?" an' blow me, if she didn't take my 'and an' she wiv white groves on, too, an' shakes it, an' sez, sez she, ''Ow are you?"

"Well, that was as long ago as two years, I should think, when one dye, abart a munt ago, I 'as a printed letter (typewritten) from Mr. Charlie, sayin' as 'ow the princess 'ad asked fer me address. So dahn it goes.

"Well, yesterday mawnin' I 'as anuvver syin' as 'ow 'er royal 'ighness wished me ter come an' 'ave tea wiv her in me clean clothes. I didn't know wot ter do. But, in course, I went, me an' my son, an' we 'as tea altogevver in a room on the top floor. There was me an' my son, an' Mr. Carile an' the princess, an' anuvver lidy and gent as I doesn't know.

"Well, we sits dahn an' the princess pours out the tea for us an' passes the kike. Well, as I was sayin' I was quite upset wiv it all, until the princess asks quite simple like, 'Owever does yer clean chimneys, Mr. 'Art?' So I up an' told 'er. Well, yer never would 'ave thought as 'ow interested royalty is in the chimney business, an' we 'ad quite a long yarn, an' when we parted she shook 'ands quite affable like."

Snow and Ice in The Summer Time.

MONTREALERS SKATED IN MAY IN OLD DAYS AND WINNIPEG HAD SNOW ON JULY 1.

Montreal Star. On all sides is being heard that the present spring is the slowest and latest in the history of Montreal. The "oldest inhabitant" however, will contradict the statement, and some who far from being in the oldest inhabitant class can remember years when things were even worse than they are to-day.

Some of the old timers of the Victoria Skating rink assert confidently that they skated in that place of amusement at a date in the seventies on the Queen's birthday, and that the ice on that occasion was hard and made good going.

Mr. F. Percy Smith, secretary-treasurer of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Co., who was for many years secretary-treasurer of the skating rink company declares that he has no record of such an occurrence. There is a record, however, of a skating party going to the rink and enjoying a good evening's sport on May 5th. This was some time in the early eighties. Mr. Smith explains, however, that this cannot be accepted as a criterion of conditions outside. The roof of the rink keeps off the sun, and while the snow and ice may have entirely disappeared outside, the ice in the rink may be hard and firm as that in an ice house, and for the same reason.

Four or five years ago, on May 24 people who tried an excursion down the river were astonished to find masses of snow and ice on Longueil wharf, and at different spots down the river a few miles from the city.

Along about 1888 or 1889, a party of immigrants reaching Winnipeg on Dominion day, July 1st, were astonished to find about a foot of snow on the ground. This was of course a freak of the weather man, but it was effective in its influence on the settlers, for they turned right around and started back east by the next train without waiting a day to see the snow wiped away again.

About the same time, in the Gaspe peninsula, especially the portion bordering on the Gulf, the winter roads kept up until after May 20th and in the first week of May hauling in the woods which generally stops at the end of March, was in full blast.

It will therefore be seen that the present season, which in all conscience is bad enough, is not so much more backward than many seasons in years gone by.

Sam Hughes Pays Respect To Star.

FIRE-EATING MEMBER FOR VICTORIA HANDS IT TO HUGH GRAHAM'S SHEET IN REAL DONNYBROOK STYLE.

Ottawa, April 17.—It was another Sam Hughes session in the Commons this morning. The colonel from Lindsay paid his respects to the Montreal Star in language brisk and unequivocal. The member for Victoria and Haliburton rose to a question of privilege.

"Reference," said Col. Hughes, "is made by the Star to collusion between myself and the Minister of Militia in regard to military matters. I would say only one word in reference to that, that anything that has transpired between the Minister of Militia and myself is done with the absolute knowledge of my former leader, Sir Charles Tupper, and my present leader, R. L. Borden, the policy being that everything connected with the militia should be as far as possible kept out of the arena of party politics. I am not complaining of the news columns of the Star, but of the editorial, which is one of the weakest — the editorials are always weak in the Star."

STANDS BY FOWLER.

An article on Mr. Fowler he called unfair, unmanly and cowardly.

Col. Hughes.— "The Montreal Star, therefore, I presume, is merely getting back at me in its usual way for having defended my friend, Major Fowler, on that occasion. I may point out that the Montreal Star's editorial policy is yet influenced by its conductor the eve of last election, when it having undertaken—I would not say criminal conduct, in relation to that election — found itself at the mercy of the leader of the Government, and then after trembling and chattering for a few months finally succumbed and surrendered itself, and since that time has been under the control of the leader of the Government." (Oh! Oh!)

STAR'S MENTAL PARALYSIS.

Hon. Mr. Fielding—"If the charge is that the Star is under the control of the Government, I am afraid I will have to rise to a question of privilege myself."

Col. Hughes—"I do not know what the compromise with Sir Wilfrid Laurier was, but at all events we do know that after being in a state of mental paralysis for a number of weeks the Star——"

Mr. Speaker—"I think the hon. gentleman is now going beyond the question of privilege."

Col. Hughes — "I am merely explaining why the Star is slating me. I bow to your ruling."

The Flag Over the School.

The amendment to the School Act by the Premier of New Brunswick, by which the Canadian ensign will wave over every school house, seems to be popular with the public. Of the flag over the school house the St. John Sun says;

"To bring the youth of this province up under the shadow of that glorious banner; to teach them what it stands for; to fill their blood with the pride of it, the honor of it, the strong courage and the high ideals which every historic fold of it represents—surely this is good Canadian policy. We take our loyalty too much for granted these days. Canada's position is not as it was. Every year sees hundreds of thousands of foreigners coming to take up their abode with us, bringing their own national traditions and affections. To absorb all those into a common and strong nationality we need a virile, militant infectious inspiration of loyalty—not braggart nor fulsome, but deep and sincere and well founded. And with our flag shouting on every wind from every school housetop the glory of the combined crosses and the greatness of the maple leaf to the ears of every boy and girl, what a training could be given for such loyalty."

What is good for the little Province down by the sea should be good for inland provinces like Quebec and Ontario. At all events a trial should be made. We believe that the presence of our flag over the school houses would have a stimulating effect on our loyalty. And such an effect will do no harm.

A man makes allowances for his faults, even though his wife may be one of them.

Why do you shun real publicity. Failing to use the "wants" sometimes amounts to that.

Pronunciation of "Theatre."

If "theatre" was originally written "theater" in English, has its pronunciation also varied among the orthodox—that is to say, was there ever a time when correct speakers said "theayter," as many of the incorrect still do? There is no direct evidence in verse of a serious kind for such pronunciation so far as we know. Shakespeare certainly pronounced the word as we do now, says a London journal. But since "theayter" does really represent a long "a" of the original Greek and Latin it is not easy to understand how the vulgar could have blundered on to it of their own accord. It would have been more comprehensible if they had turned an orthodox "theayter" into "theater," just as the second "a" in "Amasis" goes too often popularly shortened now. The French language has had to mark the length of the "a" in "theatre" by giving it a rather irregular circumflex accent.

AN OLD D'GERRYTYPE.

It's jest an' ol' d'gerrytype — 'twas taken years ago,
When yo' ma was young an' pretty,
an' yo' daddy was a beau.
("An' yo' daddy was a han'some chap," says ma, "I'll have you know!")

Thar warn't a gal in Pikeville could hold a candle, child—
To yo' ma, though she was heady—
to put it kinder mild!
("La: heady, I should say so," says ma; "I sure was wild!")

We uster go to singin' school, an'
many a time I've hed
A fit fer fear yo' ma would choose another beau instead.
("You allus knowed I liked you best,' says ma, a-gettin' red.)

Now, Sally thar', an' Lucy's kinder pretty in their way,
But yo' ma was like a blushin' rose
a'bloomin' in the May.
An' her eyes was bright ez di'monds,
(Says ma, "Now, Jim—do, pray!")

It's Gospel truth I'm tellin', an' you know it, Sally Ann,
An' when you up an' married me I was a prideful man!
(Says ma, "You shuck jest like a leaf, an' I could scuscly stan'!")

I reckon pho-to-graphy is pow'ful hard to beat,
But this here ol' d'gerrytype is surely mighty sweet!
("Let's see!" says ma, "thet Dolly

You all may hev mo' manners an' you know a' awful pile,
But you ain't ez pretty ez yo' ma, nor he'n't got her style!
"Now hush sich nonsense, Jim!"
says ma—but she gave him sich
a smile!)

The chances are, says the Montreal Gazette, that if he is called upon to meet many arguments of a similar depth he will be driven to drink.

WAS CIGAR THE CAUSE?

Origin of Fire at McGill Not Very Clear.

Montreal, April 18.—Although the finding of the fire committee does not indicate that the loss of the medical building was caused by the butt of a cigar falling from the hands of a member of the faculty, everything points to this as being the correct theory of Tuesday's disastrous fire.

One thing is sure, and that is the presence of the faculty in their room at a late hour on Monday night. The statement is made that these gentlemen left the room in question about 11 o'clock, and in two hours that part of the building was in flames. It was in the faculty room where the fire started.

It was Prof. Cox who first discovered the fire. He had been doing some special work in the physics building. As he was proceeding through the grounds he saw fire in the western wing of the middle section of the medical pile. He at first thought that the fire was on the exterior of the building, supposing that it was a heap of rubbish that was being destroyed. He went to examine and found there was fire inside.

The evidence given before Commissioner Ritchie showed that Dr. John R. Balluah had been experimenting in the medical building up to 12 o'clock Monday night. Dr. J. W. Scane, registrar, said that 14 men had met in the committee room adjoining the faculty room and had been smoking during the evening. There was no waste paper on the floor and he did not see how cigar ashes could cause fire.

COL. HUGHES DENIES.

Says There Is No Collusion With the Minister of Defence.

Ottawa, April 18.—Col. Sam Hughes took a fling at The Montreal Star yesterday.

"Reference," said Col. Hughes, "has been made by The Star to collusion between myself and the Minister of Militia in regard to military matters. I would say only one word in reference to that, that anything that has transpired between the Minister of Militia and myself is done with the absolute knowledge of my former leader, Sir Charles Tupper, and my present leader, R. L. Borden, the policy being that everything connected with the militia should be as far as possible kept out of the arena of party politics.

"The Montreal Star, I presume, is merely getting back at me in its usual way for having defended my friend Major Fowler. I may point out that The Montreal Star's editorial policy is yet influenced by its conduct on the eve of the election, when it found itself at the mercy of the leader of the Government, and then, after trembling and chattering for a few months, finally succumbed and surrendered itself, and since that time has been under the control of the leader of the Government." (Oh, oh.)

Mr. Fielding rose to a question of privilege and the matter dropped.

Shot Deer Out of Season.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., April 18.—Game Warden A. Calbeck returned Tuesday from the river where he had been investigating the illegal shooting of deer.

That his mission was successful is evidenced by the fact that the carcases of 14 deer were found and that one of the parties implicated in the slaughter was brought back to the Soo. A Frenchman named Gagnon is known to be the moving spirit in the deer shooting.

Boy Drowns In Cistern.

Wingham, April 18.—About two o'clock yesterday Carl, the five-year-old son of P. N. Tansley, local manager of the Bell Telephone Co., was drowned in a cistern at the rear of the house.

He had been playing about the open trap door, and was found in a few minutes by his mother. Medical aid was of no avail.

Thief on Police Force.

Ottawa, April 18.—An Englishman who decamped from Hull with some of the Electrical Railway Co.'s money and owing his landlady for board, and who afterwards went to work for a farmer near Hull and victimized him, was located on the Ottawa police force and dismissed on the plea of uncleanliness.

Music Hath Charms.

"Walter!" called the customer in the restaurant where an orchestra was playing.

"Yes, sir."

"Kindly tell the leader of the orchestra to play something sad and low while I dine. I want to see if it won't have a softening influence on this steak!"—Tit-Bits.

A Caustic Rejoinder.

A physician who had for fifteen years been one of the doctors of the Actors' fund and who attended hundreds of actors with no compensation whatever, wrote to a prominent manager and asked for some theater tickets. His request was refused, the manager asking what the doctor had ever done that he should be entitled to receive theater tickets gratis. The physician immediately replied. His letter contained a brief recital of his services to theatrical people. In conclusion he said: "Despite my services, as named above, I should not have thought of asking you for tickets had it not been that upon the occasion of the death of Mr. Blank you assured me that if you could ever serve me in any way whatever you would consider it a favor if I would call upon you. However, I bear you no ill will on account of your present action. I was very glad to attend Mr. Blank when he died in your box office, and I should be happy to do as much for you at any time."

Tom Corwin's Education.

The father of Tom Corwin, the famous Kentucky statesman, orator and wit, felt that he was too poor to make a scholar of more than one child of his large family, and so the elder brother, Matthias, was kept at school and Thomas placed at hard work on the farm. The breaking of a leg proved a happy incident in the life of the boy, as the enforced confinement gave him time for devotion to his beloved books, and he committed a Latin grammar to memory. Upon his recovery he again importuned his father to send him to school and, meeting a refusal, deliberately broke his leg the second time that he might have leisure to study. His heroic determination to learn resulted in his being placed in the same institution attended by his brother, where his natural ability and great industry gathered a thorough knowledge of the best English literature and a fair acquaintance with the Latin classics.—Ohio Magazine.

Why Horses Shy.

The horse shied at a piece of white paper, and the rider tumbled off into the mud.

"It is well for the world," said an automobilist, smiling, "that it is ceasing to use the horse for a servant. The horse is a half blind giant, with the mind of a baby. No wonder, then, that when we trust out lives in his keeping he is apt to go back on us.

"His main trouble is his eyes. So poor is the horse's sight that he mistakes a bank of snow for a fierce white beast. A mud puddle at his feet is a yawning chasm. A shadow flung across his path is a black terror seeking his life; hence the weakminded, nearsighted, powerful horse goes through life beside himself with fear. He is no more to be trusted than a maniac, and, like a maniac, he sees a monster awaiting him at every corner. Yet we get on his back, fools that we are."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

How Clouds and Fogs Differ.

Clouds are bodies of moisture evaporated from the earth and again partially condensed in the upper regions of the air. Fogs differ from clouds only in one respect—they come in contact with the surface of the earth while clouds are elevated above our heads. When the surface of the earth is warmer than the lower air the vapor of the earth, being condensed by the chill air, becomes mist or fog. But when the lower air is warmer than the earth the vapor rises through the air and becomes cloud. Fog and mist differ in this respect—that mist is a fine rain, while fog is vapor not sufficiently condensed to allow of its precipitation in drops.

The Fata Morgana.

The most singular aerial phenomenon is the fata morgana, a sea mirage seen off the coast of Calabria and between Italy and Sicily. It presents the phantoms of cities, houses, temples, palaces and ships, sometimes in their proper position, sometimes inverted, occasionally at an angle. The phenomenon has been known for many ages and formerly occasioned great and widespread alarm, being regarded as an evil omen that betokened some general and severe calamity.

Curious Effects of Frost.

An egg expands when it is frozen so much that the increased bulk breaks the shell. Apples, on the contrary, contract to such an extent that a full barrel will shrink until the top layer will be a foot below the chime. When the frost has been slowly and carefully drawn out, they again assume their normal size and appearance. Apples can be transported when the mercury is 20 degrees below zero. Potatoes once touched by frost are ruined.

An Easier Trip.

"The president of this road," remarked the man in the corner of the smoking compartment, "is one of those old fashioned railroaders. He began as a brakeman. Instead of riding over the line in a private car to inspect it, he walks over it." "I don't blame him," declared the man who was making his first trip on the road.—Cleveland Press.

A Lasting Impression.

"Well, Bertha, I hear you met Mr. Cooke yesterday. Did you like him?"

"Do you know, dear, he made an impression upon me that nothing will obliterate."

"Really! How—what did he say?"

"It wasn't what he said; it was what he did. He spilled a cup of tea over my new white silk dress."

Succeeded.

"She married him to reform him."

"Did she succeed?"

"Sure! He used to be a spendthrift and now he has nothing to spend."—Houston Post.

Winds of passion do not blow to harbors of high purposes.

A laugh is worth a hundred groans in any market.

ambition, loyalty, love, his pledged oath to Madame de Pompadour, fear, remorse, and pain struggled within him.

"I will promise anything, anything but that," he cried in despair.

"It is the only thing that can help," she said very quietly; "but it is well I should know the truth. I thank you for that." Tears were in her voice. "Do not think the worse of me if—" she stopped. Words failed her. Fate and the mistakes of the past of each were too strong for him and for her.

And then, Andre, unable to endure the misery longer, without a syllable of explanation or justification, left her.

Denise's eye fell on the note from the woman who she felt had ruined her life and his. For one minute she held it in her fingers. Her friends would give much for this damning evidence of his guilt. If she desired revenge, here was the chance; and she was, alas! racked by the jealousy and curiosity of a woman who loved and had been rejected; but it was only for a moment that she wavered, then with a proud sadness tore the note into fragments and threw them on the fire. Not till the last had been burnt did she take refuge in the hopeless loneliness of her own room.

"Mon Dieu!" exclaimed Madame de Pompadour, as Andre stepped from behind the curtains of the secret door, "Mon Dieu! my friend, I am not the devil, that you should look at me like that."

"Madame," Andre replied, "I am here to receive your commands."

A jest, a taunt, a direct question, hovered on the lady's lips. But after another searching look, instead she held out a hand of swift and strong sympathy.

"Courage, Vicomte," she said softly, "do not despair. I am not beaten yet, nor are you. No woman can forget a man's loyalty, certainly not I."

Madame de Pompadour was a selfish and ambitious woman, yet to a few such nature has granted the mysterious power of expressing in word and look what they do not really feel. Then, as always in her unique career, it proved the most potent of her many gifts.

"I thank you, Marquise," Andre replied, deeply touched.

"You have heard the news," she said, wisely returning to business. "Yes? Could anything be worse? But thank Heaven the messenger was carrying only public despatches. Had it been one of the King's secrets you and I would not be talking here."

"And His Majesty?"

"Is one moment furiously angry, at another plunged in the deepest dejection, at another jesting. This accursed treachery appalls him. No wonder. But, as the business of last night affects the ministers more than himself, he is angry with them alone. Cursed dullards, he called them in this very room, infamous bunglers. I think," she added, smiling, "His Majesty will presently see it is his interest to give some of them change of air and occupation. Who knows, the Vicomte de Nerac may be Minister for War yet."

Andre laughed grimly. That would be a triumphant retort indeed to the Court that hoped to prove him a traitor and a libertine.

Madame de Pompadour ceased to smile. Fear and anxiety made her voice and eyes grave. "'No. 101,'" she said, "has given the King occasion to call his ministers dullards and bunglers. If to-morrow, thanks to 'No. 101,' the King should have reason to call me that and worse, you and I are ruined. You follow me?"

"Perfectly, Madame."

"Eh bien! it is necessary for His Majesty to communicate with the Jacobites. That, unhappily, is not my affair. His Majesty wills it so, and I, who alone know this, must obey. This is the despatch."

Andre took the sheet of paper. "It is in your handwriting, Madame!" he exclaimed, in sharp astonishment.

"Yes, I wrote it at the King's dictation this morning. Have you forgotten I, alone, am his confidential secretary now?" She quietly folded the paper, sealed it with her own private seal, and wrote a direction on the cover.

"You wish me to be the bearer?" Andre asked quickly.

"Three persons alone," she replied quietly, "know of this despatch and its contents—the King, you, and I. The King cannot deliver it. It must, therefore, be you or I. With 'No. 101' out there or here in the palace we cannot trust any messenger. That is the price you and I have to pay for the power we have won."

"I will take it," Andre said at once.

"Reflect, my friend," she answered. "If that despatch is found on your person, or stolen, it reveals an intrigue with the Jacobites in defiance of the King's public promise and the policy of his ministers, and you will go to the Bastile as a traitor. It is my handwriting, sealed with my seal, and the King will disavow us both; therefore, I shall follow you to prison and death. This is a more dangerous errand than my commission at Fontenoy. You can risk it, and will, but is it fair?"

"Madame, if you were not involved, I should welcome the Bastile and the scaffold," he replied.

She flashed a swift look, piercing to the marrow, and she read how the iron of some unknown fate had entered into his soul; but with marvellous self-restraint she suppressed her curiosity.

"I thank you," she said; "no, I cannot thank you, but some day I will."

It is not given to many men to see in such a woman's eyes what Andre saw then. He wrenched himself into asking an obvious question.

"The agent of the Jacobites will be at midnight at 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold,'" she answered. "Do not be surprised; it is not I who have chosen that place; it is the King, and we must obey. Paris is too far off; the road and the city are as we know only too full of dangers. Remember that before you deliver the despatch the agent will give you the password, 'Discret et fidele,' and show you a seal like this. Yes, keep it." She handed him an impression of the private royal seal. "And now I will sew the paper into your inside pocket; it is the safest way I can think of."

For a couple of minutes she stitched in the most businesslike way, but neither he nor she could make the operation other than it was.

What a beautiful woman! Andre was only human, indeed more susceptible than most to physical charm. The flutter of her eyelids, the lights that unconsciously came and went in her eyes, the dimple in the cheek, the rounded curve of neck, shoulder, and arm—veritably a morceau de roi.

"They say," she whispered, with a roguish laugh, "that poor fool of a messenger was cajoled off his errand by a petticoat. Women, you know, are often surprised at the extraordinary weakness of even strong men. I wonder if any woman could make you, Vicomte, betray yourself. Perhaps?"

"I hope not." Andre found it wiser to jest too.

"Ma foi! I should like to try."

Andre kissed her fingers with the unconscious grace that was vainly imitated by all the young courtiers of Versailles. "I could only succumb to your equal, Marquise," he said, "but such a woman does not exist. Therefore I shall succeed."

"You must; you must."

"Madame, the paper will be delivered safely or I shall never return."

The thoughts of both had soared away in the sudden silence, and across the unconquerable dreams of ambition and love there fell the sinister, blood-stained mystery of the unknown traitor and darkened the room.

"God keep you, my friend," Madame murmured. "God keep you safe!"

CHAPTER XXII.

The clock in Andre's room struck eleven. Andre pulled the curtains back and surveyed the night. Serene, flawlessly serene, as an October night at Versailles can be. Satisfied that his pistols were properly primed, that the precious despatch was still in his pocket, he blew out the lights and then by a rope ladder swung himself out of the window. His experience at "The Gallows and the Three Crows" had warned him that for his foes to discover the King's commission was for Madame de Pompadour and himself ruin, death, and dishonor. And as he was determined the Court should not so much as know he had left the palace. So at midday he had given out that he was ill, had even sent for a physician, and then had quietly slept till the hour had come. And now that he had successfully given them the slip the Captain of the Queen's Guards laughed as a truant schoolboy might have done. A few lights still twinkled into the October air, some from behind shutters, others through the open glass. Andre paused to survey the majestic front of the palace as it faces the broad terrace that commands the gardens, that terrace where to-day the bare-legged French children scamper and the chattering tourists stroll—those gardens where, could he have known it, was to be played out the tragi-comedy of The Diamond Necklace and the downfall of the descendants of Le Roi Soleil. And he was asking himself, would he ever see Versailles again?

Up there to the right was the window of Denise's room. If only he could have said two words of farewell before he rode out to battle with the unknown! Hush! the shutters were being fretfully thrown back. Yes, that figure in white was Denise looking out, as so many in their sorrow or passion have looked out, to the passionless stars for an answer, and in vain. His blood throbbed feverishly, until Denise, ignorant that in the darkness below her a heart as cruelly torn as her own was beating wistfully, wearily closed the shutters, and went back to a sleepless bed.

Andre stole away across the gardens to seek the road yonder where a trusted servant from Paris would be waiting with his best horse.

"She is not a peasant," he muttered, showing whither his thoughts were traveling. "Well, well!"

"If I am not at the palace by nine o'clock, Jean," he said as he mounted, "come for my orders to the inn called 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold.'" And Jean nodded knowingly.

Orders! Andre smiled grimly. Dead men can give no orders, not even for their own burial, nor can they take all their secrets with them; more was the pity.

When the servant had disappeared Andre bound the mare's hoofs with felt, and she whinnied affectionately, as if she understood. She had only twice been so treated, once the night before Fontenoy and now, for she was the English blood mare which had crushed into pulp the face of that miserable dead woman in the charcoal-burner's wood and had saved her master's life from "No. 101" and George Onslow. Andre stroked her neck and whispered into her ear. To-night she might have to save his honor as well as his life.

Once in the main road Andre drew rein in the shadow of a tree on the outskirts of the forest and listened attentively. To the right ran the track for farm carts that led directly to the inn, but he decided not to take that. If by any chance he had been followed or an ambush was laid his foes would certainly choose that track, his natural route. He therefore rode past it, again halted to listen, and then plunged fearlessly under the trees, picking his way along a wood-cutter's disused path.

Already, through the tangle of boughs, he could make out the blurred shape of the inn ahead, when a faint hiss brought his sword from the scabbard. No, that was a low whistle there on the right. That bush, too, just in front was stirring suspiciously; by St. Denys! the crown of a man's hat. A howl of surprise and pain rent the air. Andre had driven in his spurs; the maddened mare had leaped on to the bush and the hat with the man's head under it was cut through with one pitiless stroke of sword. In went the spurs again; for he saw now there were three others running up from the main track which he had refused to follow. The flash of a pistol; the bullet went through his cloak, but the man who fired it took Andre's sword point in his throat and dropped, gurgling. The remaining two stood their ground, and struck at him with their swords. One of them, with a cry "Seigneur Jesu!" lurched forward, run through the breast. But the other had stabbed the mare from behind. She plunged and fell heavily. Andre felt a sharp pain in his left arm; he, too, was stabbed! He had a vision of himself being tossed through the air, his head struck a tree trunk, and——

When he recovered consciousness he was lying on the ground and all was still. In an agony of bewildered fear he tore his coat open and felt for the despatch. Impossible! Yes, it was still there. A red mist danced in his eyes, his left arm throbbed with pain, but he lay half sobbing with a delirious joy. The despatch was still there! Death and dishonor had not the mastery of him yet.

"You are hurt, Monseigneur?"

Yvonne, in her tattered gown and dishevelled hair, with a lantern in her hand, was kneeling beside him. Andre staggered to his feet; he scarcely knew whether he was hurt or not. He gazed round, trying to recollect, as the flickering light showed him four men's bodies lying this way and that near him. Dead, all of them. And his horse—no, that was alive; she whinnied as he tottered up to her.

"Take it to the stable," he muttered, "take the mare, Yvonne. It is not the first time she has saved my life."

Yvonne in silence led the bleeding beast away. The girl who loved a cow also understand why a soldier could love his horse.

Andre now seized the lantern and examined the dead men. Ha! two of them he did not know, but two were the spies of "The Gallows and the Three Crows," the servants of the Duke de Pontchartrain and the Comte de Mont Rouge. He sat down on a fallen tree trunk faint and sick. But the shock braced his dazed mind and he tugged out his watch. Ten minutes to twelve. Ten minutes. He could still be in time. His arm indeed was dripping with blood, but it was a mere flesh wound, which he promptly bound up with his handkerchief, and by this time Yvonne had returned.

"Tell me what happened," eh commanded.

"I was sitting in the kitchen," she said quietly, "when I heard a cry—a terrible cry. I seized a bludgeon and a lantern and rushed out. Mon Dieu! Monseigneur, it was horrible; you were fighting and falling. I struck as hard as I could, and then all was still. Monseigneur, I can see now, killed three of them, but the fourth I think I killed. See—there!"

Her bludgeon was lying beside one of the dead men, whose head it had battered in. Yvonne began to cry at the sight.

"Will they hang me, Monseigneur?" she asked.

"Hang you! Good heavens! You have saved my life, my honor. They will not hang you unless they hang me, and they will not do that. Come, Yvonne, we must show these canaille where the superintendent of the police can seen them to-morrow."

They carried the four bodies to one of the outhouses, and not till then did Andre enter the inn parlor to wait for the agent of the Jacobites; but no agent arrived, and, after drinking some wine which Yvonne found for him and telling her to summon him if required, Andre dismissed her, drew a chair up to the fire, and began to ponder on the night's work; but his mind refused to think. A curious numbness as if produced by a drug steadily overpowered him, and after wrestling with himself in vain he fell into a deep sleep.

He had been lying in the chair perhaps a quarter of an hour when the door softly opened. Yvonne with a finger to her lips, holding her petticoats off the floor, stole in, and behind her a stranger, shading the light he carried with his hand, stepped stealthily on tiptoe.

In silence they both inspected the sleeping Andre. Then Yvonne very cautiously inserted her hand inside the sleeper's coat and probed as it were gently. The pair inspected the despatch closely, smiling when they observed the handwriting on the cover. Then with the same practiced sureness of touch, they rebuttoned the coat, and withdrew as noiselessly as they had entered; but as they reached the threshold a little tongue of flame from one of the logs on the fire suddenly revealed the face of Yvonne's companion to be that of the Chevalier de St. Amant.

Outside the door, the girl hung her lantern quietly on the wall in the passage.

UNDERWEAR

Capturing A Burglar.

By Harriet Lummis Smith.

Copyright, 1907, by Mary McKeon.

Scott sat on the step of the guildhall and fanned himself with his hat. Through the open door came the sound of feminine voices, animated and eager. The young man's eyes scanned the landscape with something of wistfulness in their depths. He had noticed one or two pretty girls in the throng of older women who were engineering the church supper, but apparently they were all too busy for conversational advances. He reflected with a sense of injury that his visit was opening tamely.

"Chester!" It was his aunt's brisk voice, and Scott rose with alacrity. Energetic Aunt Anne liked to see people busy. In her summons he read a promise of occupation and welcomed it regardless of its nature. Nor was he destined to be disappointed.

"This is my nephew, Mr. Scott," said Aunt Anne, addressing a group of ladies, who acknowledged the introduction by a collective smile. "And he'll be delighted to do any little errands for us," she added generously. "Now, Mrs. Anderson, tell him about your spoons."

Mrs. Anderson beamed gratefully on the young man. "I'm sure it's awfully kind of you, Mr. Scott. You see, we're short of spoons, and I want to send you for mine. Do you know Fayette street? Yes, it crosses Main at right angles, and my house is a yellow cottage on the right, with woodbine over the porch. You'll find the key under the mat. Go straight through the hall into the dining room, and the spoons are in the left hand drawer of the sideboard. It's just lovely of you to help us out, Mr. Scott."

The other ladies murmured assent, and one or two of the younger flashed appreciative glances in his direction. Scott's spirits rose. He promised a speedy return and started on his errand, reflecting as he went on the refreshing confidence of a community which left its keys under the door mats and permitted strangers to have access to its homes.

He had no difficulty in finding the yellow cottage, and the key was in its place. He made his way through the silent hall into the dining room, and here he encountered his first check. The spoons were not in the drawers of the sideboard. In fact, they were not in the sideboard at all, though he ransacked it thoroughly to make sure. Opening the closet door, he was rewarded by the sight of a well stocked silver chest, and he possessed himself of the spoons, promising himself a laugh at the expense of the owner of the silver, whose memory was so unreliable.

"Hold up your hands!"

The request came in tones whose determination could not be mistaken, and Scott spun on his heel to find himself facing a revolver. Back of the revolver was a girl. She was a rather tall girl with very white cheeks and absurdly long lashes. She wore a garden hat, beneath which little tendril-like curls festooned themselves about her forehead. Under other circumstances Scott would have voted her charming.

"Hold up your hands!" said the girl again, and Scott obeyed, reflecting that it was better to humor her first and explain afterward. The spoons in his pocket seemed to weigh a ton. He felt hot and ridiculous.

"Your mother asked me"— he began.

The girl interrupted him. "I have no mother. Your excuses will only make a bad matter worse."

Scott bit his lip. Absurd as the situation was, it had a serious side. He spoke with as much dignity as was consistent with standing before a beautiful girl with his hands on a level with his ears. "I was requested to come here by the lady of the house," he insisted.

"Oh, indeed! Then perhaps you will tell me her name."

Scott racked his brain. In the distraction of that general introduction Mrs. Anderson's name had failed to imprint itself on his memory.

"I don't know her name," he acknowledged, "but she is a dark haired woman, about forty-five, I should say, with a good deal of color." He would have gone further with his description, but the young woman checked him by a gesture not to be misunderstood.

"I prefer to know no more of your preposterous fiction," she said witheringly. "Evidently you are not as shrewd as you think yourself. It happens that I am the lady of this house, and I am going to keep you right here until my uncle comes."

Scott cursed his folly. Doubtless there were yellow cottages on every block and all the neighborhood kept its keys under the door mat. He tried to say something about a mistake, but she would not listen. Keeping her eye upon him, she seated herself deliberately. "Please do not move," she said, "or I shall be compelled to shoot, and that would be very disagreeable for me and considerably worse for you."

In the position he was compelled to assume Scott had an excellent opportunity for studying his captor. She was certainly a remarkably pretty girl. The stern determination of her eyes could not hide their depth and luster. The pallor of her cheeks failed to disguise their exquisite curves. The hand that held the revolver was a very shapely one. It pained him to notice that the girl was gradually growing nervous. Her hand trembled. Her bosom rose and fell as if sobs were struggling to escape. Once or twice her eyes seemed almost to waver before his own. "Stop looking at me like that!" she suddenly commanded.

"I beg your pardon," said Scott humbly and looked at the floor. Now that he no longer had her face to distract him he realized that the unaccustomed position of his arms was a most uncomfortable one. A twinge of pain contracted his face, and he sighed.

"Does it hurt?" asked the holder of the revolver, with a grim pleasure in the situation.

"It does," Scott acknowledged feelingly.

"On the whole," observed the girl, "it is probably less painful than a term in the penitentiary."

"I have no doubt that you are right," Scott agreed politely.

Silence fell between them after this. They were still for so long that a little mouse crept out of the closet and scuttled like a fleck of gray cloud across the room. The girl cried out and dropped the revolver. "Allow me," said Scott, and he picked it up and returned it to her. Then he again raised his hands.

A becoming flush routed the girl's pallor. "I guess you needn't do that any longer," she said. "And perhaps you would be more comfortable if you sat down."

"Thank you," Scott said gratefully and dropped into a chair, rubbing his aching arms with unfeigned relief. After a minute or two he was shocked to discover that the girl was in tears.

"I don't see," she sobbed, "why any one who can be as courteous as you and as considerate should ever have taken up burglary."

"My dear girl," cried Scott, "I'm no more a burglar than you are. I am a gentleman, as you ought to begin to realize by this time. Miss Anne Bagsby is my aunt, and I stopped off here this morning on my way east to pay her a few days' visit. There is to be a supper at the guildhall, in which she is interested, and as they were short of spoons one of the women sent me after hers."

"It couldn't have been"— the girl began, and then she stopped. There was a sound of footsteps in the hall. A well built, middle aged man came into the dining room with a cheerful "Well, Amy," and then stopped stock still in surprise.

With a dexterous movement the girl had pulled the folds of her dress over the revolver. "Uncle Charlie," she faltered, "this is a friend of mine, a nephew of Miss Anne Bagsby."

The middle aged man advanced cordially. "I'm very glad to meet you, Mr."— He threw a reproachful glance at the girl, blushing in the background.

Scott seized his outstretched hand. "Scott—Chester Scott. My aunt is interested in a church supper which is to take place this evening, and as they were short of spoons she sent me out to borrow some. Miss Amy has kindly consented to lend me two dozen and to give me her company at the supper."

"Oh, indeed! Well, I shall hope to see you again, Mr. Scott. Are you staying long?" asked the middle aged man, quite unconscious of a dramatic display of indignation behind his back.

"I may stay some time. I'm not quite sure," said Scott cautiously. "And now, Miss Amy, I'm afraid if we don't start at once they'll send out a searching party for us."

When they were outside, she handed him the revolver. "You have the spoons, and you might as well have this, too," she said defiantly. "And if you turn out to be a Raffles sort of person I'm disgraced."

He laughed at her tenderly. "You know you believe in me," he declared, "without any more explanations." And something in his glance struck sparks from hers.

Aunt Anne was watching for him on the guildhall steps. "Chester Scott, where have you been so long with those spoons?" Then, recognizing his companion, she stared helplessly. "Why, Amy Traynor!"

"Miss Traynor and I are going for a little walk," said her nephew, "but we'll be back with good appetites for supper. Here are some spoons which Miss Traynor has kindly loaned."

He handed them over, and the pair moved on. Mrs. Anderson laughed at her friend's bewildered air.

"So that was the attraction," she said.

"I didn't even know that Chester was acquainted with her," sighed Aunt Anne. "I was taking all the credit of his coming to myself."

Mrs. Anderson laughed again. "I guess it's a settled thing all right," she said, "judging from the way he looked at her and the way she blushed at him. Well, I'm glad if Amy Traynor has found somebody to suit her at last. Now perhaps some of the other girls will have a chance."

Old Labor Laws.

Combinations of labor are no new thing. A significant statute was passed during the reign of Edward VI. (1547-53) of England, when "many of the principal citizens of London, having sustained considerable injury from combinations and conspiracies daily concerted by journeymen and laborers, applied to parliament for redress." The statute ordained that "if any artificers, workmen or laborers do conspire, covenant or promise together that they shall not make or do their work but at a certain price or rate, or shall not enterprise or take upon them to finish that work which another hath begun, or shall do but a certain work in a day, or shall not work but at certain times or hours, that every person so conspiring, being thereof convicted by witnesses, confession or otherwise, shall forfeit for the first offense £10 or have twenty days' imprisonment, besides being rendered infamous and incapable of giving evidence upon oath."

SELECTIONS

SMELTING A TOWN.

All Its Houses Built of Bricks of Gold and Silver Ore.

One reads of romantic castles of silver and palaces of gold, but they are the dreams of fiction. Now they have discovered something as strange on the map of Mexico. The buildings of a whole town have been bought at so much a ton, based on assays from the adobe walls, which give gold and silver values. This town is Guanajuato's suburb, Tepetapa, at a value of about $30,000 Mexican currency.

The value of this little town was revealed when the Mexican Central decided to build into the city of Guanajuato and to establish a station there.

It was found necessary to tear down about 300 buildings which had been built of the slimes produced by the grinding of ores from the numerous mines of the district. Straw was mixed with the slime to make the adobe bricks.

When it became known that the Central would have to tear down these houses an enterprising ore buying company asked for permission to assay ore taken from the buildings. This was granted, and samples were picked from the walls at various heights and on various sides of the buildings, the assays running in value from $3 to $24 a ton in gold and silver. The values averaged about $8 gold a ton.

As the buildings were built in various bonanza epochs, it was found that the values varied to a large extent. For instance, a wall on one side of a house would assay a low value, whereas a wall on the other side, built at an earlier or later time, would assay a high value. A man's kitchen might assay 60 cents a ton and his parlor $50.

That the walls are found to contain more gold than silver values is due to the fact that the old patio process of treating the ores was more effective in extracting silver than gold values, and the slimes left were richer in gold than silver. It will be harder to build such a town in the future, as the camp is now fitted out with modern appliances for treating ores.—Mexican Herald.

Swiss Shoemakers.

Swiss shoemakers work ten to twelve hours a day. "The factory workman," says Special Agent Arthur B. Butman in a United States government report, "is required during the summer to begin his labor at 4:30 or 5 a. m. This early hour is demanded in order that the fresh energies of the workers may be obtained by the employer, as nearly all artisans are engaged to a greater or less degree in agriculture for personal benefit. During the winter season work in factories commences at 6 o'clock. Fifteen and twenty minute rests are allowed at 9 and 4 o'clock respectively, when refreshments of beer and bread are taken. From one to one and one-half hours are allowed for dinner. The principal food of Swiss shoemakers consists of bologna, bread and cheese, with beer; fresh meat is seldom eaten unless on feast days; soups are served on Sundays."

Kipling as an Art Critic.

As an after dinner speaker the author of "The Absentminded Beggar" is, even his most ardent admirers will confess, not a success. As an art critic he has pretensions. His friend Baden-Powell thinks himself something of an artist and is an assiduous member of the London Sketch club. "To see him there," says a writer in the Grand Magazine, "struggling with pencil and water colors one would think he cared more for artistic than military renown." Upon one of the gallant soldier's artistic triumphs the novelist has written two verses. One runs as follows:

This is the ocean bright and blue
With the Dunedin Castle plowing through,
But if you turn it upside down
It is the veldt so bright and brown.

The other has been lost to posterity.—Westminster Gazette.

A Nast Cartoon.

Among the people who attended the recent sale in New York of the Thomas Nast cartoons was a man who had called on the cartoonist years ago at his home in Morristown for the purpose of seeing and talking to the artist, for whom he had great admiration. In the course of the pleasant interview the visitor expressed a desire to buy a rough sketch of a cartoon showing Boulanger receiving the result of the French elections in which the general had been defeated. Nast said that he thought too much of it to part with the sketch. When lot No. 135 was put up it was recognized as the coveted cartoon, and the man who could not buy it a few years ago at any price bid $2 and secured the picture.

Manchuria's Wooden Plows.

The large and fertile fields of Manchuria are tilled with wooden plows. The vast number of well made carts that are turned out are constructed with crude tools, laboriously fashioned in the local blacksmith shop, and a day is taken to put in shape iron fittings that an expert machinist with good cold chisel and emery wheel would finish in half an hour. Labor is cheap, but foreign inventions are creeping in.

A Sacred National Hymn.

The national hymn of Mexico is so sacred that on a recent Sunday the archbishop of Guillo was arrested, jailed and fined for having it played in his church. Even at bull fights a permit is necessary before the band can strike up this tune.

A GENIAL DESPOT.

Bonaparte Smiles and Smiles, but Has His Own Way.

Charles J. Bonaparte, the attorney general of the United States, can be the suavest man in all creation. He smiles so sweetly while he talks that people have gone away quite pacified and never realized till after it was all over that he had calmly gone ahead and done precisely what he proposed to do.

To return to that smile. It is so like the poor. No one ever saw Bonaparte who could think of much else. True, the first thing one sees on meeting him is the bullet round head—the Napoleonic head—with its bold forehead, just bald enough to make it yet bolder.

Then one notes the nose, a dominating nose, the full eyes between heavy eyebrows, the short, thick mustache. Then the smile. It starts with the eyes, droops to one corner of the mouth, slips over to the other, then becomes audible in a queer kind of chuckle in the throat, which shakes an increasingly prominent double chin.

The upper chin is very timid and retiring, but there's a dimple in it which works in wonderfully with that smile. But don't flatter yourself and pat yourself on the back and think the attorney general is dead easy. That smile is only a cloak to cover up—you will never know what it covers up till you come away and discover where you are.

He will cut your throat with a feather while he chuckles and smiles. If you are not satisfied with being thus graciously beheaded and answer back, you'll find an adept at sarcasm and irony using a penknife.

If you still rebel, the next you know a backwoodsman will be at you with a brute of an ax. But he will be smiling and chuckling through it all.—World Today.

Where They Eat Muskrats.

One dealer on Dock street sells about 3,000 muskrats a week. These are purchased principally by negroes, who are very fond of the dish, though it is whispered that in season at some of the restaurants muskrat after masquerades as rabbit. It is somewhat similar to the latter in taste, but sweeter, and those who have eaten it pronounce it all right. For this market the rats come already skinned and, when possible, frozen. They are found everywhere in the vicinity of Philadelphia, but a chief source of supply is Salem, N. J., where the catching of them is something of an industry. Whenever they are found they are frozen and kept until the supply on hand is sufficient for a shipment and then dispatched to this city. They are eaten in many small places by people who catch them, but are not sold at retail except in the larger cities.—Philadelphia Record.

How Bees Refuted the Scientists.

Maeterlinck thinks it is a man's vanity which causes him to doubt the proofs of intelligence in flowers and the lesser animal creatures. He relates in Harper's Magazine an incident to prove the intelligence of bees. Two English entomologists declared that they would admit the reasoning faculties of bees when it was proved that bees had ever "had the idea of substituting clay or mortar for wax and propolis." Just at this time another naturalist, Andrew Knight, made a cement of wax and turpentine and with it coated the bark of trees. The bees at once used this new and unknown building material, which they found already prepared, and ceased gathering propolis altogether, thus proving that they not only had a new idea, but acted upon it.

Some High Priced Animals.

A spinster with money to burn recently paid $5,000 for a bulldog. A man in Massachusetts has just bought a cow for $8,000. Walter Garvey has a hog for which he refused a cash offer of $4,000. James Keene refused $200,000 for Sysonby, a race horse. There are several roosters of fashionable blood priced as high as $800 each. You can buy a fine lion for $300, and a tiger for $700. By and by we shall have a craze for breeding fishes, and a fine male salmon educated to pond life might be worth $1,000. The $8,000 cow has one calf a year, worth $4,000. The female salmon may become the mother of 300,000 little fellows in the same time, worth in the aggregate possibly as much as the calf.—Kansas City Journal.

Reversible Cognomen.

When the first lady of the land met the first lord of the land she, with a gracious bow, presented her card, on which was written her name—Eve. Not knowing how she read it—i. e., whether from right to left or from left to right—and desiring to be right in either case, he took his pencil and wrote, "Madam, I'm Adam."

Of course this is old.

There is in New York today, however, a contractor and dealer in glass who when weary from writing his name from left to right can reverse the process without in any way changing the spelling—Leon Noel. — New York Press.

Sewing Up the Heart.

Several years ago when a fight occurred in Chicago one of the combatants received a stab wound in the heart. The first physician to reach the apparently doomed man was Dr. Daniel H. Williams, a negro practitioner, who succeeded in sewing up the man's heart. This was the first time any such operation was ever reported in the history of medicine. At the last account the patient in this remarkable case was still alive. Dr. Williams has since served on the Illinois state board of health.

It's no use fussing about keeping the faith if you cannot keep your friends.

Breaking your mirror does not remove the spots on your face.

I have been six months investigating, and have just returned from a visit of personal investigation to the which, from what I have seen there, and have taken means to verify, will prove a veritable Canadian "Rand," taking its place among the great goldfields of the world, and throwing Cobalt into the shade.

I am a Practical Mining Man

AND DEAL ONLY WITH FACTS

The facts about Larder Lake are contained in my new book, "The Goldfields of Larder Lake," and in my copyrighted map, by far the most detailed and accurate to date.

The above mailed free on request.

CANADIANS! The majority of us were too skeptical and easy-going to inform ourselves concerning Cobalt in the beginning, and saw others step in and reap enormous profits.

Cobalt is only the beginning of mining in New Ontario, the richest mineral field in the world, and there are, and will be, other opportunities as great and greater.

The Larder Lake goldfields are the next in line. Inform yourself at once. Don't wait to see what the other fellow will do, but do it yourself, and do it now. That's the way the man on the ground floor gets there.

Investigate. Get posted. Put yourself in a position to intelligently take ground floor advantage of the tremendous opportunities for profit contained in the northern mining fields.

By means of personal investigation on the ground, the employment of reliable engineers, and the service of employees in the field, I keep my following posted, and they make money.

Thousands will testify to that.

PLIGHT OF THE ACTOR.

Behind the Scenes He is, In a Manner, a Prisoner.

In a way, behind the scenes is a prison. It is surely one of the very few places where intelligent men and women are locked in their place of work and where no message from the outside world is allowed to reach them. There is a tradition that actor folk are of unusually emotional temperament, and if therefore a telegram is received at the stage door it is never delivered until after the performance. The message might be an invitation to supper, or it might announce that the actor's favorite brother has been hanged, or it might be an offer in a stock company to play twelve times a week, or it might tell the actor that he was the father of twins or that his wife would die without seeing him again unless he came at once to her bedside, but all of this information is supposed not to be good for the actor's emotional disposition, and the telegram is therefore given the same distinction as the "mash" note and kept until after the performance is finished. It cannot be said that the actor's emotional disposition is very seriously considered beyond the cast iron rule in regard to telegrams. His comfort and intelligence have been slightly flattered in a few theaters of very recent date, but for the most part the condition of behind the scenes in most playhouses is not calculated to breed particularly high thoughts of any kind. As a matter of fact, he is treated little better than when he was only a "strolling" player—a gypsy—several centuries ago.—Charles Belmont Davis in Outing Magazine.

"PLUG" TOBACCO.

An Old Farmer's Story of How the Name Originated.

In the jury room at the courthouse a few days ago an old time farmer said as he took a chew of tobacco:

"All the difference in the world in tobacco. I've tried twenty different kinds, and none is as good as that we used to make ourselves down on the farm. We would take a maple log while 'twas green and bore a dozen holes in it with a two inch auger. They were our molds. We selected our choicest tobacco and soaked it for a week or more in wild honey. Then we'd take the leaf to the log, get a good hickory tamping stick and go to work.

"A little ball of the honey soaked tobacco would be put in the auger hole and tamped in with the stick and a hammer. We'd pound it in solid. Ball after ball would be rammed in and pounded until the whole became a solid plug. When the hole was nearly full, we would pound in the plug, and then the log would be put away to season. As the wood dried the moisture would be drawn from the tobacco. And when it was split the sweetest tobacco ever made was taken from it. We called it 'plug' tobacco, and that's where the name originated."

Cat Laughter?

What was the origin of the phrase "Enough to make a cat laugh?" Dr. Murray's Dictionary notices only "Enough to make a cat speak," which is explained as signifying something extraordinary, especially something very good to drink. "Old liquor able to make a cat speak" is quoted from an early eighteenth century source, and therewith Stephano's remark to Caliban is compared, "Open your mouth; here is that which will give language to you, cat." Miss Squeers' maidservant said that only to see Miss Squeers' friend, Miss Price, toss her head was "enough to make a tomcat talk French grammar." But even that is not exactly laughing. Has it anything to do with the mythical Cheshire animal?—London Chronicle.

Dress In Old Massachusetts.

There was an ancient law in Massachusetts that ladies' dresses should be made long enough to hide their shoe buckles. In 1660 an act of the general court prohibited short sleeves and required garments to be lengthened so as to cover the arms to the wrists and gowns to the shoe buckles; "immoderate great breeches, knots of ribbon, broad shoulder bands, and they be, silk roses, double ruffs and cuffs" were forbidden. In the same colony, in 1653, I. Fairbanks was tried for wearing great boots, but was acquitted.

The Early Worm.

Entertaining a children's party at a certain millionaire's house in New York, a woman professional teller of stories to juveniles happened to employ the old proverb, "The early bird catches the worm." A little boy questioned the proverb promptly. "But wasn't the worm foolish," he asked, "to get up early and be caught?" "My dear," said the story teller, "that worm hadn't been to bed at all. He was just getting home."

Girl Friends.

Five Indispensable Drugs.

"You need five drugs," said a foolish physician to a patient—"water, food, air, sleep and exercise." But the patient sought another doctor, and the foolish physician died poor.

Turn your sorrows outward into currents of sympathy and deeds of kindness, and they will become a stream of blessings.—Cuyler.

AN ARGUMENT OF FORCE.

Napoleon Smashed a Vase, and the Treaty Was Signed.

Early in April, 1797, the people of Austria demanded peace with France. Negotiations were begun in the vicinity of Leoben. Bonaparte, in an interview with the Austrian plenipotentiaries, said to them, "Your government has sent against me four armies without generals, and this time a general without an army." In the treaty which the Austrian commissioners projected the first article stipulated that the emperor of Austria thereby recognized the French republic. "Erase it!" exclaimed Napoleon. "The existence of the republic is as plain as the sun. This article is only fit for the blind. We are our own masters and shall establish any government we prefer. If one day the French people," he continued, "should wish to create a monarchy, the emperor might object that he had recognized a republic." The preliminaries were soon settled, Napoleon signing for France, thus placing himself on an equal footing with the emperor of Austria. The formal treaty known as Campo Formio was signed in October, 1797, Austria fulfilling the pledges she had already given. The Austrian plenipotentiary protested against the distribution of the provinces beyond the Adige. Napoleon was angered at this, and, seizing a vase, dashed it to the ground, exclaiming, "If it is not so arranged I will break your monarchy as I have broken this vase!" This argument of force, as demonstrated to the diplomat was convincing, and the treaty was signed.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION.

Don't Develop the Mind at the Expense of the Body.

The man or woman who would train the mental faculties without any reference to the physical shows a faulty qualification for the work in which he or she may be engaged. The mind may be ever so well trained and stored with knowledge of the books, but unless there is behind it a reasonably strong body life runs the risk of being a failure; if not that, an existence of pain that serves as a limitation upon its possibilities. It is a species of cruelty to educate the mind at the expense of the body. Better let a child grow up into manhood or womanhood with an inferior education than with a better education of the mind and a body weakened in the effort.

The fact that so many men in this country who have succeeded in business and in professional and public life have been the sons of farmers, whose early life has been spent out of doors, has been a subject of remark. May it not be accounted for on the ground that in their boyhood their physique was developed so that in after life, besides their mental acquirements, they had strong bodies with which to do the work they have so successfully performed? This is not only possible, but very probable.

A Stolen Trade Secret.

The manufacture of tinware in England originated in a stolen secret. Few readers need to be informed that tinware is simply thin sheet iron plated with tin by being dipped into the molten metal. In theory it is an easy matter to clean the surface of iron. Dip the iron in a bath of boiling tin and remove it enveloped in the silvery metal to a place of cooling. In practice, however, the process is one of the most difficult of arts. It was discovered in Holland and guarded from publicity with the utmost vigilance for nearly half a century. England tried to discover the secret in vain until James Sherman, a Cornish miner, crossed the channel, insinuated himself surreptitiously into a tin plate manufactory, made himself master of the secret and brought it home.

Women and Jewelry.

"Women know a great deal more about buying jewelry now than they knew twenty-five years ago," said a jeweler. "When I first started in the business a clerk with a persuasive tongue could talk a woman into buying most anything. It wasn't safe for her to step inside a shop unless she had a man along. Now the average woman knows more about jewels than the average man. Of course they can be fooled—anybody can but an expert—but as a rule she buys with a surprising knowledge of value, and her taste in the cutting and setting is excellent."

Brains.

"A man stood on his head twenty minutes in order to win a wager. He died the next day."

"What killed him? Congestion of the brain?"

"No; if he had had any brains he wouldn't have done it."

Specified.

"When in trouble," said the eminent lecturer, "refrain from worrying."

"But, doctor," asked a woman in the audience, "how can we?"

"Anyway," replied the lecturer, "refrain from worrying other people."

Worse Still.

She—You'll be glad to learn, dear, that I've got out of visiting our relatives. He—Grand! Splendid! It hung over me like a cloud. How did you manage it? She—Oh, I asked them here!—Life.

Meeting the Situation.

"I wonder if there's anything serious between that tall girl and the little captain?"

"I think there is. She has had the heels of all her shoes lowered."—Fliegende Blatter.

The... Camera Hunt

BY HONORE WILLSIE.

Copyright, 1907, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

Penelope took a long breath and started on after her brother and his wife, who were chatting with the guide. After the rough climbing of the morning the little plateau seemed heavenly. But even this respite did not ease Penelope's sense of irritation.

Arthur's and Alice's fad had seemed so amusing at first that she had readily accepted their invitation to join them. To hunt the wild game of the Rockies with a camera was unique enough to be interesting, but the hunt of the long tailed deer, so high among the peaks that rapid work was misery, had been very bad. The three days' chase for a snap at the black wolf had been worse, and it ended in failure. But this chase for a mountain sheep was trying Penelope beyond endurance.

"It's easy for Alice," thought poor Penelope, digging her staff viciously into a crevice. "She's like a bundle of steel wires. She loves to get up before daylight and crawl half a mile on her hands and knees to wait at a spring for some silly beast to come for a drink. But I'm just worn out. Alice! Arthur!"

The three enthusiasts ahead turned back. "You three leave me here in the shade of this rock and come back for me when you are finished. I am worn out."

Arthur looked at Penelope in dismay. "But don't you want to see a mountain sheep?" he coaxed. "Since the black tailed deer were in the river bottom this morning the sheep are sure to be up here. Just think, Penelope, one of those curious, rare mountain sheep!"

But even this vision failed to move his sister. She shook her head. Alice gave a resigned little sigh.

"I'll stay with you, Penelope," she said.

"No, you won't," said Arthur hastily. "It's not safe. Two women are no better than one here."

Here the guide interposed. He had been with them but a day, but already, besides being their guide, he was their counselor and friend. He was too well bred to be treated otherwise. Penelope looked at the stalwart, heavily bearded fellow in a troubled way. His resemblance to Dick in spite of the beard was startling.

"Now, I tell you, Mr. Seymore," he said, "you know as much about this business as I do, and you tell me you have been up this trail half a dozen times before. Why can't I stay here with your sister, fix up camp for the night and let Mr. and Mrs. Seymore go on and locate the sheep?"

"Good, good!" exclaimed Seymore.

Mrs. Seymore looked a little dubious, but Penelope spoke eagerly. Here was a chance for an hour or two of rest that was not to be foregone.

"It will only be a couple of hours," she said pleadingly. "You will be back before dark, and I am so tired, and," she added artfully, "you may miss your only chance at the mountain sheep."

"Come on, Arthur," said Mrs. Seymore, and the two started off up the mountain.

The little plateau on which the colloquy had taken place was smooth and wide, with a little spring trickling out of the great wall of the mountain. Penelope sat quietly watching the distant peaks in the afternoon light while the guide set about his preparation for the night's camp, watching Penelope surreptitiously the while. Very lovely was the sunlight on the masses of her hair, the quick glow of color in her cheeks, the delight in her eyes as she looked at the distant glory of the canyon walls.

Finally her gaze wandered to the guide as his work brought him close beside her, and again the troubled look came to her eyes.

"Do you know," she said abruptly, "you have a resemblance to some one I used to know that is startling."

The guide straightened himself and looked at her keenly. "Is that so?" he said in his quiet way.

Without knowing why, she added, "It was some one who was very dear to me."

"And now?" said the guide tentatively.

"There is no now," said Penelope, rising and walking toward the edge of the plateau.

The guide watched her anxiously. "Not too near the edge, please," he called.

Penelope did not answer. Far, far below curled the silvery line that was the river, then up and up chaos of color in the rock masses, and silence, silence so intense that, though every sense was keen to catch the brilliancy of the canyon coloring, Penelope stood counting her own heart beats. She leaned over a little to look at the ledge below her.

And then the thing happened—a sudden vertigo, a hoarse cry from behind her, a sense of endless falling, then unconsciousness.

After ages of nothingness she opened her eyes—far above, the sky with a glory of sun and snow, a grandeur of distant peaks and far horizon, then a sense of pain and with it a man's voice calling:

"Penelope! Penelope!" And above the brush grown ledge on which she lay a man's face looked down upon her.

"Here I am! I'm all right!" she called back weakly.

"Will you lie perfectly still while I get the rope?" called the guide. "For heaven's sake, don't move!" And the face disappeared, leaving Penelope alone with the blue above and the far circling of an eagle about the crags.

Then a rope with a carefully adjusted slip noose dangled beside her. "Can you put it over your head and under your arms?" the guide called. "For my sake, Penelope, be careful! And look up at me all the time. Don't look down into the canyon."

Too bruised and shaken to be surprised, Penelope took the noose with trembling fingers and tried to disentangle herself from the brush which had broken her fall. Slowly, inch by inch, with pain at every motion, she raised herself to a sitting position, then little by little adjusted the noose under her arms to the guide's satisfaction.

"Now," he called, "I'm going to lower your staff to you, and you must keep yourself from brushing the wall by means of it as I pull you up."

The fear and misery of that trip back to the plateau Penelope was never to forget. The rope cut into her chest until she would have fainted with the pain had not the difficulty of warding herself from the wall with her alpenstock forced her to keep her senses alert. Now, with a quick jerk, she was pulled upward for a few feet; then a pause, while the rope twisted her dizzily, with now a view of the serenity of the opposite canyon wall in the afternoon sun; now the yellow dampness of stone within an inch of her face, then another violent jerk upward.

As she paused within a foot or so of the plateau level she closed her eyes and dropped her staff. Then a pair of arms lifted her slowly, tenderly, and laid her on the ground, then carefully removed the rope.

Penelope opened her eyes. "Dick!" she said hesitatingly. "Dick!"

"Are you hurt?" asked the guide unheedingly. "What shall I do? Shall I go after your sister?"

"I think there are no bones broken," said Penelope weakly. "I am only terribly bruised and shaken. How I am to get down the mountain again I don't know."

"Oh, we can arrange that easily," answered the guide eagerly as he adjusted the steamer rug on which she lay.

Again Penelope's senses dimmed. "You do look so like Dick," she murmured. "Aren't you Dick? Only Dick was not so strong"—

"Tell me about Dick," said the guide, with a hand that trembled so that a cup of water he had brought sprinkled her gown.

Penelope looked at him with puzzled, half delirious eyes. "Dick? Why, Dick was my husband, and after we had our silly quarrel he went to Europe. That was three years ago."

The guide threw aside the cup. "Do you think it was a silly quarrel?" he cried. "Would you forgive Dick?"

"Yes," answered Penelope, "if only I could find him."

The guide stooped and lifted the slender, aching body into his arms. "Here I am, dear," he said. "Here is Dick! It was never Europe, after all. I came here, where I could work and be forgotten."

Penelope looked into his face, forgetting her pain in the wonder of it all. "I must have known it," she said, "in spite of the beard."

Then she closed her eyes on his shoulder. "Sheep hunting is not bad, after all," she said. And Dick held her close.

Needed a Mowing Machine.

He walked about the main thoroughfare of the little town awhile when he discovered one of those familiar red, white and blue globe topped posts. He had sighted his place, and the discovery was confirmed when his eye met the original legend, "Raise 10 cents or whiskers!"

There was but one tonsorial chair, and it was occupied by a stalwart fellow, evidently a blacksmith. Judging from the stubborn growth of beard, the patron could not have shaved but once a week on an average, for the growth was like a scrubbing brush. The barber made a lather, paced all over the countenance of the recumbent blacksmith, stropped the razor vigorously and sailed into his work. After he had struggled long and dangerously over his patron he felt constrained to say:

"Ain't I hurtin' you?"

"No," answered the Plutonian gentleman, still with energy.

"I seem to be workin' hard without gettin' there," commented the village barber further.

"Oh, just go on," encouraged the blacksmith. "You're doin' all right, for them you ain't cuttin' off you're cripplin' so much I guess they'll never grow again!"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Limitations of Fame.

In Professor Knight's reminiscences of Tennyson it is related that on one occasion when the poet laureate was stopping at an inn in the island of Skye the landlord was asked if he knew who had been staying in his house, and on being informed that it was the poet Tennyson, he replied:

"Lor', to think o' that! And, sure, I thocht he was shentleman."

At Stirling some one asked the landlord of the house where the poet was stopping:

"Do you ken who you had wi' you t'other night?"

"Naa, but he was a pleesant shentelman."

"It was Tennyson, the poet."

"And wha may he be?"

"Oh, he is a writer o' verses, sich as ye see i' the papers!"

"Noo, to think o' that! Jeest a poobllc writer, and I gi'ed him ma best bedroom!"

But the charms of Mrs. Tennyson, her gracious manners, did not pass unnoticed, for the landlord said, "Oh, she was an angel!"

MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve. the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

QUEEN ZEPHRA.

The beautiful spectacular extravaganza, Queen Zephra, was last evening presented at the Carman opera house to a large and delighted audience. At the conclusion such expressions as "Wasn't it lovely," the finest amateur production ever seen in Belleville, and others were to be heard on every hand. The performance was certainly beyond the expectation of all who witnessed it, and it speaks volumes for the training of Mr. H. J. Booth, under whose management and direction the production was put on, that the large cast were able to go through their parts without a mistake last night after having had only one rehearsal since the previous presentation. There was not the slightest hitch throughout: everything running as smoothly as if those taking part had been rehearsing steadily.

The leading characters took their various parts with comparative ease and naturalness. Mrs. James Grant, as Queen Zephra; Mr. John D. Hayes, as King Decius; Mrs. Charles Wilmot, as Neyera, daughter of the King; Mr. D. A. Cameron, as Prince Juna, the suitor of Neyera; Mr. W. C. Mikel, as Sir Alexis; Mr. Vincent Doyle, as Sir Solon; Mrs. A. P. Allen, as Miss Commodore, and Miss Mollie Vermilyea as Karama, as leaders in the play, scored hits in their respective roles, demonstrating that they were placed in capable hands,

The children who took part in the prologue are deserving of praise for the way in which they performed their parts. The little ones in the "Good Night Dance" went through their work in a most capable and pleasing manner, showing that their training had not been in vain.

The drill of the White Hussars was another number that pleased the audience. The young ladies went through intricate and complex movements with the precision of trained soldiers, and their splendid marching resulted in their drill being performed amid volleys of applause.

The soloists, Mrs. A. P. Allen, Mrs. C. Wilmot, Mrs. Jas. Grant, Miss Henderson, Messrs. J. D. Hayes, V. Doyle and D. A. Cameron did themselves proud, and were heartily applauded.

These who took part in the various dances as detailed, are certainly worthy to be congratulated, as each number was executed with neatness and precision.

The stage effects were simply magnificent, the costumes beautiful and the music sparkling.

The names of those who in any way contributed to the successful carrying out of the performance are herewith appended:

"THE KING OF TRAMPS."

"The Wizard of Oz" and the famous adventures of "The Scare Crow" and "The Merry Tin Woodman" through the wondrous "Land of Nod" are tales familiar to all of us—big and little. Who among us has not followed them in their merry mythical wanderings? "The Scare Crow" and "The Merry Tin Woodman" have been brought to real life in famous stage impersonations that are startlingly real. In "The King of Tramps," which comes to the Carman opera house on Monday evening next, there is a young man, Mr. Clyde Long, whose stage portrayal and character make-up of "The Scarecrow" is said to be a little short of marvellous. Critics pronounce it as being a stage creation beyond comparison, one that must be seen to be appreciated. In scarecrow language he is described as being a person with a "stuffy, tired feeling, at times a little shaky on his pins. Some people take him for a man of straw, but he doesn't care a straw for that, and his wondrous broad smile is a sight to behold." The scarecrow dance, as done by Mr. Long, is one of the hits of the show.

Death Of Mrs. Chapman

A TALENTED LADY, WHO WAS A FORMER RESIDENT OF THIS CITY, PASSES AWAY.

The daily Standard, published at St. Catharines, in its issue of Saturday last, had the following to say in reference to the death of a lady who was for some time a resident of this city:

The hand of death removed one of St. Catharines' most highly respected citizens on Friday in the person of Mrs. Elizabeth Clarkson Chapman, beloved wife of Mr. R. H. G. Chapman, Queen street. Mrs. Chapman had been in a very critical condition for the last two years, and although her death was not altogether unexpected, yet the end came with startling suddenness. The deceased lady was well-known in literary circles, having from time to time contributed articles to the leading magazines and newspapers. She was a poet of no little promise, having written a number of well-known poems. Mrs. Chapman, while in her normal health, was an enthusiastic church worker, and although latterly she could take no active interest in the work, her heart was still in the work. She was a staunch adherent to the Anglican faith. Besides a sorrowing husband to mourn her loss she leaves two daughters, Mrs. Campbell, Toronto, and Miss Geneva Chapman.

HOUSEKEEPERS who are wise will not be persuaded into purchasing the unreliable baking powders which some dealers wish to sell for the sake of the additional profit derived therefrom. Crudely mixed from low-grade, impure ingredients, such powders cost but half as much to make as the highly refined, absolutely pure Royal Baking Powder, although retailed at the same price. They are unwholesome and lacking in leavening strength.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER gives the greatest value for its cost, and there is no other baking powder or leavening preparation that will give such satisfaction, or make such pure, wholesome and delicious food, or which in practical use will be found so economical.

JURY FIND TRUE BILL

Against Mrs. Perkins in the Canfield Murder Case.

Missing Witness Located—Dr. Edgar of Hamilton Withdraws—Accused Says She Is Certainly Ready For Trial—Witness Expected to Prove Intention to Poison—Opening Spat Between Two Lawyers—The Jury.

Cayuga, April 18.—After a lengthy deliberation the grand jury of the Haldimand assizes yesterday brought in a true bill against Mattie Perkins on the charge of poisoning her husband.

Since the preliminary trial the crown officers have strengthened their case very materially. Now witnesses will be asked to show that Mrs. Perkins has enquired for strychnine and warned the person not to let her husband know of her enquiry; that a box containing strychnine was found in a drawer in the kitchen; and that a guilty liason existed between Mrs. Perkins and Thomas McDonald.

There was an unexpected sensation, however, when it was announced that Dr. J. W. Edgar of Hamilton would be a witness for the defence.

Early Tuesday morning Dr. Edgar, who, it has been understood all along, was to be a leading medical witness for the crown, was told by Mr. Arnoldi that his services, as crown witness, were no longer required.

MRS. MATTIE PERKINS.

Dr. Edgar then left for Hamilton. Yesterday morning he was subpoenaed for the defence and returned to Cayuga.

A True Bill.

It was not until 11.30 that the grand jury brought in a true bill. The prisoner replied to the charge in clear steady voice. Asked if she was ready to proceed she replied, "I certainly am."

Mr. Johnston asked that she be allowed to leave the box, and have a seat at the solicitor's table, which was permitted. Mr. Johnston made an application for the production of certain documents in the possession of the crown. His lordship deferred a ruling. Both sides freely challenged, the jury panel being nearly exhausted.

At the afternoon court Mr. Arnoldi outlined the case as of the very gravest character. Poison was one most abominable mode of destroying human life.

"I am not here to convict Mattie Perkins, but to bring out any evidence which might show that the accused woman was guilty of the charge," he said. The jury must erase from their memory all knowledge of the case which had appeared in the public press.

The prisoner and her husband had lived together apparently happily for fifteen years. Prior to Perkins decease his parents came to live with them on the farm. Later they moved to Canfield, where deceased died. Witnesses would show that Perkins was of a cheerful disposition and always in good health until he returned home shortly before Christmas. The prisoner had insisted on burial on Thursday, although cards had been printed for burial on Friday. The doctor who gave a certificate of death from ulceration of the stomach, did so, he would say, because the prisoner objected to a postmortem.

The analyst would say that he examined portions of the body and discovered strychnine.

It would be shown that the prisoner had visited a lady friend, a Mrs. Carter, at Walkerville, last September. She had asked Mrs. Carter where she could get some strychnine. Mrs. Carter said that she could not get it without a doctor's prescription. Prisoner asked Mrs. Carter to allow her little girl to get a doctor's prescription, but Mrs. Carter refused, saying that if prisoner wanted strychnine she could get all she wanted in Detroit herself.

Prisoner said she knew that, and, most significantly of all, said, in leaving: "Don't tell Henry anything I said about strychnine. If he knew I had any in the house it would make him mad."

After her arrest, in one of the drawers in her kitchen bureau, where she kept the knives and forks, was found a little wooden box, which Dr. Ellis would tell the jury contained strychnine. In addition to this, on one of her dressmaking books, was found written the word "Ptomaine," as if she had been reading a book about poison.

The Motive.

Motives for the crime would be shown in an infatuation she had conceived for a man named Thomas McDonald, with whom she had had scandalous relations during her husband's absence.

Counsel Clash.

Mr. Johnston gave witness a warm time, and when Mr. Arnoldi, K. C., came to his rescue, an exciting scene ensued. Mr. Johnston accused Mr. Arnoldi of making a statement which was absolutely untrue. Both counsel addressed the judge together.

"I don't propose to be bullied out of my rights," said Mr. Arnoldi.

"My learned friend is an adept at using expressions of this kind, and I don't propose to permit him here." His lordship sustained Mr. Johnston.

The court did not rise until 7 p.m.

The jury is composed of George R. Gorrell, Charles Hendershott, Henry Marshall, Robert Wren, John C. Hewitt, James Lindsay, jr., George V. Parsons, Charles E. Best, Silas Avery, Adam Smith, Francis C. Smith, Robert Cranston.

The defence will call Dr. Graham Chambers, Toronto; Dr. Walker, Toront, and Dr. Cayler, Toronto Junction, to combat the evidence of the medical advisors for the crown.

True Bill Against Asselin.

Quebec, April 18.—The grand jury reported a true bill in the matter of Oliver Asselin, editor of Le Nationaliste, accused of having published a libelous article against Hon. J. Prevost, Minister of Colonization.

SCHOOL BOOK ISSUES

Government Puts An End to the Existence of Monopoly.

All Publishers May Now Compete—Better Quality and Less Cost Will Be Result—Copyright Vested In Minister of Education—Street Railway Taxes—Student Voters—Damages For Injuries to Workmen.

Toronto, April 18.—The Provincial Government sounded the death knell of the school book monopoly in the Legislature yesterday. By an enactment introduced by Hon. Mr. Foy the property of the readers henceforth rests unreservedly in the Government and all publishers are entitled to issue the books on the consent of the Education Department.

The House again sat till after midnight and two divisions were taken and several motions dealt with on statement of division. The Government majorities in the two divisions were 34 and 29 respectively.

Public School Readers.

While the Statute Law amendment act was under consideration, Hon. Mr. Foy introduced an important clause affecting the Public School readers. Under this clause, which is the result of the expiration of the contract with the firms of Gage & Co., Copp Clark Co. and Canada Publishing Co., the right is granted—subject to permission from the Minister of Education—to other publishers to issue readers. The rights for the books will rest unreservedly in the Minister of Education.

"This action is also advisable," was Mr. Foy's significant comment, "in order that the Department of Education may take over the publication of the readers themselves, if deemed advisable in the future."

Mr. Graham asked if this applied to other school books beside readers.

Mr. Foy said not.

Mr. Graham asked how many readers were used.

Hon. Dr. Pyne said he would secure the information. There were about 5,000 Public Schools.

Mr. Graham pointed out that the cost of printing the books would depend on the number used.

Street Railway Evasions.

Hon. Mr. Matheson introduced an amendment to the supplementary revenue act by which the attempted evasions of certain street railways will be dealt with. It sets forth that the tax of $10 per mile was for single tracks. When there were double tracks the tax was double per mile.

An amendment by Hon. Mr. Hanna granted London the right to erect an isolation hospital on a site approved by the Provincial Board of Health.

A discussion followed the introduction of the clause respecting the student vote in Mr. Foy's bill to amend and consolidate the Manhood Suffrage Registration Act.

Mr. Pense argued that the student vote should be registered at the city where the students were attending college as many were not financially able to return home to vote. Mr. Hoyle thought if the matter were left open there might be danger of double voting and the clause passed.

Cobalt Lake Property.

Hon. Mr. Foy's bill respecting Cobalt Lake and Kerr Lake was opposed by Mr. Smith (Soo) and Hon. Mr. MacKay. Mr. Smith claimed that one, H. R. Dreany, had made and recorded a legitimate discovery ere the withdrawal of Cobalt Lake under order-in-council and moved that he should be granted the right to bring action against the purchasers. Mr. MacKay instanced the case of the Florence Mining Co. who were under the bill put out of court in their pending action.

Hon. Mr. Foy said the purchasers bought on tender, paid their money in good faith and the Government must properly and honorably protect the purchasers in the title. The Minister said the Government had fully investigated the claims and deemed them invalid. Much mining litigation these days, said Mr. Foy, was launched purely to tie up the property and force settlements.

Mr. Smith's amendment was lost and the bill was adopted.

On resuming, on the motion for the third reading, Hon. Mr. MacKay moved a six months' hoist upon which the House divided.

The result was a straight party division of 13 to 47, Mr. Studholme voting with the minority.

Mr. McDougal (Ottawa) then moved a second amendment permitting litigation to go on, the Government to recompense any successful litigant to the full amount of his claim. This was lost on the same division.

Compensation to Workmen.

Mr. Downey in an earnest address moved the second reading of his bill to amend the law with respect to compensation to workmen by which employers are made liable for damages for injuries to working men received in the ordinary course of his work and not on account of his own negligence.

Having gone into committee of supply Mr. Pense (Kingston) made a plea for increased grants to hospitals.

Hon. Mr. Hanna at length explained the expenditure of $10,000 for changes to the Toronto Asylum. The building was in a bad state of repair and the equipment was defective. The land had been valued at $200,000. The asylum would have to be moved from its present site. A new asylum near the city was one of the courses open. This would assist the education of the medical profession in the treatment of mental diseases. A hospital for the acute insane in the city was proposed and curable cases would be treated there, only chronic cases being removed to the asylum.

Prison Labor.

Mr. Studholme, after an extended address, moved that the House regretted and condemned the Government course in reference to prison labor. Mr. May (Ottawa) seconded and the motion was declared lost on division.

On the third reading of the bill to amend the university act Hon. Mr. MacKay and Mr. Tudhope presented a resolution providing that all orders from the Board of Governors on the $2,000,000 apportioned must be presented to the Legislature for ratification.

Replying the Prime Minister maintained that the threatened ruin of Toronto University under the old Government was due to the Government and Legislature dabbling in its affairs. The special commission appointed by this Government to enquire into conditions, composed of men of both parties, had found in favor of the present plan.

Mr. Graham supported the resolution. He thought the people's representatives ought to be consulted.

Mr. MacKay reiterated the statement that the Board of Governors sat behind closed doors and spent approximately $400,000 per annum of the people's money. He called for the letting in of the light.

Mr. Studholme announced that he was voting with the Government on this matter.

Mr. Duncan C. Ross as another graduate of Toronto University endorsed Mr. MacKay's position.

The division was taken at midnight, the amendment being lost by 13 to 47.

NO NEED TO HURRY.

Mr. Fielding's Intimation re. Insurance Legislation.

Ottawa, April 18.—On the motion to go into supply in the House yesterday, Mr. Lennox moved in amendment, "that this House regrets that the Royal Commission on Insurance did not confine its investigation within the reasonable scope of its power, conferred upon it for the purpose of its enquiry; that by its action in conducting unnecessary and irrevelant enquiries into private and personal affairs, with which it was in no wise concerned, coupled with its partial and discriminating treatment, its arbitrary and un-British procedure, its concealment and misrepresentation of material facts, in the summary issued in its report, the Commission has lent itself to improper and reprehensible partisan poses, been guilty of gross injustice to companies and individuals and materially lessened the confidence which otherwise would have been felt in its legitimate work.

Mr. Lennox complained that the enquiry had been one-sided.

Mr. Fielding intimated that there was no need for haste in drafting a new Insurance Act. The companies were not asking for any additional legislation.

Col. Sam Hughes defended the Western Land deal. He claimed that Fowler and Pope had paid the retail price for land.

The Lennox amendment was defeated; 51 yeas, 92 nays.

Coal Miners Strike.

Ottawa, April 18.—Mr. McCarthy (Calgary) drew attention to the miners' trouble in the West.

Mr. Lemieux said there had been some disagreement between the operators and the miners in one of the mines as to the choice of a representative on the board of arbitration, but that the misundersanding was likely to be closed up and an end put to the unfortunate situation which existed.

Fire In Homestead Mine.

Deadwood, S. D., April 18.—The fire in the Homestead Mine, which has been raging for two weeks, was reported Tuesday as being beyond control. The rock surrounding the flame is now so hot that it is almost impossible for men to get near enough to fight the fire.

Cables Steady—Hogs Are Lower at Chicago.

LONDON, April 18.—Liverpool and London cables are steady at 11½c to 12¾c per lb., dressed weight; refrigerator beef is quoted at 9c to 9¾c per lb.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, April 18.—Receipts of live stock since Tuesday, as reported by the railways, were 134 car loads, composed of 2419 cattle, 1388 hogs, 120 sheep, 219 calves and 1 horse.

Exporters.

Not many shipping cattle were offered and not many were wanted owing to a scarcity of shipping space. Prices were reported as ranging from $5 to $5.25 per cwt. for loads; a few odd lots of two and three cattle each, as selling at a little more money. There were some few lots on sale that cost $5.50 in the country. Bulls sold from $4 to $4.25 per cwt.

Butchers.

Owing to heavy receipts of butchers' cattle, there was an easier feeling, which caused the market to be a little draggy. George Rountree, who bought the cattle for the Harris Abattoir on Wednesday and Thursday, quotes prices as follows: Best loads of butchers', $4.70 to $5.10; fair to good mixed loads, $4.40 to $4.70; good cows, $4 to $4.50; medium cows, $3 to $3.70; bulls, $3.50 to $4.25 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

H. Murby reports considerable business in this line this week, especially for the good quality steers, weighing from 800 to 1050 lbs. The lighter kinds weren't in much demand and sold off.

Mr. Murby bought about 400 head this week at the following prices: Best short-keeps, 1100 to 1200 lbs., $4.75 to $4.90; best feeders, 1000 to 1100 lbs., $4.50 to $4.75; best feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., $4 to $4.15; best stockers, 700 to 800 lbs., $3.60 to $4; best stockers, 400 to 600 lbs., $3.25 to $3.50; common stockers from $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

There was a better demand for milkers and springers, owing to one or two dealers being on the market from Montreal. Prices ranged all the way from $30 to $55 each. It was reported that one or two cows had been sold at $60, but we were not able to confirm these sales.

Veal Calves.

The market for veal calves remains about steady at $3 to $6.50 per cwt. for veal calves, altho two or three prime new milk-fed calves reached $7 per cwt. during the week.

Sheep and Lambs.

The run was light and prices were firm. Export ewes sold at $5.50 to $6 per cwt.; bucks, $4.50 to $5; yearling lambs of good quality sold at $7 to $8 per cwt.; common yearlings, $5 to $6 per cwt.; spring lambs, $4.50 to $7 per cwt.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris reports market easy at $6.40 for selects, and $6.15 for lights and fats, with prospects for lower quotations.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, April 18.—Cattle, receipts 100 head; steady; prices, unchanged. Veals, receipts 330 head; active and steady; $4.25 to $7.75. Hogs, receipts, 3300 head; fairly active and a shade lower: heavy, $7.05 to $7.15; mixed and yorkers, $7.15 to $7.20; pigs, $7.10 to $7.15. Sheep and lambs, receipts, 3243; market nominal; feeling dull but steady on Buffalo advices. Hogs, receipts, 1891; steady; good medium New York State hogs sold at $7.40.

Victims To the Flames.

Three Dead and Nine Injured In Fire At Montreal.

Many Women Had Narrow Escape--Laundry Set Ablaze--Spread With Awful Rapidity--Fire Engines Could Render Little Service--Ambulances Do Good Work--Women Leaped From the Windows.

Montreal, April 19.—Three dead and nine injured, several of them severely, is the result of the latest conflagration in this city.

At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon fire broke out in the second storey of the three-storey brick building on St. Justin street, just below St. Catharine, and occupied by the Canada Laundry and Dye Works.

The fire spread with such fearful rapidity that for a few moments it seemed as though a score of lives would be lost, but by a rear stairway a number of the girls were enabled to make their escape.

The casualties are:

Dead.

William Martineau.
Jane Furlong.
Mrs. P. Giroux.

Injured.

Miss Albertine Paradis, 38 years, arm fractured and face burned.

Miss Victoria Daigle, 39 years, ankle fractured.

Miss Jeanette Bonenfant, 35 years, face burned and back injured.

Miss Emma Etienne, badly burned.

Miss Bertha McMercher, face burned and arm fractured.

Mrs. Georgina Lavigne, hand fractured.

Miss Marie Rodger, slightly injured.

Jumped For Their Life.

There were nearly fifty people in the place when the fire started. All the injured met their injuries by jumping for the life net.

The fire started in the cleaning-room, being caused by benzine, which was used in one of the machines, catching fire. In a few minutes the whole place was in flames. A panic ensued amongst the hands, who all rushed to try and escape, but their escape was cut off by the dense smoke.

The man Martineau and the woman Furlong were overcome by smoke and their dead bodies were afterwards found in one of the windows. Mrs. Giroux received her injuries in jumping.

A general alarm was sent to all the hospitals and five ambulances were soon on the scene, the cry that 25 lives had been lost spreading through the city even as quickly as the fire through the building.

Complete Destruction.

There were three alarms all sent in to the fire department, but even though excellent work was done, there was absolutely no chance at any stage of the conflagration to prevent a complete destruction.

There were thirty girls and ten men employed and the majority of the girls lived in the immediate neighborhood of the laundry. As a result of this scores of relatives hastened to the scene, pushing their way madly through the immense crowd that had gathered, and crying for the safety of their loved ones.

It is estimated that the loss by the burning of the building itself will amount to about $20,000 and possibly $10,000 to $15,000 for machinery.

TRY TO KILL PASTOR.

Faction of Church Explodes Dynamite Under Parsonage Porch.

Hazleton, Pa., April 19.—An attempt was made yesterday to kill Rev. Matthew Yankola, pastor of St. Joseph's Slavonic Church here, with dynamite.

A heavy charge of the explosive was placed under the entrance to the parsonage, and tore out a portion of the porch, shattered all the windows in the house and splintered the front door.

There have been factional troubles in the church for some time. One faction has asked for the removal of the pastor, but without success.

Several weeks ago Father Yankola received a letter from the Black Hand, threatening him with death unless he left the city.

HIS FATAL BEAUTY.

Resemblance to Another Man Leads to Persian Official's Injury.

Baku, Russia, April 19.—Mirza Abbas Khan, chief engineer of the Persian ministry of way and communications, was shot and seriously wounded in the street here Wednesday night. Four shots from cover were fired at him, and two of them were effective in his abdomen and side.

The Khan bears a close personal resemblance to the ex-Persian grand vizier, Amin Sultan, whom the Shah summoned from Paris to assist in combatting the revolutionary movement in Persia, and it is thought that the assassins were revolutionary emissaries.

Must Sign Articles.

Ottawa, April 19.—In the public interest the Department of Marine and Fisheries has decided to enforce strictly, on and after the 1st of June next, the provisions of the law requiring the master of every ship subject thereto on the inland waters of Canada to sign articles with every seaman whom he carries as one of his crew. The penalty for carrying a seaman who has not signed these articles is a fine not exceeding $20 for each offence.

Bennings Loser Suicides.

New York, April 19.—A well-dressed man, about 30 years old, who registered as "J. Ryckman, Boston, Mass.," Wednesday night, was found dead yesterday in the Broadway Central Hotel, with a bullet hole in his head.

In a letter addressed to "My Darling Antoinette," he said he had lost his last $100 at Bennings and was "going to heaven."

FREE POSTAL DELIVERY.

For Places Over 10,000—Little Hope For the Farmers.

Ottawa, April 19.—Mr. Fielding and Mr. Lemieux clashed yesterday morning, but the latter had his way and the evidence taken by the insurance commission will be printed in French.

Mr. Lemieux in reply to Mr. Armstrong gave no encouragement to any hope for the rural postal delivery system. On his recent trip to Washington he found officials considering restricting, rather than extening, the system, he said. The supplementary estimates would contain provision for the extension of free delivery to cities and towns in Canada where population exceeded 10,000.

Hon. Mr. Lemieux said the whole question of civil service salaries would be reviewed in a few days. As to the postmasters, half of them did not produce more revenue than their salaries.

Mr. Fielding yesterday afternoon presented his resolution to advance money to the extent of three million dollars to the Montreal harbor commissioners upon debentures.

At the evening session Mr. Gervais urged that Montreal be made a truly national port. The harbor had a wharfage 38 miles long, many things were needed, especially facilities for loading and unloading, and Parliament should appropriate money for electric cranes. He also urged the building of a dry dock and floating elevators.

There was some discussion re W. T. R. Preston. Mr. Fielding said he had done nothing to justify his dismissal from the public service.

The mail service to North Sydney is hereafter to be a permanent feature.

No change is contemplated respecting Chinese immigration.

KING EDWARD IN ITALY.

Pays Visit to Victor Emmanuel and Gets Warm Reception.

Gaeta, Italy, April 19.—The British royal yacht, Victoria and Albert, with King Edward and Queen Alexandra on board, arrived here at about 9.30 o'clock yesterday morning, from Malta, escorted by the British armored cruisers Suffolk and Lancaster.

King Edward was received by King Victor Emmanuel, who was on board the Italian royal yacht Trinacria, surrounded by 12 Italian warships and 12 torpedo boats. The usual salutes were exchanged and hearty cheers greeted the British King from the people on shore and the sailors on board the warships.

The two Kings embraced each other repeatedly when they met on board the Trinacria and King Victor Emmanuel kissed Queen Alexandra's hand.

The Mayor of Gaeta sent Her Majesty a bouquet of orchids and roses, with a card bearing the words, "Devotion and admiration to the most powerful Queen in the world." A lunch on board the Trinacria followed. It was mainly attended by military and naval officers.

A crowd of English women who were permitted to witness King Edward's arrival from the high bastions of the fort, gave vent to their patriotism by singing "God Save the King," which was acknowledged by the British royal yacht dipping her ensign.

TIMELY TOPICS.

In the realm of Queen Zephra, it would appear the motto is not always "an even break for everybody," at least if all the talk we hear about tickets is true.

But why, in the name of goodness didn't the good fairy fix things so that everybody could be satisfied?

• • •

Nineteen days of April gone. The weather man April fooled us on the first day and he has been at it ever since.

• • •

Earthquakes have been common all over the world lately, in very many places where they are not needed. Some people, however, think an earthquake in Belleville would have been a jolly good thing. It might have helped that old house to get to its destination.

• • •

Twelve days to May day, and if the weather keeps like this, the Board of Education and the rest of the boys and girls can imagine they are dancing around the north pole instead of a May pole.

• • •

The more we think about this weather, the more we believe Easter should have been postponed until June or July. Just imagine wearing your new Easter bonnet with snowflakes as big as silver dollars flying.

• • •

They say that some estimable Belleville people may change their addresses as a result of the recent flurry in stocks, which reminds us that the bucket that goes too often to the bucket shop generally gets broke.

However, there was plenty of harmony in the choruses of Queen Zephra, even if it was a little shy among the people who bought tickets.

The Travelling Men's protective Association is up in arms for individual towels in place of roller towels in the country hotels. The roller towel was pretty bad, but what about the comb and brush the country hotel-keepers chain up to keep them from wandering away. The travelling men should suppress them first.

Two South Dakota cowboys met a minister and decided to have some fun with him, but he thrashed them both and took away their supply of whiskey. What won't a man do for strong drink sometimes?

A candidate for Mayor of Mason City, Ill., has pledged himself to take 50 cents a year for salary if elected, and the candidates for aldermen on his ticket have pledged themselves to take 25 cents. They'll earn their salary the first night they have a discussion about back taxes.

A man in Media, Pa., put up so hard a fight in defence of twenty cents, all the money he had with him, that the highwayman finally ran away. If the man had been fighting for thirty cents they would probably have had to send the undertaker after the foot-pad.

Quite a little bad blood has been aroused in Peterboro over the enforcement of an ancient by-law forbidding over-hanging street signs. The merchants think the City Councillors might be up to better business than annoying them, and the Examiner thus, probably, expresses the popular view:

"Instead of digging up dusty by-laws and using them to annoy our merchants who pay two-thirds of the city taxes, and who pay about the whole of our nearly $400,000 payment of customs duties, who keep the city alive and give it the reputation of having the finest shops in the province. Instead of trifling with matters which in themselves do not amount to a crooked pin, let them put their heads together to look after our streets and see that after spending nearly $20,000 a year on them they are fit for a Rocky Mountain goat to travel over in safety. Nero fiddled while Rome was burning. Our city fathers are fiddling over the resurrection of musty by-laws which might have been allowed to slumber on forever without any interest of any citizen being injured or even imperilled. It doesn't look well for business men to practice child's play. Pursue the substance rather than the shadow."

The above is interesting as showing what might happen in this city if the by-law against over-hanging street signs were enforced, as we have heard people saying it should be enforced.

Kingston is just now worried with a man who assaults ladies on the street, and the fair ones say they will carry revolvers in future.

• • •

The Kingston Whig wants somebody to name fifty righteous men in that city. It might be a hard job. In Belleville here, good as we are you'd hardly find fifty outside of the sky pilots and the man on the next block.

Still the horrors grow. That dreadful affair in Montreal is enough to make one's blood run cold. Surely naughty-seven is going to be a memorable year.

• • •

The Canadian Senate, says a contemporary, should be commended for its decision to preserve provincial rights. After this the promoters of any bill containing those much-abused words, "For the general advantage of Canada," must show that the objects of the bill are really for the general advantage of Canada, and not merely a means of evading provincial control.

Speaking at the college meeting of the Peace conference in Carnegie Hall in New York, Edwin D. Mead, director of the Old South Historical work, stated that Canada and the United States in agreeing in 1815 to keep no armaments on the lakes or on the frontier, had pointed the true way for the reduction of armaments among the nations. If they had kept up their forts and frigates their garrisons and marines, there would probably have been friction a score of times, and there might have been war; without them there has been peace, security and mutual respect. It pays for nations, as well as men, to act like gentlemen instead of like boys.

Lord Aberdeen is said to contemplate retiring from the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland. Various reasons are assigned, but in all probability the real reason is that he is not adapted for the position, or any similar one. He was not at all a success as Governor-General in Canada, where he was distinguished more as the husband of Lady Aberdeen than anything else, says the Brockville Times.

BAIR NATURALLY ABUNDANT.

When it is Free of Dandruff, It Grows Luxuriantly.

Hair preparations and dandruff cures, as a rule, are sticky or irritating affairs that do no earthly good. Hair, when not diseased, grows naturally, luxuriantly. Dandruff is the cause of nine-tenths of all hair trouble, and dandruff is caused by a germ. The only way to cure dandruff is to kill the germ; and, so far the only hair preparation that will positively destroy the germ is Newbro's Herpicide — absolutely harmless free from grease, sediment, dye matter or dangerous drugs. It allays itching instantly; makes hair glossy and soft as silk. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect."

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Still Another Ottawa Scandal.

Last week another scandalous case developed in the Dominion Parliament, reiterating the fact that the Government will stop at nothing when the pockets of its henchmen are concerned. The latest is known as the Montalbetti case, and it shows a prominent Liberal worker to have made $200,000 by a trick, the exposure of which naturally threw Hon. Frank Oliver into a violent exhibition of temper. It is probably one of the most flagrant cases yet unearthed.

Some years ago Mr. Henry E. Lyon, brother of George S. Lyon, the Canadian golf champion, settled near the C.P.R. station at Blairmore, in Alberta, and built a little store. Business grew, and the place assumed the proportions of a townsite. Immediately that it was discovered that the location was becoming important, a second and competing application for the land was put in.

The applicant was represented to be an Italian, named Montalbetti, who had been working as a laborer on the railway. Sifton promptly gave the land to Montalbetti in virtue of his application; but Montalbetti never secured an inch of the property. An assignment from that property to one Malcolm Mackenzie, then a leading Liberal in Alberta, and now a member of the Alberta Legislature had been filed in the Department of the Interior, and Mackenzie became the owner of Mr. Lyon's lot, house, store, and, in fact, everything. When Mr. Lyon discovered that he was being driven from his home and his business, he hastened to Ottawa to find out why these things should be. Sifton, who was seen, refused redress. But the late David Mills, who was an honest man, viewed the matter in a sympathetic way, and agreed that Mr. Lyon should have the right to bring the wrong to which he felt he had been subjected before the courts. This Minister of Justice issued a fiat allowing Mr. Lyon to sue in the name of the Crown. The case came before the Exchequer Court at Ottawa, and that tribunal instructed Judge Wetmore, of the Northwest bench, to hear the evidence as referee, and to state an opinion. Judge Wetmore went to the spot and took the testimony. His report states that the supposed declaration of Montalbetti, in virtue of which the land was granted to him, or rather to Mackenzie, was false and fraudulent.

The decision of this judge was that Lyon was the first settler, and was entitled to the land. The report was sent by Judge Wetmore to the Exchequer Court at Ottawa. The Exchequer Court was about to act upon it, when the Crown, that is, the Government, intimated that it had decided to withdraw from Mr. Lyon the right to prosecute! The fiat enabling Mr. Lyon to dispute an Executive act was thereupon cancelled, and the case was out of court. When the Exchequer Court met, Judge Burbidge, who had to dismiss the suit, said, in doing so: "Owing to the action of the Crown, which I can hardly understand, in withdrawing from the case, I am forced to find that Lyon has no legal right to cancel the patent of Mackenzie; but, had the Crown remained in the case, I would find that Mackenzie obtained the land by fraud, and immediately cancel the patent."

CHAMPAGNE DRINKING MADE EASY.

Explaining the greatly increased consumption of champagne in this country, a Fifth avenue hotel proprietor said yesterday: "Many persons who formerly avoided the bubbling wine of France out of fear of a headache or an attack of gout the morning after have learned thoroughly the value of the English custom of drinking Apollinaris at a dinner at which they partake of champagne." He explained that the Apollinaris, with its moderate amount of bi-carbonate of soda, was sufficiently alkaline to remove acidity of the stomach, and, containing its own natural gas, it was additionally pleasant and wholesome. He pointed out that the London Lancet and medical authorities in general asserted that carbonic acid gas was an aid to digestion.

Every locality has its "meanest man," but the man who refuses to support his poor old mother is entitled to the championship.

Should Live 100 Years

SIR JAMES CRICHTON BROWN'S OPINION.

Sir James Crichton Brown, of England, at the Congress of the Royal Institute of Public Health in London, gave a lecture on old age. He states that if every person should live right and take the proper care, to live one hundred years would be a matter of course.

There is no excuse for feebleness at the age of fifty, sixty, or even seventy. If every person there is a constant change taking place in the system, and just so long as the supply equals or exceeds the waste, just so long will old age be warded off.

When one finds their energies flagging, the organs acting slowly and less effectually, the blood sluggish, and in fact "feel old," then there is nothing known to medicine that will restore elasticity to the step, brightness to the eyes, vigor to brain and muscle, and strength to every organ in the body so surely as our real cod liver preparation, Vinol.

Vinol contains in a concentrated form all of the medicinal body-building elements of cod liver oil actually taken from fresh cods' livers, the useless oil eliminated and tonic iron added.

We ask every old person in Belleville to try Vinol on our offer to return money if not satisfied. J. S. McKeown, druggist.

Canadian Dairy Produce In Great Britain

(Montreal Gazette.)

Mr James Alexander, head of James Alexander, Limited, one of the leading butter and cheese exporting houses in the Dominion, who has just returned from a seven weeks' trip to the Old Country, during which he visited all the principal points in the United Kingdom, being asked by The Gazette for his views regarding the dairy produce situation in Great Britain and the prospects for Canadian dairy produce during the coming season, said: "The cheese situation is rotten, if I may use that expressive word, Cheese, as a matter of fact, can be bought in England to-day one cent a pound cheaper than it can in Montreal, with the result that there must be heavy losses somewhere. I should say that from the merchants' standpoint, the majority of the trade will not wear many diamonds from the past season's profits; in fact the jewellers will have to depend on the producers to sell their diamonds. The reason for these conditions is that cheese had been put at such an awkward price that the retailer can barely get cost by cutting, and, therefore, instead of cutting his cheese on the counter, he puts it under the counter, and is not trying to sell except when compelled to do so. In fact every shopkeeper I met in the United Kingdom had the same tale, namely, that he could make no money in cutting cheese, and, therefore, was not trying to sell. While stocks are not large, they are too large for the present consumptive demand and are much larger than is generally supposed."

When asked what the prospects were for Canadian cheese during the coming season, Mr. Alexander said: "We will have to get cheese down to a price that will stimulate consumption and get the people back on to the article again before we have any healthy trade. At present, as a matter of fact, 64s per cwt. is being freely accepted in England for Canadian, and as much of the cheese cost 70s per cwt. with carrying charges included, it will readily be seen what the position is. Then the quantity of New Zealand cheese is about one-third more than last year, and as the quality is very good, it sells close up to Canadian. Conditions, too, during the coming season are likely to be considerably different to those of last season. The demand for canned meats is gradually coming on again, and we cannot hope to have any scare in that respect this season, so that it will readily be understood how important it will be to stimulate consumption of cheese by getting the price down to a reasonable basis."

"What about butter?" Mr. Alexander was asked.

"Canadian butter to export to England to-day," Mr. Alexander replied, "is worth about 18 cents a pound, and I see that it is selling here at over 31 cents. Until we come together there will certainly be no exporting of Canadian butter. It is necessary to realize the present conditions. The whole world is producing more butter, the stock of butter in England is high, and people will naturally protect themselves against any extravagant prices on this side. Danish butter, I may mention, is being retailed throughout England to-day at one shilling a pound, something that has not occurred for years. The supplies are much larger than usual. Australia, Queensland, New Zealand, Siberia, and the Argentina are all supplying butter, and as a result the Canadian article will meet with an active competition."

Accident At Sulphide

While working on a single plank 20 feet above the floor in one of the Nichols Chemical Co. buildings at Sulphide on Tuesday evening about nine o'clock, Joseph Schell a resident of Actinolite, met with a very painful accident, says the Tweed News. In some manner his left hand got caught by one of the air drills and his arm was terribly fractured above the wrist. His brother, fortunately, caught him and saved him from falling. The injured man was hurriedly driven to Tweed where the fractured member was set by Drs. Tuttle and Robertson. The injuries are so serious that it is a matter of some doubt whether it will be possible to save the arm. The unfortunate man is about twenty years of age.

Death Of a Popular Young Man To-day.

Michael S. Callaghan, second son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Callaghan, residing on South George street, died last night. Deceased, who was in his 16th year, had been ailing for time from lung trouble. Michael was an exceptionally clever young man and a general favorite with his companions. Deceased was born in Belleville and had resided here all his life. He was a member of St. Michael's church. The sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends will be extended to the bereaved one in this their hour of trial.

Willie Jones Was Present At Church.

ALTHOUGH HE HAD RATHER UNPLEASANT EXPERIENCE THE NIGHT BEFORE.

In a recent issue of "Ups and Downs," which is published in the interest of the work of Dr. Barnardo in Canada, appears the following:

"Willie Jones, a small boy of the August party, writes us that he likes living in his present home, that he helped kill two skunks on Saturday night, and went to church on Sunday." We hope the other members of the congregation enjoyed it. If it had been a church where they burned incense the combination would have been powerful. As it was, we should not have been surprised to hear that the minister shortened the service that Sunday, or that the deacon in taking up the collection let off the people in Willie's part of the church, if, indeed, any were left there to contribute.

SALES OF "SPIFFS."

The Months When the Shoe Dealer Unloads on the Public.

January and February are the dull months in the shoe trade, and the shoe man waxes his thread and prepares to unload all the unsaleable shoes in his store. Whatever may be the public name of his sale, the trade name is a "sale of spiffs," the kind of shoes the salesman gets a bonus for working off at all months of the year.

While hardly an elegant term, "spiffs" is more expressive than descriptive. It may be a worthless shoe, or a worthy shoe spoiled by some mishap, perhaps a shoe shorn of its leather wear by proximity to fire or water, or mayhap a shoe which was made wrong.

The wise buyer buys in season and from regular stock, and mostly prefers a shoe like the Slater shoe, the price-stamped Slater shoe, on which appears the Slater seal of certainty.

Favors Blood-Letting

Bleeding, once the first, as well as the last, resort, of the doctors seems to be coming into more or less favor again.

"The custom of blood letting," writes an English physician in the Medical Brief, "is passing into a stage of rational and moderate use. Venesection, properly employed, is a most valuable therapeutic agent."

Dr. Perry, who contributed the paper, says that he has tried bleeding most often in cases of acute pneumonia because he looks upon it as a disease in which life may be saved and distress much relieved by a timely blood letting. Acute pneumonia is one of the few diseases in which venesection may be used as a curative agent; that is, as an agent that may directly aid in the restoration of normal health to a patient—and not merely as a palliative, as in chronic cardiac disease.

"When the cardiac muscle is degenerated or diseased," says Dr. Perry, "venesection can only be of value as a temporary remedy. The true value of venesection is here absent. I refer to the tidings of an organically healthy heart over an acute emergency for in such a case lies the real value of blood letting.

"We have all seen a venesection save life for the time being, where a sudden emergency, such as an unusual strain, has caused failure of degenerate heart muscle, but this blood letting can do no permanent good. It might, however, and often would relieve us from the gravity of a sudden and distressing death."

Other diseases in the treatment of which Dr. Perry has experimented with blood letting, are cerebral hemorrhage, heat stroke and nephritis.

Died In Ameliasburg.

Death came suddenly to Mr. P. V. Beech, of Ameliasburg, on Monday of last week, says the Picton Times. On the day of his death Mr. Beech ate dinner and afterwards read and smoked before going to the barn, where he was stricken with paralysis. He was removed to the house, but never regained consciousness, passing away at one o'clock the following morning. Mr. Beech has been prominent in municipal life in Ameliasburg for many years. He was Warden of Prince Edward County in 1901. Mr. Beech was recognized as one of the leading members of the Liberal party in Prince Edward County. Being of a pleasant and genial disposition, he will be much missed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances, whose esteem he won by his integrity and uprightness of character. Besides his wife he leaves two children, Prof. K. Beech, of Albert College, Belleville, and Mrs. Herbert McDonald, of Gilead, to mourn his loss. The funeral took place at the family residence, Lake Side, on Thursday, 11th April. The service was conducted by Rev. J. M. Whyte, of Consecon, assisted by a large number of the Masonic order, who gathered to pay their last tribute of love and respect to their departed brother and friend. The remains were interred at Consecon.

Breaking Records.

Winnipeg, April 16. — Records are daily being broken here in immigration returns, the arrivals of incoming settlers beating all previous figures for any single day. In fact, so great is the rush that never before in the history of the movement to Western Canada has the congestion been so pronounced.

A procession of ten or twelve long trains is just now hurrying across the continent freighted to their capacity with immigrants or home-seekers bound for the West, and six of these trains will reach Winnipeg early tomorrow, bearing some 2,000 people, 1,300 of which are immigrants. It is stated that over 5000 immigrants will reach Winnipeg this week, and a large proportion of them will have to be taken care of by the immigration authorities. The Immigration Department are sending out from two to four hundred men each day to take positions on farms.

THE JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION

The Jamestown Exposition, which opens on April 26th, 1907, promises to be one of the most interesting of the larger expositions which have been held in later years. Its location at Sewall's Point, on the historic Hampton Roads, some nine miles from the City of Norfolk, Virginia, and directly opposite Old Point Comfort, in itself will appeal to many, and the magnificent array of warships that will congregate here from all the countries of the world will attract a tremendous number of people from all parts of the American continent, as well as from abroad. To Canadians who have not had the privilege of visiting the South this event will be the best opportunity that will present itself, and the low transportation rates that are offered will lend an additional attraction.

The only Canadian exhibit at this great Fair will be that of the Grand Trunk Railway System, who have erected a building of their own, in which the resources and attractive features of Canada will be shown, and at which building Canadians will be welcome, and where all information may be obtained. Another feature that is offered is the many different routes that can be taken to this Exposition from Canada, including rail river and ocean journeys. The true hospitality of the Southern people, the historicity that surrounds the locality, and the many things to see and do, should be the means of inducing a large number to go from the north. Grand Trunk Agents will gladly give information as to rates and routes.

BOOKBINDING.

Orders for bookbinding should be left at The Intelligencer Office. It is surprising how attractive and satisfactory a volume can be made of these magazines Books, magazines or periodicals bound or rebound in any style at very reasonable prices. Bank books, such as journals, ledgers, day books with any kind of ruling, made to order.

CUTS
BURNS & BRUISES

Cuts, bruises, burns, scalds and "scrapes" are common occurrences in every home. Busy house-wives, hustling bread-winners, athletic sons and daughters, and frolicsome children, all get their share of these injuries; and the handy box of Zam-Buk will prove useful all round as a speedy cure.

Zam-Buk recommends itself to all thinking people because it is pure, being made from rich healing herbs and free from animal fats and oils. Because it soothes pain, is a powerful germ-killer, and prevents festering and blood poison. It repairs skin injuries and diseases in Nature's own way.

Mr. Geo. Cooper, of Boston (Ont.), says: "We use Zam-Buk on cuts, bruises and scratches, which are so frequently sustained by the children at school and at play, and are highly satisfied with its healing power. We would not like to be without this handy household remedy."

Do You Suffer from Any of These?

Zam-Buk heals all skin diseases—eczema, scaly sores, ulcers, ringworms, poisoned wounds, barber's rash, pustules, face blemishes due to blood poison, rheumatism and neuralgia. It heals cuts and lacerations, stops bleeding, cures piles, eases fistula, reduces enlarged veins. It cures burns and scalds, and it is an excellent "first aid" remedy. It is highly antiseptic. All druggists and stores sell at 50 cents a box, or from ZAM-BUK CO., TORONTO, for price. 6 boxes for $2.50.

HE SUITED HER.

(New York Herald.)

"The man I ever wed," she said,
"Must have accomplishments,
Yes; he must play and sing and dance
And ride and row and fence,
And take a skilful hand at bridge,
A tennis racquet wield,
And chase the bounding golf ball, too,
Across the dewy field."

The man who won her lily hand
Was bald and stout and slow;
He couldn't sing or dance or play,
Or fence or ride or row,
He didn't care a rap for golf,
And never led cotillions;
But he could sign a cheque, you see,
For half a dozen millions.

It is announced that Mr. Hyman has sent another resignation of his seat as member for London. With the experience of his recent failure to guide him, this one should surely be effective. The people of London may, therefore, soon have an opportunity of saying whether or not they prefer to be represented by a man who, in a political crisis owed his return to Parliament to the free distribution among the electors by bribers of $10 bills.

* * *

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has had to come to the aid of the Quebec Bridge Company again, says the Montreal Gazette, which details the following description of the modus operandi, which will be illuminating to Ontario people; On the strength of a stock subscription of about $60,000, Parliament, at the instance of the Prime Minister, voted the company a subsidy of $1,000,000. This, and grants obtained from the province and city of Quebec, was roughly equal to a quarter of the expected cost of the works. It was not enough, however, to enable the owners to float the uncommercial project, and they would not put their own money into it. So in 1903 the arrangement was changed, and the Government undertook to guarantee the bonds of the company to the amount of $6,678,200. Even after thus making the federal treasury responsible, the owners still had trouble, it would seem. Now Parliament is asked by the Government to order that $6,678,200 be taken out of the national treasury and loaned to men who only agreed to put up $100,000 of their own money on compulsion. Quebec's dominant politicians are solid for Laurierism, but the country pays the price.

Cause of His Joy.

"What are you looking so happy over, old man?"

"I am rejoicing over the birth of twins."

"Great Scott! I congratulate you!"

"Don't congratulate me. Go and congratulate Evans. He's the lucky man. I never did like him."

His Attentions.

Nan—How attentive young Mr. Allgawn is to his pretty wife! Fan—I don't wonder you notice it, but you must have been misinformed. They are not married yet.

Only Slight Mistakes.

Mrs. Lombard is a zealous and loyal friend, and she means withal to avoid exaggeration. "It's perfectly wonderful to see the way Cousin Henry counts bills at the bank," she said to a patient friend. "Why, I think they are so lucky to have him! He'll take a great pile of five and ten and twenty dollar bills and make his fingers fly just like lightning and never make a mistake!"

"Never?" said the friend, who knew Mrs. Lombard's weakness and could not forbear the question.

"Why—no—at least—why, perhaps he might get 5 or 10 cents out of the way, but not any more, ever." And Mrs. Lombard spoke with the air of one who has taken a stand and refuses all chances to retreat.

CARE OF CHAMELEONS.

How These Little Creatures Can Be Kept Alive For Years.

Chameleons can be kept alive for years by making a frame to fit over a plant in a flowerpot and covering it with mosquito netting, which must be long enough to tie with a string about the pot. Keep the pot in the sunniest window and water the plant every day through the netting. You will be surprised to see how eagerly the little creatures will drink the running water after they get over their fear. Set a wire fly trap for flies, which you can liberate under the netting. The chameleons will not be backward about helping themselves.

In winter they do not require much food, but will relish a meal worm occasionally on sunny days. Meal worms can sometimes be got at the grain stores for the asking or can be purchased at the bird stores, or small spiders can be found in cracks and crannies asleep for the winter. They may be frozen stiff if found out of doors, but they revive in a warm room.

Chameleons enjoy a place to sleep in nights and winters. Take a piece of red flannel four inches wide and eight inches long; roll it over a stick as large round as your finger and sew it while on the stick so that it will not come unwound; then slip off and run a wire through it long enough to suspend it from one of the branches on the plant. The chameleon will crawl into this cozy bed and go to sleep.

GRAFTING FISH TAILS.

An Interesting Art In Which the Japanese Are Experts.

Among the many interesting arts in which the Japanese excel is that of the making of fish tails. Almost every one has seen the bush tailed goldfish, with its four, five and sometimes more long, wavy tails, but it is not generally known that most of them are not its own.

When the little goldfish are very, very young their flesh is as clear as glass, so that one can see every bone in their tiny bodies. At this time the few that are born with two or more tails are put by themselves, and then a queer looking old Jap, with a great magnifying glass fastened in front of his eye and wee sharp tools handy, reaches down under the water and cuts off the tails of the plain little fish, and then three or four of these tails are joined on to the backbone where the one was cut off and fastened there with tiny bandages until they grow fast.

The Japanese, who are very skillful in queer things of this kind, grow the finest goldfish in the world, and it is a very good business, for very fine fish of this kind often bring as much as $300 to $500, and one sold not long ago for $1,000.

The Lady of the Lake.

"In the Days of Scott" there are two anecdotes about Sir Walter Scott's children in connection with his poem, "The Lady of the Lake."

One day his daughter was met by James Ballantyne, the publisher, in her father's library and asked what she thought of the poem. She replied that she had not read it and added:

"Papa says there is nothing so bad for young people as reading bad poetry."

Scott's son Walter returned from school one day with evidences of having been engaged in a fight. His father asked him what he had been fighting about. He replied that he had been called a "lassie" and had resented it.

A little questioning showed that young Walter's schoolfellows had nicknamed him "The Lady of the Lake," which name the boy did not understand except as a reproach to his manliness.

The Joys of Relic Hunting.

Quite apart from the beauty and intrinsic worth of such things, it is astonishing on looking back on one's experiences of collecting to realize how much pleasure one has got out of even a dilettante quest of antiques. The exhilarating joy of this treasure hunt, the finding of the treasure, the bargaining for it and the final bearing of it home in triumph, unwrapping it and discussing its beauties and merits, are things which add zest to life. And, as the taste for beautiful old things is more or less an acquired one and can be cultivated, this is a joy in which most people who are fortunate enough to have a little spare cash and a little spare time can share.—London Tatler.

The Joy of Owning Land.

There is a distinct joy in owning land, unlike that which you have in money, in houses, in books, pictures or anything else which men have devised. Personal property brings you into society with men. But land is a part of God's estate in the globe, and when a parcel of ground is deeded to you and you walk over it and call it your own it seems as if you had come into partnership with the original Proprietor of the earth.—Henry Ward Beecher.

ANIMAL SAGACITY.

The Instinct That Leads the Ostrich to Protect Its Eggs.

The nature students—everybody is a nature student nowadays—were trying to outdo one another.

"Eagles when the sun is overhot shade their young with outspread wings," said the first. "On August afternoons I have seen a mother eagle stand patiently two full hours, her left wing spread like an umbrella, while in its cool shade her nestlings slept."

"Squirrels," said the second, "can tell whether a nut is good or bad without opening it. A chestnut, a walnut, a shellbark, they lift it in their little paws, hold it to their faces a moment, then if it is bad cast it aside. How do they tell? By the weight, by the sound? I incline to think they do it by the smell."

"Ostriches never sit," said the third. "They lay their eggs on the pale Saharan sands, and the sun does the rest. But before the ostriches depart from their eggs they place on the top of each a pinch of sand, for they know that the germ will mount to the top and that the sun's heat would kill the germ were it not protected."

"A trained elephant," said the fourth student, "danced very badly at a matinee performance and was accordingly beaten cruelly by its master. That night, hearing a shuffling noise outside, the master crept forth, and there in the moonlight he found the elephant carefully practicing its dance steps."

A PRIVILEGE RESERVED.

Ceremonies Witnessed at a Jeweler's Ring Counter.

"I want a plain gold ring for a lady. Best you've got in the store."

"For this lady?"

"Sure! Who else would it be for? Pull off your glove, Katie, and let the gentleman measure your finger."

The girl withdrew her woolen glove and bashfully extended her small hand, red and toil worn, toward the clerk.

"There, that's about the size," said the jeweler to the girl.

"Do you wish him to put it on?"

"No—not yet," said the blushing girl. "When he puts that ring on, it's on to stay."

Size, quality and price at last were settled satisfactorily, and the young man pulled from his pocket a shining coin.

"Here you are, gold for gold!" he exclaimed proudly. "Nothin' but gold 'll pay for that ring."

"Haven't you anything smaller?" asked the sordid clerk.

"Plenty, but nothin' good enough to pay for that ring."

"Bit of sentiment, eh?" queried an interested bystander.

"Oh, yes, sir," said the girl, with evident pride. "He's been saving that twenty dollar gold piece for nearly four months, waiting to buy this ring."

Your Own Body.

Think deliberately of the house you live in—your body. Make up your mind not to abuse it. Eat nothing that will hurt it; wear nothing that distorts or pains it. Do not overload it with victuals or drink or work. Give yourself regular and abundant sleep. Keep your body warmly clad. At the first signal of danger from any of the thousand enemies that surround you defend yourself. Do not take cold; guard yourself against it. If you feel the first symptoms, give yourself heroic treatment. Get into a fine glow of heat by exercise. This is the only body you will ever have in this world. A large share of pleasure and pain of life will come through the use you make of it. Study deeply and diligently the structure of it, the laws that should govern it, the pains and penalties that will surely follow a violation of every law of life or health.

Torpedo Boats.

Torpedo boats and torpedo destroyers are thin skinned, unarmored craft. Often the steel hull is only about half an inch in thickness, but they travel as fast as many railway trains, some thirty or thirty-five miles an hour. They discharge their deadly bolt and run. A dark, stormy night is their chance. Then, without a light showing, they dash in and launch their torpedo, escaping, if they can, the hail of rapid fire that is sure to deluge them. —Frank E. Channon in St. Nicholas.

Force of Habit.

Realizing that he should pay her a compliment, the chronic debtor hesitates before the beautiful woman. At last he says to her:

"Just make a little tab for me, and next time I'm down your way I'll tell you how well you are looking."

But the look on her countenance was enough to make him realize that compliments must be paid on face value and that beauty keeps no books.

Friends and Reputation.

He who believes himself surrounded by admirers and whose vanity is hourly feasted with all the luxuries of praise easily persuades himself that his influence will be extended beyond this life; that those who he thinks are proud to be numbered among his friends will endeavor to vindicate his choice by zeal for his reputation.—Dr. Johnson in "Idler Papers."

The Riddle.

His Daughter—Papa, did you know mamma long before you married her? Her Father—Just between you and me, my dear, I don't know her yet.

It's a sure thing that one can't be sure of anything in this world.—Van Buren Current Local.

The religion that cannot mix with business has no business to meddle with anything.

Contentment has been praised more, and practiced less, than any other condition of life.

Convalescents need a large amount of nourishment in easily digested form.

Scott's Emulsion is powerful nourishment—highly concentrated.

"Why hasn't Francois come?" she asked, in an anxious whisper.

"Francois will never come," the Chevalier replied, very curtly.

"Do you"—she pushed back her matted hair with a gesture of horror—"do you——"

"Yes, I do. The English have been on Francois's track for some time. He was last seen, I learn, loitering about the Carrefour de St. Antoine. Poor fool, why did he go there, of all places? He has disappeared and——"

"George Onslow?" she interrupted with a flash of anger.

"I fear so. Onslow is mad with despair and wrath. He had discovered Francois's trade and his Jacobite employers; and the English Government pays handsomely for Jacobite secrets. Onslow, too, was convinced he would get no more papers as he had got them before, and so——"

"Yes, yes." Then she added, "And he desired revenge on a woman."

The Chevalier nodded quietly. "If he had secured from Francois that paper which De Nerac is carrying, revenge was in his hands. But the madman has struck too soon; it is just as well for all of us." He looked up and down the dimly lit passage. "Some day," he said, in a matter-of-fact tone that was cruelly tragic, "Francois's fate will be mine."

The girl flung out a hand of passionate protest. Her voice choked.

"I feel it for certain," the Chevalier continued, "it is fate, the fate of our—" He checked himself sharply. "Oh, I shall not resent my turn when it comes; I have no desire to live now."

"No." She, too, stretched arms of impotent appeal against the grip of a pitiless destiny. "No, there is nothing to live for, now."

The Chevalier looked into her eyes with the earnest scrutiny of deep affection. "So your question, too, has been answered?" he whispered.

"Only as I expected. Could it be otherwise?"

"All for De Nerac," he commented aloud to himself; "all for De Nerac—love, success, glory, honor, and, as if that were not enough, he and that wanton will frustrate the revenge and punishment——"

"Yes, he will do that. It is the destiny of France."

The thought imposed silence on both. Andre's measured breathing could be heard dying away in peaceful innocence in the dim passage.

"But this attack?" Yvonne demanded suddenly.

"The ministers and the Court, of course," was the quick reply. "Some one has warned them of his"—he nodded towards the parlor—"his errand. The some one can only be Onslow, the miserable traitor, and it explains Francois's disappearance, too. The despatch can wait. But Onslow's game must be watched or——"

"And checkmated," she interrupted decisively. "Ah! I see it now—I see it all now."

They fell to talking earnestly.

Three hours later Andre had returned to his room in the palace as he had left it—by his rope ladder. He had an interesting story to add to the morning chocolate of Madame de Pompadour, and he was able to give back intact a despatch which he had been unable to deliver.

And the next event was at ten o'clock, when the Duke of Pontchartrain was chatting with the morning crowd in the Oeil de Boeuf. Sharp exclamations, followed by a dead silence, greeted the entry of the Captain of the Queen's Guards, whose left arm, all could see, was bandaged and carried in a sling.

"Monsieur le Duc," Andre said in a voice that rang through the room, "His Majesty commands your presence at eleven o'clock in the Council Chamber." He paused to allow the royal message to be appreciated by the attentive company; then he added: "And, Monsieur le Duc, I beg to say for myself that if your Grace wishes to know where your servant and that of the Comte de Mont Rouge are, who attempted to murder me last night when carrying out the commission of the King of France, your Grace will find them both dead, along with two others, in the inn called 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold.'"

A haughty bow, and he had left the astonished Duke and the appalled audience to their bewildered reflections.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The customary midday service in the chapel at the palace that morning was unusually crowded. Mansart's dignified and classical architecture in all its frigid splendour is best viewed today by the visitor from the royal tribune, and it is with difficulty that the cold and empty desolation condescends to conjure up for the imagination the historic share of this chapel in the grand age of the French monarchy. For under Louis XV.—sensualist and bigot—the homage of attendance at the rites of the religion of the Sovereign and the national Church was as profitable, nay, as obligatory, as obedience to the inflexible conventions of Court etiquette and the good breeding of the Faubourg St. Germain. So, indeed, it had been under Louis XIV. and the ascetic pietism of Madame de Maintenon; so it continued to be under Louis XV. and the genial culture of Madame de Pompadour and the libertinism of Madame du Barry. But, Andre, like every one else in the congregation that morning, was not thinking of this curious paradox as his eye scanned the devots worshipping beside the men and women who patronized Voltaire and laughed at miracles in polished epigrams that dissolved the central truths of the Christian faith into a riddle for the vulgar. He saw the King, the Queen, and the crowd of courtiers, he saw Madame de Pompadour, who as yet had not gained, as she did later, the seat she coveted in the grand tribune. He was asking himself, as he mechanically rose from or fell on his knees, where was the Duke of Pontchartrain and what had the King said to him?

Andre, alike with the foes of his own order, knew that a crisis had been reached. The next forty-eight hours must settle decisively the great battle between the Court and the maitresse en titre. And the decision rested with the royal figure kneeling devoutly on his crimson faldstool, with that man of the soft, impenetrable, bored eyes, who broke all the Ten Commandments, yet said his prayers with the same absorption as the most fanatical devot. Yes; Louis's worship was watched with feverish interest by every man and woman present.

"He is in a great rage," the Comtesse des Forges whispered, as she crossed herself; "he never says all the responses unless he is truly angry."

The Abbe de St. Victor tittered gently, rather because the licentious love story he had had stitched into his service-book had reached an amusing denouement. "To be sure," he whispered back behind his lace handkerchief, "and he never is so polite to the Queen as when he is hopelessly in love with another woman."

"Poor Pontchartrain," whispered the Duchess, "always kisses me with passion half an hour before he kisses Francoise. All well-bred men are like the King in that, I suppose. It is the kiss of peace," she pouted at the High Altar.

The Abbe tittered again with dulcet decorum, but, seeing Denise's eye on him, prayed for the rest of the service with exemplary fervency and finished his love story at the same time.

When the congregation broke up, the Queen's antechamber was the general meeting-place of the noble rebels, and Denise, lingering without, marked with surprise Madame de Pompadour's sedan chair stop in the gallery. Madame de Pompadour had her chair just because it was the privilege of mesdames of the blood-royal, but to return this way was a fresh outrage.

Denise was still more surprised when she was addressed.

"I beg you," said the lady, "to present my humble duties to her Majesty and to pray her to do me the honor of accepting these flowers." She tendered a magnificent bouquet.

Denise looked her up and down. "The gentleman-usher of the week, Madame," she replied, making a motion with her fan, "conveys messages to her Majesty."

"I am aware of that," Madame de Pompadour said sweetly, "but I asked a favor, Mademoiselle; may I simply add that I hope if the Marquise de Beau Sejour should so far forget herself as ever to ask a favor of the Marquise de Pompadour she will not be so foolish or so uncharitable as to refer it to her gentleman-usher."

The two women confronted each other in silence. Then Madame de Pompadour curtsied deferentially, stepped into her chair, and disappeared. Denise walked into the antechamber with two angry red spots in her pale cheeks and her grey eyes blazing.

"Mon Dieu!" cried the Comtesse des Forges. "It is insufferable. What insolence! My consolations, dear Mademoiselle."

"There is something coming," the Abbe de St. Victor said gravely. "The grisette's speech was a trumpet of war. Before long there will be a new maid of honor—that's what she——"

"A hundred l-livres to one," stammered Des Forges, "that it is n-not this week."

"I'll take that," said the Abbe, using the jewelled pencil the Duchess had given him. "I want a hundred livres sorely."

"Here is the Duchess," exclaimed Mademoiselle Claire.

"Well? the news—the news?" cried a dozen excited voices.

"Terrible," said the Duchess, fanning herself languidly, "terrible. Pontchartrain is ordered to his estates; he is forbidden Paris and Versailles."

"For how long?"

"For ever—for ever. No time was said. The King was dreadfully angry. He swore by St. Louis and refused to believe all Pontchartrain's falsehoods. Oh, my friends, think of living always in the country, the horrible country, where there are so many rosy-cheeked wenches that milk cows. Pontchartrain will take to drinking milk for breakfast, I am sure, before I am dressed, and Francoise will never consent to live in our chateau, and I sha'n't have any one worth a sou to wash my lace and do my hair. Ah! the King is abominably cruel and inconsiderate."

While the ladies were bewailing her fate, St. Benoit turned to the Abbe. "How could the Duke be such a fool," he asked savagely, "as to allow Andre to be attacked—Andre of all men?"

"The information was explicit," the Abbe said, in a low voice. "If the attack had succeeded, we should have ruined the grisette."

St. Benoit made an impatient gesture.

"The folly," added the Abbe, "lay in employing fellows who could be recognized."

"With the result," growled St. Benoit, "that the country will enjoy the ablest head in our party. It's simply disgusting."

"Exactly," commented the Chevalier drily. "I sympathize with the Duke. Only I haven't a chateau to retire to, worse luck."

The remark had been heard by the ladies, and called out a dozen questions.

"Yes, Duchess," the Chevalier said quietly, "this afternoon I have my last audience with His Majesty. I understand I am to be dismissed—from Versailles, perhaps from France."

"But who will take your place?" cried Mademoiselle Claire.

"The lady who will shortly take all our places, Madame la Marquise de Pompadour."

He glanced at Denise, and the glance went home. She had refused to let him ruin Madame de Pompadour and Andre with her; he had obeyed because he loved her; and he alone, poor boy, was to pay the penalty. In Denise's soul, stricken by remorse, surged the wild desire that had been shaping for days. If only by some great act of renunciation, of self-sacrifice, she could repair the terrible harm that her love for Andre had done to her and their cause.

"We are ruined, beaten," the Comtesse des Forges said in a hopeless tone. "That woman has won. Fate is against us."

"Yes, nothing but a miracle can save us now," St. Benoit remarked.

"And even the Abbe will admit that the age of miracles is past."

"You forget, mon cher. The grisette is herself a miracle—of Satan," retorted the Abbe, but the company was in no mood for jests. The completeness of Madame de Pompadour's triumph was too convincing and too galling. And the Duke's dismissal they knew well would be followed shortly by other blows as cruel, as well directed, and as insulting. The King was in the hands of an able and unscrupulous woman with an abler hero as her ally, and the King was absolute master of France.

"If only His Majesty would fall ill," murmured the Duchess, "if only he would fall dangerously ill."

"Ah!" the Comtesse cried, with a splendidly vindictive gleam under her heavy eyelids, "ah, then we could treat that wanton as we treated the Duchess of Chateauroux."

The company assented in silence. Well did they all remember the memorable events of Metz in 1743, when Louis the Well-Beloved had been smitten down, and the Church and the Court had so skilfully used his fears of death to get the maitresse en titre, the Duchess of Chateauroux, dismissed.

"And the Duchess died, the miserable sinner," said Mademoiselle Claire, "very soon. It surely was the judgment of Heaven."

"The same miracle," smiled the Abbe, "never happens twice, alas!"

"And the King was never so well as to-day," added St. Benoit, remorsefully.

Denise had already withdrawn. Deep as was her resentment against Madame de Pompadour, strong as was her desire by self-sacrifice, if need be, to atone for what she now felt was a sin, the conversation of her friends never failed to offend her tastes and her conscience. She was working for a cause, they were simply bent on vengeance.

The Chevalier met her in the gallery as he thoughtfully strolled away.

"Courage, Mademoiselle," he stopped to say. "I cannot win your love; perhaps I may yet be permitted to help to make you happy," and he glided off before she could ask what he meant or speak a word of all the things she longed to say.

The young man had guessed aright. That afternoon Louis dismissed him in royally curt words, intimating at the same time that he desired to see him no more at Versailles or Paris. The Chevalier simply bowed, and the King now sat alone in his private Cabinet de Travail busy with his secret correspondence and somewhat troubled in mind. Madame de Pompadour had had her way, but the Chevalier de St. Amant, Louis was aware, left his service with a dangerous store of knowledge. And Louis was in fact penning a secret order to the police for his immediate arrest and detention in the fortress of Vincennes when the rings of the curtain over the door behind him rasped sharply. Some one had unceremoniously entered.

The King turned angrily at this extraordinary defiance of his express command that he was to be disturbed by no one. One glance, and the pen dropped from his hand.

"You recognize me, Sire?" said the intruder slowly.

"Dead—dead," the King muttered. His fingers had clenched, his face was ashy grey.

"I was dead, but I have come back as I promised. The dead do not forget."

Louis stared straight at him as a man stares in fear through the dark. Two great drops of perspiration dripped on to the unsigned lettre de cachet.

"Some day, perhaps soon," said the man, "your Majesty will answer for your acts, not at the tribunal of men, but at the tribunal of—the devil."

Louis crouched in his chair. His lips moved, but he could not speak.

"Fifteen years ago we last met, your Majesty and I. My wife was stolen from me, my nobility branded, myself condemned on a false charge, and you, Sire, were the author of all these foul deeds. To-day your Majesty is betrayed by the unknown. The man who steals, and will continue to steal, your papers, Sire, is not 'No. 101'; it is I—I he stepped forward——"I, the dead."

Louis shrank back, his dry lips moving; his fingers convulsively crept towards the hand-bell.

"Touch that bell," said the man in a terrible tone, "and I will strangle you, Sire—royal betrayer of women, curse of the orphan and the fatherless."

Louis's arm fell paralyzed at his side.

"Take warning," the unknown continued, "take warning in time. If you, Sire, would save yourself from the judgment of God, dismiss at once the woman who betrays you, the woman called the Marquise de Pompadour." He paused and repeated her name twice, adding with emphasis on each word, "And remember Dieu Le Vengeur! Dieu Le Vengeur!"

The motto seemed to strike an awful chord in the King's memory. He covered his face with his hands. When at last a long silence gave him courage again to look up, the room was empty. He was alone!

Ah! He had dreamed an evil dream, that was all. With a shudder of relief he stretched his arms as one freed from the mastery of unendurable pain. A dream, thank God! an evil dream. And then his eye fell on his desk. The lettre de cachet was torn into bits, and the bits were wet with the perspiration of his agony. The King tottered to his feet, clutched at the hand-bell feverishly, and rang—rang—rang.

The gentleman-usher stared in awe at His Majesty's ashy grey face and twitching lips.

"Did—did any one pass out?" Louis stammered.

"Sire?"

"Did any one pass out, out from here?" Louis repeated.

"No, Sire." The man's face was both puzzled and frightened. His royal master put his hand on a chair to support himself.

"You are sure?"

"I heard voices in the room, Sire, but——"

"You heard voices, ah."

"But I can swear no one either entered or left since your Majesty gave orders for—ah! Au secours! Hola there! hola! au secours! the gentleman-usher's voice had become a shriek. "Au secours! Le Roi, le Roi!"

Louis had fallen in a dead faint on the floor.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The wished-for miracle had happened after all. Yet the news that the King had suddenly fainted, which spread like wildfire through the palace, was at first made light of. "The King," said the Abbe de St. Victor, "likes to show a touch of human and feminine weakness; he faints as women do, to relieve the ennui of perpetual flattery." In two or three hours, however, it was known that after being put to bed His Majesty had fainted again and again, that he had scarcely rallied, that the doctors whispered of palsy and a stroke, and that his condition was truly critical. The excitement slowly rose to feverish anxiety, mingled with no little exultation. Versailles was thrilled as Paris and France had been thrilled in 1743, when the King's dangerous illness at Metz had fired every class into touching demonstrations of passionate loyalty. About midnight the watchers could relate that urgent couriers had been despatched, on what errands no one could precisely say, but it was certain that Monsieur le Dauphin, absent on a hunting expedition, had been summoned to return at once, that mesdames the princesses were being fetched from their convent, that a council of ministers would be held as soon as the Dauphin arrived, that

Winston's Work

By HONORE WILLSIE.

Copyright, 1907, by M. M. Cunningham.

The sun was just rising behind the bluffs when Darrel strolled out on to the veranda of the bungalow. On the east shore the Mississippi was still dark and gray with night shadows, but toward the dim line of Minnesota the water was liquid crimson.

Darrel, a fine, strong figure in his bathing trunks, shivered as he paused to look at the familiar beauty of the great river. Then he took a breath that swelled his deep chest and plunged with great bounds down the bluff side to the river far beneath. When he returned, red and dripping, Jim, his darky factotum, was setting the breakfast table on the veranda, and in a short time Darrel was drinking his coffee and looking out at the tender spring green of the midstream islands.

It was for over a year now that he had piqued the curiosity of the "natives" by living alone on the bluff side. Two isolated facts, however, known to the gossips, accounted for all his eccentricities. Darrel was a writer and a New Yorker. They called him surly. They could not know that he was merely readjusting his lifelong theory of married happiness. They could not know that he was merely fighting to recover his old time buoyancy that had left him that spring morning when Elizabeth had told him that she was going to devote her life not to him, but to her "art."

Darrel sighed, then rose abruptly.

"Jim," he said, "Mr. Winston may come today, so you had better watch the bend sharply about noon."

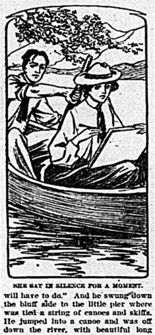
"Yessah."

"And you may as well fix up the guest room this morning."

Jim looked around at the simple furnishings of the porch and living room critically. Jim had served Darrel's father and had privileges.

"Am Mr. Winston very particular, sah?"

Darrel smiled. "I don't know, Jim. The publishers are sending him out to get illustrations for my book. This will have to do." And he swung down the bluff side to the little pier where was tied a string of canoes and skiffs. He jumped into a canoe and was off down the river, with beautiful long strokes of the paddle that told of many hours spent on the water. In fact, it was from the hours spent on this river that Darrel's book had grown. He had written it in a fervor of enthusiasm over the wonders of the Mississippi, and the publishers had received it joyfully. Darrel had found a new field.



SHE SAT IN SILENCE FOR A MOMENT.

The noon train drew slowly up to the station platform, and Darrel turned away in disappointment. But one passenger alighted, and that was a woman. He glanced back once more to make sure that he was not mistaken. Then he halted. There was something very familiar about the slender, well dressed figure standing hesitatingly at the far end of the platform. Suddenly the girl moved toward him.

"Oh, Horace!" she cried.

"Yes, Elizabeth," he replied quietly as if they had not parted over a year ago.

"Well, aren't you glad to see me?" brightly. "And what are you going to do with me?"

"I don't know," said Darrel to both questions. "What brought you here, Elizabeth?"

The girl looked into his face, with her candid blue eyes full of wonder.

"Why, Horace, didn't they send you word that I was coming?"

"'They?' Who are 'they?'" Darrel's fingers were trembling a little.

"Mr. Tompkins, your publisher."

Darrel sat down heavily on a truck, then arose. "They wrote me that they were going to send Winston. You—you know my old prejudice, Elizabeth."

Elizabeth's beautiful mouth twitched, and her eyes twinkled. "You have always said that a woman could do only 'pretty' work; that she could put no strength into her sketches. Come, Horace; you are not very hospitable, are you?"

Darrel was himself again instantly. "You see, I could have put up Winston, but I am going to take you to Mrs. Brady, who will be glad to have a 'paying guest.'"

That afternoon Elizabeth sat in the canoe facing Darrel. In her lap was a sketch book. Darrel had said nothing more concerning feminine artistic ability. He was struggling with the old disappointment and with the old love that, as if the intervening years had been for nothing, had returned with redoubled force at the sight of Elizabeth's beauty. She was so dainty, so merry, so winsome, that Darrel had never been able to consider her for her art seriously. She was a thing to be adored and protected and slaved for. The toil of a profession was ridiculous considered with Elizabeth.

She sat looking at him in an inscrutable sort of way. "You must take me to the places you want sketched first, Horace, so that I won't get confused by seeing too much else."

They paddled slowly up to the foot of Gray Eagle. Darrel held the canoe against the current and looked up at the magnificent bluff side, whose great face was deep and cool with pines. The Mississippi bluffs were new to Elizabeth. She sat in silence for a moment, looking at the grandeur of river and shore. Then she began to sketch rapidly. All the brilliant spring afternoon they paddled about in silence for the most part. Elizabeth slipped her sketches as rapidly as they were finished into her portfolio, and Darrel did not ask to see them. He was grateful to Elizabeth that she did not rhapsodize over the scenery. Words were inadequate and idle here.

At last the girl, with a tired little sigh, slipped the last sketch into her portfolio. "Now, if you will come back to supper with me we will talk them over," she said.

They sat on Mrs. Brady's porch just before sunset, and Elizabeth laid one of her sketches in Darrel's hands. He gave a little start of surprise. How had she done it? The Mississippi, calm, swift and deep, in all its potency of motion; then for miles bluff after bluff, pushing into water, stern, forbidding, yet lovely; the tenderness of the blue sky, the softness of ragged clouds, the—

"Elizabeth," said Darrel, and his voice trembled a little, "I did not know that you could do this. This is better than Winston's best work."

Elizabeth looked anxiously into his face. "Do you think that?" she said.

Darrel again studied the sketch. "It is wonderful," he said. "You have told more in these few strong brush strokes than I have in my whole book. Elizabeth," wistfully, "how could you understand so well?"

Elizabeth clasped her hands softly in her lap. "Oh, but you see I've read the book and reread it, so I was prepared to see all that you did. The book was as—as fine and strong as you are, Horace."

The man rose and walked back and forth. "Elizabeth, can you ever forgive me for being such a fool as to belittle your work? Why, do you know, I admire Winston's work so much that I was in the seventh heaven when I found that I could get him to do my illustrating, and your work is far and away better than his." He turned toward the girl abruptly. "Elizabeth, why did you come?"

"Because"—the girl looked up at him bravely—"I wanted to see you again, and"— She paused.

"And?" suggested Darrel.

"And when you asked for Winston I was glad to come. I always sign my work Winston. It is my middle name, you know."

Darrel drew her close to him. "But your 'art?'" he questioned.

"I—I wanted to see if a woman could," she whispered.

"And a woman always shall," he said. "'Winston' shall illustrate all my books."

MISS JULIE FLORENCE WALSH

WOMEN SUFFER

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance.

How many women do you know who are perfectly well and strong?

The cause may be easily traced to some feminine derangement which manifests itself in depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere or do anything, backache, dragging sensations, flatulency, nervousness, and sleeplessness.

These symptoms are but warnings that there is danger ahead, and unless heeded, a life of suffering or a serious operation is the inevitable result. The best remedy for all these symptoms is made from native roots and herbs. No other medicine in the country has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female ills.

Miss J. F. Walsh, of 328 W. 36th St., New York City, writes:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been of inestimable value in restoring my health. I suffered from female illness which caused dreadful headaches, dizziness, and dull pains in my back, but your medicine soon brought about a change in my general condition, built me up and made me perfectly well."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and organic diseases. It is invaluable in preparing for child-birth and during the Change of Life. It cures Nervous Prostration, Headache, General Debility, and invigorates the whole system.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

A Sailor Made Suit.

On the summer day that Captain Collins embarked with his ten-year-old son for a lake trip on a lumber vessel the weather was hot and sultry. The captain had more important matters than his son's wardrobe on his mind, and young Peter, with the shortsightedness of excited youth, left home without his jacket.

For two days the wind blew softly from the south. On the third day it switched suddenly to the north, bringing with it a cutting arctic coldness.

Mrs. Collins, fingering the forgotten jacket, had visions of her thinly clad son turned blue with cold or perhaps already stricken with pneumonia.

Two weeks later the travelers returned, the father beaming, the boy even more radiant in a bulging flannel garment of curious but ample cut.

"You see," explained Captain Collins, "Peter didn't have clothes enough, so we put in at the nearest port to buy him a coat. But there was only one store and not a ready made garment in the place, so I bought three yards of red flannel and made him a suit."

"Where," asked Mrs. Collins, trying not to laugh, "did you get the pattern?"

"Used the boy," said the captain proudly. "Laid the flannel on the deck, spread the boy on his back on top and cut all round him with my jackknife. Then I laid him on his stomach and cut out the front. How else could you make a pattern?"—Youth's Companion.

Aboriginal "Capias."

In the "History of the Town of Middleboro," Mass., there is a footnote quoted, from the "New England Memorial," which gives a curious example of Indian courts and the rules of practice in them.

An Indian court in Barnstable county, presided over by an Indian magistrate, issued the following warrant to an Indian constable:

"I Hihoudi,
You Peter Waterman,
Jeremy Wicket;
Quick you take him,
Fast you hold him,
Straight you bring him
Before me,

He Could Run.

He could run, all right, all right. He had to. Talk about your amatoors that spring for sport—this party had learned to run or starve, as a boy, an' had never forgot how. Why, say, when he tore hisself loose from a vicinity it seemed like the whole landscape was crippled. I used to try him out by givin' him a start an' shootin' at him. If he beat the bullet, we figgered he was up to form, but if the lead overtook him we'd call it an off day an' unload the ca'tridges. I've seen him scare a jack rabbit up till it was workin' under forced drafts, then limp up to it from behind an' kind of yawn an' stretch, an' then goad it to wake up or else get off the trail an' let somebody run that knowed how.

Oh, Yes, of Course.

Of the many children and women in Nazareth, Palestine, who have picked up a little English all have a way of saying "of course" instead of a simple "yes." The expression which French people catch up as characteristic of the American and Englishman is always "Oh, yes!" A correspondent, who has cycled down the Rhone valley, about Provence and along the Riviera, found himself greeted with "Oh, yes!" by the children in the streets of nearly every town. And he discovered when his attention had been called to the point in this way that "Oh, yes!" was really what he and his companions were always saying.

The lady in black pointed toward the sky.

"My husband," she sighed, "is up there, but he is looking down. Perhaps he sees all that we do."

"How long has he been dead, ma'am?" we inquired gently.

With a frown, she answered:

"Dead? He isn't dead. He's an aeronaut."—Exchange.

ODD WAYS OF POETS.

Tennyson, Artistically Fastidious, Was a Personal Sloven.

There is a sort of idea in the public mind that the poet is what scientists call a "fixed genius," that every poet is the exact counterpart of every other poet. There is probably no class of men in the world—if class it can be called—whose members differ more widely in personality.

Pope, for instance, was a miser. Dryden, Sedley, Rochester and Shelley seemed to have no use for money and "splashed it about in the most insane fashion. Shakespeare was a keen man of business. His contemporaries, Marlowe and Massinger, did not leave enough to have their bodies decently buried.

Coming down to modern times, Tennyson was artistically the most delicate and fastidious of men. A misplaced comma, an epithet which was not the perfection of expression, gave him nights of insomnia.

Yet he was perhaps the most utterly careless man of his generation regarding his personal appearance. Had he not been carefully watched by his devoted wife, he would have been quite content to wear a suit of clothes until it dropped off him bit by bit in obedience to the law of gravitation.

A great admirer of Tennyson once described his first meeting with the great poet.

It occurred, at a roadside public house in the Isle of Wight. The late laureate was seated by the kitchen fire, with a short black clay pipe between his lips, burning grease spots out of a pair of check trousers with the point of a redhot poker.

It was probably Tennyson's "faculty of silence" which helped him to secure the friendship of the greatest talker—in both senses of the phrase—of his generation, Thomas Carlyle.

Carlyle had occasional fits of silence, and he and Tennyson would sit on opposite sides of the hearth for six hours at a stretch without exchanging as many words.

At the expiration of such a period of silent intercommunication Carlyle would knock the ashes out of his last pipe and remark with every symptom of the keenest intellectual satisfaction, "Aye, Alfred, mon, we've had a glorious night!"

Tennyson's great and friendly rival, Browning, was as different from him in his personal peculiarities as he was in point of genius.

He always looked as if he had just been turned out of a bandbox. Tennyson was one of the most silent of men, Browning one of the most ebullient and loquacious. Tennyson was pessimistic and somewhat morose. Browning was always bursting with optimism and expansiveness.

ANCIENT ARMIES.

Ten thousand horse and 100,000 foot fell on the fatal field of Issus.

The army of Artaxerxes before the battle of Cunaxa amounted to about 1,200,000.

An army of Cambyses, 50,000 strong, was buried in the desert sands of Africa by a south wind.

A short time after the taking of Babylon the forces of Cyrus consisted of 600,000 foot, 120,000 horse and 2,000 chariots armed with scythes.

Ninus, the Assyrian king, about 220 B. C., led against the Bactrians his army, consisting of 1,700,000 foot soldiers, 200,000 horse and 16,000 chariots armed with scythes.

When Xerxes arrived at Thermopylae his land and sea forces amounted to 2,641,610, exclusive of servants, eunuchs, women, sutlers, etc., in all numbering 5,283,220. So say Herodotus, Plutarch and Isocrates.

THE ORDEAL BY FIRE

A Hindoo Ceremony That Puzzles the Uninitiated.

WALK OVER GLOWING COALS.

The Participants In the Mystifying Spectacle Play With the Fiery Embers as Children Play With Sand and Emerge Unharmed.

I once witnessed a most remarkable ordeal by fire at Benares, India. It was held on the grounds of a villa on the outskirts of the city, and among us were some of the most prominent men and women of official and social life in British India. Army and navy officers touched elbows with French savants, all more than glad to accept an invitation that might at least offer opportunity either to catch some clew toward solving the mystery of the Indian fire ordeal or else catch the priestly performers in a nice trap at consummate and age long deception, successfully worked among a superstitious and overcredulous people like the Hindoos.

Seats had been arranged for our party out on the spacious lawn, where a trench had been dug sixteen feet long, six feet wide and four feet deep. The fire in the trench was lighted before noon, but the ordeal itself was not to come off until after sunset. The trench was filled with kindling wood and logs and was set afire by the attendants, who kept up a blaze as hot as a blast furnace all day long, until the trench by sunset was filled three feet deep with a compact, glowing bed of redhot coals.

We were escorted to our seats at about 6:30, and we were not inclined to question the reality of that fire from the moment we sat down within twelve feet of it. Whatever else might be fraud or hypnotism in this Indian fire ordeal, we could not for a moment doubt the realism of that scorching heat that made our eyes smart and grow bloodshot. We, who had come to scoff and doubt, were soon realizing that the managers of the Benares fire ordeal had already gained 75 points out of 100 in favor of their honesty and of their power over the mighty element of fire, that figures so largely in oriental philosophy as one of the three or four primal elements of the physical universe.

A great commotion and babel of voices soon proclaimed the coming of the procession of priests, headed by the arch priest Brahmapoots, carrying a huge Indian sword, followed by the two minor priests who were destined to walk unharmed through that yard thick fiery bed, scintillating in the increasing darkness and lighting up the dark faces of the hundreds of gaping Hindoos standing behind us. While we Europeans and Americans, always hypercritical and given to scientific research, were awaiting the coming of the moment when our 75 per cent of credulity was either to be shattered or rounded out to the fullness of a completed and abiding faith in Hindoo control and mastery of the devouring element of fire, our Hindoo fellow onlookers, on the other hand, were anticipating the ordeal with all the simplicity of credulous children. Ours was an almost terrifying heart tension, and we almost wished that we were not occidental skeptics, always bent on doubting things of an extraordinary nature.

The priests marched about the trench chanting and performing mystic incantations, carrying along a glass reliquary, or shrine, in which was seen the image of the god Siva, who, in the Hindoo religious system, is one of the trinity and is worshiped as the destroyer, Brahma being the creator and Vishnu the preserver of the universe. We do not know to this day what those priests said as they perambulated about that fiery trench, but we do know what soon followed, for, at the end of the incantation, the two candidates for the ordeal plunged into the redhot coals and walked ankle deep the whole length of the trench, backward and forward, time and time again. They played with that scintillating, glowing fire as children play with the sands of Coronado beach, kicking it with their feet and stooping down to pick up handfuls of the glowing coals, tossing them in the air, to be blown by the rising evening breeze all over our heads and our easily inflammable clothing. We were really afraid. No doubt about those sparks and live, falling coals!

When the two priests had walked up and down alone through that fiery trench unscathed and unscorched, then the whole Hindoo throng seemed to suddenly catch the spirit of their priests, and, sure of their conquest over the power of fire, they began plunging into the trench. Old men and young children walked through that fiery furnace, forward and backward, and when they had tired of this "playing with fire" they came out as they had entered, not a hair of a garment scorched, not even the soles of their feet blistered.

Only males are allowed to go through the fire ordeal.

Never yet has any scientific theory explained the power of the Siva worshipers over fire. We ourselves were absolutely convinced that trickery was not to be considered as an explanation of what we had witnessed.

For Rent.

By Constance D'Arcy Mackay.

Copyright, 1907, by T. C. Parcells.

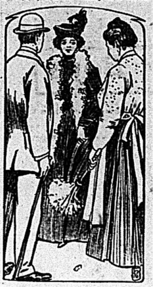
"Be sure it has six light rooms, all outside," abjured Grace.

"And remember it must be in a nice neighborhood," added Molly.

Rowena sighed. "I'll try," she said resignedly and, tucking her umbrella under her arm, started down the stairs. It was a cool day, with a gray sky and a promise of rain in the air. The streets and boulevards had the faded, dusty look that late summer always wears before the first frost arrives to sharpen and brighten things. Vans laden with furniture passed with a frequency which proclaimed that moving time had come.

"I must remember that all places look less cheerful on a dull day," said Rowena to herself, taking a list out of her pocketbook and running over it with a ruminating eye.

"'Bright, attractive apartment, six rooms and bath.' I think I'll try that one, though they all advertise them as attractive, and the reality is a lot of stuffy little rooms overlooking an air shaft on one side and somebody's back yard on the other. But I'm starting awfully early in the season, and that ought to give me a better choice."



"IT'S JUST THE PLACE FOR YOUNG MARRIED COUPLES."

For a week Rowena had been flat hunting, climbing endless flights of stairs and interviewing a seemingly endless line of real estate agents and janitors. Each morning she set out blithely, and each evening she came back fatigued and disheartened. "The price we want to pay and the kind of an apartment we would like don't seem to fit together," she wailed, recounting her adventures to Molly and Grace at nightfall. And this particular day proved no exception to the rule. By 11 o'clock in the morning she had tramped miles and found nothing suitable.

"Is this the Edgemere?" she wearily inquired of an elevator boy in an apartment building whose marble entrance and artistic green walls were like a ray of hope to her dejected spirits.

"Yes'm," said he of the trim suit and brass buttons.

"I'd like to look at one on the third floor," said Rowena, smiling on him. Rowena's smile was one of her chief charms. It lighted up her piquant face and showed a dimple lurking in her cheek. It would captivate any one from a king to an elevator boy.

The third floor of the Edgemere proved desirable from every point of view. Rowena was delighted. "And all for $50 a month," she breathed.

The boy gaped at her. "Fifty dollars!" he scoffed. "Why, these here apartments rents for a hundred and fifty!"

"One hundred and fifty! You're certainly mistaken. The paper said"—She opened her pocketbook, found the clipping and showed it to him. He shook his head.

"Misprint, lady," he answered. "They ain't no such price."

"Sure, that's just what I've been telling this gentleman," said a neat looking scrubwoman, suddenly appearing in the doorway. Behind her towered a fair haired young fellow, broad of shoulder and firm of chin. He stared at Rowena for an instant.

"Why, Miss Holden," he cried, with a boyish laugh of pleasure, "are you on the trail too?"

"I should think you'd know it at first glance," said Rowena tragically. "My sisters tell me that my face has taken on the expression of the New York flat hunter—a look of grim despair that is unmistakable."

Dwight Curtis laughed again.

"I wonder if your trials are as great as mine. I'm clubbing together with two other fellows, and trying to fill the wants of each and all is turning me gray. Moreover, I feel I'm getting the rickets from sprinting up so many flights of stairs."

"The building we're in now is going to be torn down, so we have to move, and it's my turn to search," explained Rowena. "And, oh, Mr. Curtis, have you seen any reasonable apartments with light, airy rooms—in a pleasant neighborhood not too far from the car line?"

"I have not," Dwight answered gravely, "though I repeat those phrases even in my sleep. I tell you what—why can't we hunt together? It will be a lot more sociable, and two heads are better than one, you know. Besides, down at the beach this summer that Hawkins man monopolized so much of your time that it's only fair for me to have my innings now. Shall we go to Seventy-sixth street next?"

"Do you realize," said Rowena a week later as they sat on a bench on Riverside drive, "that time is flying and we've found nothing—absolutely nothing—so far?"

"But we've had a lot of fun," Dwight replied, smiling reminiscently as he thought of sundry strolls they had taken in the park, sundry luncheons tete-a-tete in the little casino, sundry car rides to perfectly irrelevant places, and all with the ostensible excuse of flat hunting.

"This is good enough for me," he went on, with a look first at Rowena and then at the river, where myriads of water craft plied up and down. Steam launches puffed portentously, sailboats gleamed in the sunlight, and an excursion steamer churned past, all flag flying and a band playing lustily on deck. The rows of stone houses facing the drive were closed and silent, the lower windows boarded up, while the half shut blinds of the upper ones gave them a semblance of supercilious drooping eyelids.

Rowena toyed with her parasol. She was looking dangerously demure in pale blue. A tip tilted, coquettish hat sat lightly on her well poised head.

"I feel like a perfect culprit when I return at night," she confessed. "The girls fuss over me and say what a hard day I must have been through."

"I know," echoed Dwight, grinning sympathetically. "The fellows tell me that I'm a brick and that they're no end grateful, while as this I'm having the time of my life! Must we really go?" he pleaded as Rowena abruptly gathered up her gloves and parasol.

"I simply must decide on something today," she said, a ring of determination in her voice. "I cannot put it off any longer."

"Let's try this, then," suggested Dwight, looking up at a white stone building on a side street. "This is 29. It looks pretty spick and span, doesn't it? I have an idea that it will do."

Rowena gave a regretful shake of the head.

"It's too small," she declared, glancing about at the little drawing room. "But, oh, what a darling! It's the loveliest one we've seen anywhere! With a little money and a little taste it could be made a perfect jewel box. How the sun streams in, and how dear and cozy this drawing room would be!"

"With a window seat there," said Dwight, "and a bookcase against the wall."

"And some pictures and bits of bric-a-brac on the mantel!" Rowena glowed with enthusiasm.

"And a low round table and a reading lamp," added Dwight delightedly.

The voice of the ever present janitress broke in on them. "I think you'd like it," she observed. "It's just the place for young married couples."

Rowena gasped and retreated. Dwight followed.

"Dear," he besought, "you know it's exactly as she says—it's meant for us and no one else. Ah, Rowena, won't you say that the light which shines through these windows will be our home light? Won't you say that every night at dinner time the woman I love will be waiting here to welcome me? Won't you say"—and there was mirth in his voice as well as tenderness—"won't you say that our flat hunting is over?"

Rowena hesitated.

"I don't know," she began demurely. "I hadn't meant to lease my heart so soon, but since—since so desirable a tenant has applied it seems only right to oblige him with a permanent occupancy, provided he keeps it in good repair!"

Pullman's Giant Passenger.

There was one story of his career that Mr. Pullman used to tell with manifest delight. One night, going out of Chicago, a long, lean, ugly man, with a wart on his cheek, came into the depot. He paid George M. Pullman 50 cents, and half a berth was assigned him. Then he kicked off his boots, which were of surprising length, turned into the berth and, having an easy conscience, was sleeping like a healthy baby before the car left the depot. Along came another passenger and paid his 50 cents. In two minutes he was back at George Pullman.

"There's a man in that berth of mine," said he hotly, "and he's about ten feet high. How am I going to sleep there, I'd like to know? Go and look at him."

In went Pullman—mad too. The tall, lank man's knees were under his chin, his arms were stretched across the bed, and his feet were stored comfortably—for him. Pullman shook him until he awoke and then told him if he wanted the whole berth he would have to pay $1.

"My dear sir," said the tall man, "a contract is a contract. I have paid you 50 cents for half this berth, and, as you see, I am occupying it. There's the other half," pointing to a strip about six inches wide. "Sell that and don't disturb me again." And, so saying, the man with the wart on his face went to sleep again. He was Abraham Lincoln.

Yellowstone Park.

The Yellowstone National park covers an area of 3,348 square miles of territory and embraces within its boundaries specimens of almost every kind of natural scenery—waterfalls, rapids, lakes, mountains, boiling springs, mud volcanoes, geysers, canyons, caves, basaltic terraces and giant bowlders worn by erosion into every manner and kind of queer and fantastic shape that the imagination can conceive of. The Yellowstone is at present by far and away the largest park in the world.

MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve; the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

The Fatal Accident At Cherry Valley.

ADDITIONAL PARTICULARS OF HOW MR. B. F. BLAKELY MET HIS DEATH.

Picton Times: On Saturday afternoon Mr. B. F. Blakely, of Cherry Valley, was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of a gun. Mr. Blakely had occasion to go through the woods to ascertain if a water fence had been removed by the ice and took his gun along to shoot woodchucks which were in the habit of digging holes along the lane. As he did not return at supper time the family became uneasy, and when darkness set in a search party was organized. After a couple of hours' search the lifeless body of Mr. Blakely was found within a few feet of the water fence. There was evidence at the spot to show that Mr. Blakely's foot had caught in a root which projected from the ground, in the shape of a loop, amongst some evergreens. The locks on his gun were not of the modern kind and it is supposed that in his efforts to prevent falling the hammer of the gun came in contact with something in the thicket causing it to discharge. The contents entered the head of the deceased back of the left ear. Before the accident he had evidently shot at something and removing the empty shell had put it in his vest pocket. A neighbor who heard two shots in an interval of about ten minutes says the report of the second shot had a muffled sound. Mr. Blakely was well known and highly respected. He was a son of the late W. H. Blakely, an advanced temperance worker. He leaves a widow (formerly Miss Theresa Story), and four children. Mr. W. S. Blakely, of Cherry Valley, and Dr. E. A. Blakely, of Winnipeg, are brothers of the deceased, and Mrs. W. W. McCaw, of Picton, and Miss Gussie Blackly, of Yorkton, Sask., are sisters. Mr. Blakely was a member of the trustee board and the quarterly official board of the Cherry Valley Methodist church. His influence for good will be much missed in the community. The remains were interred at Cherry Valley on Tuesday, the funeral being conducted by the Masonic fraternity. Service was held in the Cherry Valley church.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

QUEEN ZEPHRA.

With the same brilliant display, the same magnificent, spectacular features and gorgeous scenery and costumes that made it so great a success upon its first appearance here, the merry musical spectacle, Zephra, was repeated at the Carman opera house last night. The reputation gained by the production, when put on the night previous was shown by the large audience which was present, and which waxed enthusiastic over the many beauties of that performance. To those who had seen it the evening before it is sufficient to say that the presentation last night was equally as brilliant as on its first appearance, if not superior. Those taking part certainly did themselves credit.

The cast throughout was the same as the first performance, and, if it was possible, was presented in a much more capable manner.

Zephra will be given again tonight and to those who have not seen the production, the best advice that can be given is to go to-night. Many have witnessed Zephra for two evenings in succession and are not yet satisfied. It is certainly the most magnificent spectacle ever produced in Belleville, and Mr. Booth is to be congratulated upon what he has accomplished in the training of the young people, and the latter are deserving of great praise for their clever work.

"THE KING OF TRAMPS."

One of the best written, best expressed, best presented comedies to visit Belleville this season will be "The King of Tramps," which comes to the Carman opera house Monday evening next. The press agent assures us we are not to see the rum-soaked, husky-voiced, shambling hobo invariably seen with attractions of this title. Instead we are to meet a "Sunny Jim" always going out of his way to spread happiness, always singing and carrying a light heart, a character that good sensible people can view from in front with a feeling of interest. A capable company of farciars, singers and dancers surround the principal characters, and patrons are assured of a performance well worth seeing.

Steamer Hickox a Complete Wreck.

The Picton Gazette in its issue of Tuesday says:

Mr. C. W. Cole, owner of Duck Island, went to Kingston Saturday on the fishing tug Cole. He says that the steamer Hickox, of Belleville, which went ashore there last December, is a complete wreck, nothing left but her boiler and engine, and that has been shoved up by the ice into about three and a half feet of water. The coal in the vessel has gone to the bottom, about a ton alone being strewn along the shore.

A Hired Girl's Mishap.

A young lady, who is employed by Mr. and Mrs. Oran Dafoe, township of Hope, met with a singular yet very serious accident yesterday. She was attending to her household duties as usual and had just placed some old papers in the fire when in an instant a terrible explosion followed. The unfortunate lady was in the act of placing the cover on the stove, when the explosion took place, and her face and head were enveloped in the flames. Her face was badly burned, and the sight of both eyes injured, one probably permanently. The windows in the room were all smashed and the sash badly shattered.

The cause of the explosion is a deep mystery. There was no gunpowder in the house or, in fact, to Mr. Dafoe's knowledge no explosive of any description.—Port Hope Times.

IMPERIAL BUDGET SPEECH.

Surplus of $26,955,000 Devoted to Reduce Debt.

London, April 19.—No budget statement of recent years has been awaited with so much interest as that of Chancellor of the Exchequer Asquith yesterday. Although it was his second budget, that of last year really was only a legacy from the previous administration, so his proposals yesterday constituted the first real Liberal budget in 12 years. The House of Commons was thronged, and the public galleries were densely crowded. The financial statement issued by the Treasury in advance of the Chancellor's speech informed the House that the exact realized surplus for 1906-07 was $26,955,000, which, in accordance with the law, would be devoted to the reduction of the public debt.

Mr. Asquith estimated the expenditure for 1907-08 at $703,765,000. The revenue on the existing basis of taxation was estimated to be $720,950,000.

The permanent reduction of the national debt for 1906-07 was announced to be $68,570,000.

The duty on tea was unchanged.

Mr. Asquith opened his speech with a brief review of the past year, pointing out that with the exception of the stock markets, which suffered from the money stringency, trade at home and abroad had been remarkably flourishing. The Treasury receipts were over $10,000,000 in excess of the estimates, unanticipated death duties accounting for $6,000,000 of this sum, while the balance was made up of increased receipts from the coal duty and the mint. The latter was due to the increased demand for coinage on account of the preposterous state of trade and the large amount of silver, aggregating $2,500,000, required for various purposes.

THE SHORT NOSES.

Something to Be Said In Favor of Those Who Wear Them.

"Physiognomists tell us that the big nosed people do the world's work," said a short nosed man the other day, "and they generally add a lot of rubbish about Napoleon's big nose and how he always selected big nosed men to carry out daring undertakings.

"That Napoleon story was invented by some one with a nose like Cyrano de Bergerac, who wanted an excuse for his proboscis and therefore pretended that his nose was but the introduction to a massive, imposing character. It is true that a big nose is sometimes indicative of firmness and determination, but only when it is associated with a strong jaw and long chin. A big nose with a retiring chin is almost idiotic in the expression it gives to the countenance. Every cartoonist knows this. Whenever you see a cartoon of a society dude it shows a long nose and a small chin.

"But there is something to be said in favor of the short noses. The short nose shows wit, imagination, tact, judgment, discretion. Socrates had a snub nose, and of the lively imaginative writers in almost any language a considerable proportion was short nosed people. Long nosed men may do their share of the world's work, but the short noses write the clever books and the entertaining plays. If Shakespeare had had a nose like the Duke of Wellington, do you ever suppose that he would have written the "Merry Wives of Windsor?" He might have been a successful theater manager, but would never have become a literary artist.

McINTOSH BROS.

DEFENCE SCORES WELL

Mrs. Perkins' Counsel Suggests Police Put Poison in Drawer.

Chief Constable Farrell Makes Damaging Admissions—Dr. Ellis Gives Sensational Evidence — Medical Man Scored By the Judge—Deathbed Scene Described By Witnesses —Public Excluded.

Cayuga, April 19.—The afternoon session of the court yesterday, in which Mrs. Mattie Perkins is on trial for the alleged murder of her husband, was an exciting one.

Chief Constable Farrell, called to the stand, told of finding a litte box with strychnine crystals clinging to it. He was mercilessly examined by Mr. Johnston, and failed to explain why the box had not been produced at the preliminary enquiry.

The sensation thus produced was tremendously heightened when Dr. Ellis, provincial analyst, followed, and after testifying to finding strychnine in parts of the body and that the little wooden box had poison, admitted that Detective Greer did not bring him the box until last Friday, April 12. Previous to that time he knew that the detective had 28 grains of strychnine in his possession. The officer had brought it to him to weigh in a similar box.

"That will do, you may sit down," said Mr. Johnston with a grim smile.

The defence make no secret that they intend to try and show that Greer himself put poison in the kitchen drawer, or that he had it placed there.

Mr. Johnston subjected Dr. Kerr of Dunnville to a savage cross-examination, during which the counsellor charged him with violating his sacred oath as a physician by disclosing immaterial secrets confided to him by a patient, in order "to put the knife" into Mrs. Perkins.

Disgrace to Profession.

The witness became so inaudible toward the close of his examination that after many admonitions to "speak up," Justice Mabee threatened to order him out of the box, saying he was "a disgrace to his profession to behave so."

The morning session was taken up by the evidence of the little group who witnessed Perkins' deathbed sufferings and testified to the twitchings which he underwent on the morning of his death, but Mr. Johnston elicited from them that the body was limp and that there was no difficulty in laying him out. The undertaker engaged for the interment told of the hurried burial.

Defence Scores Heavily.

Last night it was felt that the defence scored heavily. Mrs. Perkins, for the first time during the trial, betrayed emotion and wept as her counsel thundered out his reflections on her behalf on Dr. Kerr. It was noticed that she is not wearing a wedding ring.

At the close of the afternoon session the judge instructed the sheriff to announce to the assemblage of curiosity seekers "that the public will be debarred from attending any further sittings of the trial."

Night sittings will be held until the case is concluded.

"This is not a sewing circle," said his lordship to a group of females who were talking in court, and shortly after, annoyed by the noise of the people constantly filing in, he gave an order to bar the door.

The Death Bed.

In the morning Miss Minnie Moodie, Canfield, said that she knew the Perkins couple, and that Henry Perkins was a sick man.

Cudmore Topp said he saw Perkins on his deathbed. His mouth was open, his eyes staring and his body twitching. He seemed to be in great pain and had difficulty in breathing. He did not speak and "red stuff" was coming out of his mouth.

Jacob Cline, who was with Topp at the time, gave evidence. He and Thomas Macdonald went in together about 10 o'clock on the Christmas morning, half an hour before Perkins died. Perkins seemed to be in a fit and unconscious.

Louis Mehlanbacker, a Canfield hotelkeeper, said that on Christmas morning soon after breakfast Macdonald came and took him over to Perkins' who was moaning and twitching, and asked them to send a repeat telegram to Mr. Spencer of Welland. Then he asked for a drink of water, but did not seem to be conscious for long after.

Twitched Severely.

W. H. Thompson said that every minute or so Perkins would clench his hands and twitch severely in a way which witness illustrated. Afterwards he saw Mrs. Perkins. She said, "I've lost my husband. I never can stay here alone. You know there is no will and they'll put me out into the road."

Henry Wilkinson, a neighbor, said the fits of twitching at first were infrequent, but became very frequent towards the last. His sufferings were so great that witness had to leave the room.

Postal Thief Confesses.

Wilmington, N. C., April 19.—The mystery concerning the disappearance of $10,000 in currency in transit by mail from this city to New York, was cleared up yesterday by the arrest of Edward A. Nelson, 27 years old, in the railway mail service.

Nelson made a complete confession. Most of the money was found under Nelson's house here, where he had buried it. He was recently married and was preparing to leave the postal service and engage in business here.

Death Before Separation.

Springwood, April 19.—Stewart C. Gay, 19 years old, and Miss Mabel Pendleton, 17 years old, committed suicide yesterday by leaping from the suspension bridge across Jackson River at Clifton Forge. They started Wednesday night to Washington to be married, but were intercepted and brought back.

NO "SPOILS" IN SYSTEM

Charges of Opposition Warmly Refuted by Government.

Mr. Graham's Bill to Repeal Three-Fifths Local Option Clause Is Hoisted—Attack on License System Falls Flat—Minister sDo Not Regret Their Action—Closing Hours of Legislative Session.

Toronto, April 19.—The hottest debate of the session was concluded at 10.45 in the Legislature last night, and the question of the alleged operation of the spoils system in provincial politics, and incidentally the administration of the liquor license law.

A. G. MacKay moved: "That this House is of opinion that the administration of all liquor license laws should, as far as possible, be removed from the realm of party politics. This House, therefore, regrets the introduction by the present Government of what is commonly known as the spoils system in connection with the administration and enforcement of such laws, contrary to the repeatedly expressed and oft recorded opinions of its members while in opposition."

As an amendment Hon. W. J. Hanna moved that after the word "politics" there be inserted; "That the House takes pleasure in declaring its hearty approval of the course followed by the Government in the administration of the Liquor License Act."

The amendment was declared carried on the same division that had occurred during the afternoon, by 52 to 21, with seven pairs, except that Allan Studholme changed his vote to the Government interest, making 53 to 20.

Mr. MacKay went back to 1883 and 1885, and quoted resolutions found on the journals of the House, another in 1890, and another in 1896, introduced by the Conservative party and voted for by them, in which a non-partisan policy with regard to liquor license laws was laid down. Hon. Mr. Whitney had in his speeches stated that he would remove the appointment of political and party influences. It was a serious charge to bring that a body of men should by false pretences obtain from the people their tenure of the treasury benches.

No Spoils System.

Hugh Clark was surprised that Mr. MacKay admitted that the spoils system was not acted upon with respect to the license commissioners, who were only appointed for a year. If they were to have responsible government, it was their duty to interfere with officers if they did not execute the law as it should be enforced. For years all Liberal office-holders had been active in elections, and yet most of them were still in their offices.

W. K. McNaught declared that so far as he knew, the resolution was quite contrary to the facts. It was the late Government which introduced the spoils system. He had himself been instructed to give a fair and impartial administration. What did he find when he took office? There was no minute book to show what had been done for years previous. During the whole term of his office Mr. Hastings had never administered the law according to the act.

R. R. Gamey Is Hot.

R. R. Gamey spoke with considerable heat, and declared the Government was not going far enough in dismissing officials.

Hon. Mr. Hanna said the hour had not yet come when the Government regretted for one moment the dismissal of Mr. Hastings. The Government had promised a non-partisan administration of the liquor license law, but it had never been in their minds to go into the camp of their enemies for officials to carry it out. No one could seriously argue that any Government could remain in power and do so. He quoted the late Hon. Mr. Fraser and Sir Oliver Mowat to support this view.

Mr. Hanna produced a letter from a brewing company, written to the late Government, stating that the license commissioners and inspector in their district granted licenses on condition that no beer was bought from their brewery. They asked for an investigation, offering to prove their case, or pay the costs. The whole thing was hushed up.

He also adduced a letter from the late Mr. Lee of London to Mr. Harcourt, asking for his influence for one Garvie of Windsor, who had "moved heaven and earth to elect Lee or any other Grit." Mr. Hanna read a series of independent letters testifying to the enforcement of the law in Northern Ontario.

Premier Whitney suggested that the member for North Grey had spoiled his own day by introducing the resolution he had. The discussion had shown only the fringe of public opinion as to the honesty with which for the first time in history the license system had been administered in the province. For 12 months past he had kept silent under constant invective from the Opposition. A predecessor of the Minister of Education had taken care to have no difficulties with his license commissioners, for he said, when there were any they had to come to him and he gave them orders as to what they were to do.

He had no doubt the Government would lose votes on account of their policy, and he welcomed the possibility. Extremists might be displeased, but no one else was. The dismissal of Hastings was his own act, as was that of every official dismissed in the province. The Liberal party had debauched and degraded the civil service. He only regretted he had allowed Hastings to remain one hour in office after the Government came into power.

Only the formal obsequies of prorogation remain to be performed to end the third session of the eleventh Parliament of Canada. The red star is extinguished, the horseplay of the members indulged in, and the last motion carried. The House adjourned at 1.55, singing "God Save the King." Prorogation will be on Saturday afternoon at 2.30. A number of important matters were dealt with in the Legislature yesterday, several of which are dealt with elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. Graham's bill, to amend the liquor license law, came up at 11 o'clock at night. He moved the second reading, and Dr. Lackner moved a three months' hoist. The Provincial Secretary moved an amendment.

The division resulted in a vote of 50 for, and 21 against the amendment. J. S. Gallagher (Frontenac) voted against the Government, as did Mr. Studholme.

The object of Mr. Graham's bill was to restore the majority vote in the local option law instead of the three-fifths required by the new law. He supported the bill with the arguments already familiar in previous debates.

Hon. Mr. Hanna pointed out the large number of states and provinces in which the three-fifths vote was required and analyzing a return of the districts adopting local option showed how the law tended to its establishment.

Following A. Hislop, Premier Whitney read a letter from a clergyman, which declared that the public were sick of the country bar-rooms and would adopt local option if it was found to be successful, and he believed the three-fifths vote would tend to that result.

Allan Studholme supported the motion, he said. Dr. Lewis objected to making a great moral question a political football. Sam Clark supported his leader.

Hon. Mr. Graham said that the amendment was a device of the Government to prevent a vote on the three-fifths question, and Premier Whitney retorted that the bill had been introduced to embarrass the Government and they had met it in that spirit.

CATHEDRAL WAS DAMAGED.

Quake Cracked Ancient Building From Top to Bottom.

Mexico City, April 19.—It has been discovered that the cathedral of Mexico City, one of the most famous churches in the world, was cracked from top to bottom by the recent earthquake. The fissure is an eighth of an inch wide. An engineer has been appointed to examine the building. The cathedral is centuries old. It is built on the old site of the Aztec Temple.

Many Prominent Victims.

City of Mexico, April 19.—Owing to the great difficulty in establishing communication with the cities situated in the region of the greatest devastation, wrought by the recent earthquake, details are coming slowly. Each succeeding intelligence magnifies the extent of the disaster.

From the latest reports it is learned that the earth is now quiet in the region which was so seriously affected, but the last shock occurred as late as noon Wednesday.

In the list of known dead, which now totals 50, and of the injured, which approximates 300, are many names of Mexicans prominent in the official and social life of the region.

Volcano in Action.

New York, April 19.—A despatch from Valparaiso, Chile, says: Puyehue, a volcano adjacent to the large lake of the same name in the Province of Valdivia, is in a violent eruption.

The phenomenon is accompanied by awful subterranean rumblings, earthquakes, inky darkness, noisy electrical displays, ashes and boiling water.

Torrents of lava have set fire to the surrounding forests and people and cattle are fleeing in terror.

QUEBEC MURDER TRIAL.

Witnesses Say Prisoner Threatened to Kill Wife for Infidelity.

Quebec, April 19.—The witnesses heard yesterday morning in the Lecoutours murder case were for the crown, Mr. Raoull Bergevin, and for the defence Messrs. George Smith, M. P. P., of Thetford Mines, and Mr. Pelton, saloonkeeper.

Mr. Raoull Bergevin testified that on the 18th of October the prisoner wanted to borrow his revolver to kill his wife because she had deceived him during the course of her trip to Ireland. He had discovered by a letter found in her trunk that she had relations with the steward on board the steamer.

The deposition of Mr. Chas. Bergevin tends to prove that the prisoner had made up his mind to kill his wife some weeks before the murder on account of her pretended infidelities. George Smith, M. P. P., testified to the prisoner's good conduct as a constable.

Pelton, the saloonkeeper, said Lecoutours had often spoken to him of his wife's infidelities, saying that she had left him after 40 years of married life, that she deserved to be killed, that he did not care much to live that way, and would rather be hung than live that way.

MORE PUBLICITY NEEDED.

Government Accused of Hushing Up the Colonial Conference.

London, April 19.—(C. A. P.)—The proceedings at the conference yesterday were private, but it is understood that the subject under discussion was again the constitution of the Imperial Council. Sir George Clarke, Secretary of Imperial Defence Committee, suggests that the question of Imperial defence was very probably under discussion.

Publicity Needed.

The Pall Mall Gazette says the precis of Wednesday's deliberations by Downing street is a fine example of the policy of "hushing up" the colonial conference, and stifling public interest in the debates until the Premiers are on the way home.

Col. Steele and Borden.

The Canadian Associated Press understands that Col. Steele had an interview with Sir Frederick Borden shortly before the latter left the Hotel Cecil for the conference.

Premier Laurier will make a presentation on behalf of the donor to the National Liberal Club of the picture of Campbell-Bannerman, painted by Colin Forbes.

Death By Strychnine.

Line of Defence Becomes Clearly Marked In Perkins Case

Poison In Tablets Taken as Medicine Will Be Plea of Defence—Counsel Reflects Upon the Police—Toronto Coroner Gives Evidence—Recognized the Symptoms—Contest Of Wits With Counsel.

Cayuga, April 20.—Comparative quiet was observed in the Haldimand Assize Court yesterday as a result of Justice Mabee's decision to exclude the "assembly of curiosity seekers." The order is much resented by townspeople, many of whom have country visitors who had come in for the occasion.

The morning session was entirely taken up with medical testimony, the object of the defence being to account for Perkins' death as being primarily due to kidney disease, accelerated by strychnine taken in his medicine.

"Nobody here will deny that strychnine was found in the body, and that it contributed to his death," said Mr. Johnston, K. C., to Coroner Johnson immediately before that witness stated that strychnine in medicinal doses might be fatal if the subject was suffering from uraemic poisoning.

Applies For Documents.

Counsel for the defence made application for certain documents containing statements made by Thomas MacDonald and his mother. Justice Mabee ruled against the application.

Fred Goulding, who watched the Perkins' home on several occasions while MacDonald was there, was severely handled by Mr. Johnston, and admitted he was not on good terms with MacDonald.

"This witness—I will not call him a man," was typical of Mr. Johnston's mode of address.

Mr. Johnston endeavored to incriminate Detective Greer in suggesting evidence to witnesses, but none would admit that the evidence had been so influenced.

Mrs. Perkins retained her usual composure as she sat in court, looking paler than usual, and leaning over now and then to make a suggestion to counsel. She wept quietly while Mr. Johnston rebuked Mrs. Johnston of Amherstburg in the words taken from her letter: "If it hadn't been for Mrs. Perkins I would have lost my baby."

The defence intend to put Mrs. Perkins in the witness-box, and will also call on Dr. Edgar.

Medical Evidence.

As soon as the court opened, Mr. Johnston put in an affidavit and made application for certain written statements of Thomas MacDonald and his mother in the possession of the crown.

Dr. Bauer of Hamilton was recalled, and said that the post-mortem revealed that the deceased had suffered from appendicitis.

Dr. A. Jukes Johnson, chief coroner for Toronto, said the symptoms and post-mortem led him to conclude that strychnine poisoning was the cause of death. If Perkins had taken 25 or 30 of the heart tablets it would have been a dangerous dose.

Mr. Johnston asked witness if he had ever given expert evidence and changed his opinion.

"Yes," said witness, "I have in this case."

"And you may again?"

"I may with your assistance," retorted the witness.

Mr. Johnston produced a book on poisons, which Mr. Johnson recommended to him some years ago as the best book on the subject, and cross-examined him at great length.

Would Be Disastrous.

Dr. Bruce Smith, inspector of prisons and public charities, followed, and was asked the result if a man, suffering from a disease of the kidneys, such as uraemic poisoning, were to take a small dose of strychnine.

"The effect would be disastrous," said witness.

Frank Arnoldi, K. C., produced a little dressmaking book found in Mrs. Perkins' home, and asked witness what the word "ptomaine," found there, meant. He described it as a form of poison arising in the system as a result of decomposed food.

Mr. Arnoldi replied to the application for documents. He said the defence could learn what were in the documents by putting the MacDonalds in the box. Mr. Johnston replied that the committal was partly in consequence of the testimony of the MacDonalds, and their statements were all material to the defence. The judge decided that he could not order the production, but would be open to consider any authorities Mr. Johnston might produce.

The Brother's Evidence.

John Perkins' name caused a little excitement. He is a civic foreman in the employ of Winnipeg. He said he knew the prisoner as his brother's wife, and had received a letter when he was in Winnipeg. Mrs. Perkins' read the letter with much agitation and admitted it as being hers. It told details of Henry's illness.

He came to Canfield in reply to a telegram from his sister, and saw Mattie Perkins on Feb. 6. She spoke about having the property settled, but witness said there was plenty of time about that. The property was worth about $2,500, and there was no life insurance.

The letter said: "As you know, Henry has been sick for years," but witness had never heard that. He had not been in Canfield for twenty-five years.

There was some feeling between Henry and his wife and witness sister. Once, he said, he had been sued by his father for money sent him, and the father got judgment.

His only motive in coming down in February was to enquire into his brother's death. He denied that the main object was to obtain possession of the property. Since coming down he had done all he could do to aid the crown in making up the case. Mrs. Perkins told him that if Henry had died of strychnine he must have got

Perkins' House in Canfield, had several times observed Thomas MacDonald going to the Perkins' house, in October, November and December, both by daylight and dark, mainly at night, between 7 and 11. On the occasion he saw him go in at 11 o'clock he waited on the opposite side of the road for two hours, but MacDonald did not come out.

Purchase of Poison.

The evening session came to an abrupt close, owing to the absence of a medical witness to prove that strychnine had been bought.

Mr. Arnoldi called upon Detective Seymour of Detroit to prove that it had been purchased in Detroit.

Mr. Johnston objected on the ground that no foundation had been laid for this evidence by first showing that poison had been bought. He said he would ask for an adjournment, rather than have a link missing in the chain of evidence.

John Perkins was recalled. He was with the search party that found the books and pill-box in Mrs. Perkins' kitchen. High Constable Farrel Thursday said that Detective Greer found the book, but witness said Crown Attorney Murphy found it. He also differed from Farrell in telling of the personel of the couples who conducted the search.

He Won't Tell.

Detroit, April 20.—S. K. Trembley of Brown's pharmacy, this city, refuses positively to go to Ontario to testify in the Perkins' murder case at Cayuga. Mr. Trembley's connection with the case is only through an entry on the drug store book that early in November he sold 60 grains of strychnine to a woman who signed herself "Mrs. Davis, Canada."

CALLS BUDGET BRUTAL.

Labor Members Acknowledge Chagrin—A Middle Class Budget.

London, April 20.—Judging by the debate which followed the budget it will meet with a larger degree of general approval and less sectional antagonism than usually falls to the lot of budget statements.

The most persistent complaints emanate from the extreme section of the labor party, which is disappointed at the postponement of the pension scheme and the absence of any direct relief in the taxation of the working classes.

James Keir Hardie frankly calls it a "brutal budget," and declares his belief that the Government has no intention of dealing with the question during its lifetime, but purposes to reserve it as an effective election plank when it becomes necessary to go to the country.

That there is some jurisdiction for the complaints of the workers may be regarded from the fact that in the lobbies of the House, the statement was generally characterized as a "middle class budget."

IRISH LAND BILL PASSED.

Unionists Opposed Measure Which They Describe as Pure Confiscation.

London, April 20.—By a vote of 208 to 60, the House of Commons yesterday passed the second reading of the bill introduced by the Nationalist party, amending the Irish Land Acts.

Under the new law the power of the land commissioners to acquire estates, sell them to tenants, and provide the purchase money, is extended so that they can compulsorily buy out such landlords as Lord Clanricardo and others who refuse to sell. The commissioners will be empowered to themselves fix the prices of the estates to be so acquired.

The Unionists opposed the measure, which they described as being "pure confiscation."

The Attorney-General for Ireland, Mr. Cherry, in behalf of the Government, approved the principle of the measure, but he said that in consequence of the congestion of business it could not become law during the present session of Parliament.

No Fuel; Mills Close.

Fort William, April 20.—The Ogilvie Mills shut down Thursday on account of the scarcity of fuel.

The supply to run the railway engines is also exhausted, and coal is being rushed in from Montreal. This is coming very slowly, and on Wednesday nothing but passenger trains were run out. At Kenora there is only enough fuel for passenger engines, so all freight traffic has been suspended.

The opening of navigation will relieve the situation, but this will be, at least a week. The ice is still solid for over twenty miles, and shows no signs of breaking up.

United In Death.

Detroit, April 20.—Daniel McDougall, for 30 years proprietor of the Exchange Hotel, and the oldest hotelkeeper in Alpena, Mich., and John D. McDonald, 40 years old, a citizen, and in the same city, and 35 years proprietor of the Serman House, died within three days.

The men were lifelong friends. Both were born in Glengarry, Ont.

They came to Alpena about the same time, and their hotels were only a short distance apart.

That fine old periodical, the Presbyterian, gives up the discussion of the shorter catechism to make the following very pertinent remarks about "wine, women and graft," with which certain Cabinet Ministers are said to be mixed up: "The fear of discovery is at least a hopeful feature of the situation. The public conscience would not tolerate for a moment the holding of public office by a man openly convicted of immorality. But it must be made evident that the sin does not consist in being found out, and that no man can successfully play the double role of a Dr. Jekyll in public and a Mr. Hyde in private life. The honor of Canada is involved in that of her public men. They must be men of clean hands and blameless lives.

The New Brunswick Board of Education has recommended that text books be supplied to public school pupils free of charge. Many towns in Ontario do the same on their own initiative. However, before it becomes a general thing in the province it might be well for Ontario people to digest the following, from the Montreal Gazette: "The step is on the line of newest ideas and is all right for communities which feel themselves wealthy and have good school houses, well furnished and managed by paid teachers. Others would do well to get the proper schools and decently waged teachers first."

Hon. Mr. Emmerson is making haste very slowly in his suit against the Fredericton Gleaner. The St. John Sun, which provoked the Gleaner to to make statements which led to Hon. H. R. Emmerson's resignation and the institution of suits for libel, has since alleged that the Gleaner has been making "frantic efforts" to settle the case on the basis of an apology and full retraction. The Gleaner replies that the Sun's statements are utterly foundationless, and that if there have been suggestions for a settlement these have not, so far as it knows come from any of the newspapers threatened with libel actions. The Gleaner adds that it does not ask for favors, and says there is such a thing as exhausting one's patience

Sometimes the grasping barber gets his. Show this story to your barber when he tries to tell you you need a few "extras": "A red-headed country lad went to Knoxville, Tenn., on his first visit. He strayed into a barber shop and negotiated for a haircut to cost 25 cents. The barber suggested the various extras, which the lad accepted, supposing they were included in the quarter. The last item was dye, the barber saying that black hair would be more becoming than red. The check was $4 and the lad was compelled to pay. He then sought a police station and made complaint, the barber ultimately being sent to prison for one year.

The new fuel, ashes and coal, has been tried in this city, and has, it is alleged, amply demonstrated that it will burn longer than straight coal and give as hot, if not a hotter fire. Now people are wondering what will be the outcome of the discovery. What will the coal men do? Double the prices, to keep even?

Of course there are many doubters, and one of the strongest of them is Prof. Ellis, professor of Applied Chemistry at the School of Applied Science, Toronto. Prof. Ellis says, "The whole thing is an absurdity from a scientific standpoint. There is one thing, however, which is an absolutely fixed equation, and that is that ashes, by which I suppose is meant the residumm left after complete combustion, have no heating power left whatever, and no possible treatment can make them produce heat, whether in conjunction with fresh coal or otherwise. Their constituent elements are shortly stated, silica, alumina, lime, and oxide of iron in varying quantities, with some other elements in trifling proportions, which, however, do not count. Under no conditions could these give out heat, and the suggestion that by any special treatment heat results can be obtained, is simply an absurdity."

• • •

The secret is out. According to another eminent Toronto scientist, ashes will burn, but they won't give out any heat. Which reminds us that burning ashes in Canada, in the middle of winter would be like feeding a hungry man on snowballs

KILL THE DANDRUFF GERM.

Or Your Hair Will Fall Out Till You Become Bald.

Modern science has discovered that dandruff is caused by a germ that digs up the scalp in scales, as it burrows down to the roots of the hair, where it destroys the hair's vitality, causing falling hair, and ultimately baldness. After Prof. Unna, of Hamburg, Germany, discovered the dandruff germ, all efforts to find a remedy failed until the great laboratory discovery was made which resulted in Newbro's Herpicide. It alone of all other hair preparations kills the dandruff germ. Without dandruff, hair grows luxuriantly. "Destroy the cause you remove the effect."

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Gunpowder.

Upon the authority of an Arabic writer, in the Spanish Escurial collection, there seems little reason to doubt that gunpowder was introduced through the means of the Saracens into Europe before the middle of the thirteenth century, though its use in engines of war was probably more like that of fireworks than artillery.

Venetian Glass.

Venetian glass is not made in Venice, but in the island of Murano.

Liszt when studying the piano was accustomed as a regular occupation to practice ten hours a day. To the end of his professional career he every day played the scales, as he said, to limber his fingers.

The explanation of the white spots that sometimes appear on the nails is that the vascular tissue underneath is attached to the substance of the nail, but from accidental cause, such as a blow, occasionally becomes separated.

The sugar cane is mentioned by Strabo as known in India 325 B. C. It was then used in its raw state, no method being known of extracting the sugar.

Australia.

Australia could be made to support 400,000,000 inhabitants of the black or yellow races able to endure the climate.

Showers of Fish.

Showers of fish and frogs are tolerably well authenticated. The living creatures were probably taken from their native element by a cyclone or waterspout, were transported through the air and finally dropped with the rain.

National Flowers.

The national flower of England is the rose, of France the fleur-de-lis, of Germany the cornflower, of Egypt the lotus, of Greece the violet, of Ireland the shamrock, of Italy the lily, of India the lotus, of Japan the chrysanthemum, of Mexico the nopal cactus, of Scotland the thistle and of Spain the pomegranate.

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

CHRONOLOGY OF HYMAN.

The following are the events, says the Ottawa Citizen, in sequence with Hon. Charles Hyman commenced attempting to resign:

Nov. 20—Mr. Hyman resigns his portfolio as Minister of Public Works.

Nov. 21—The Prime Minister asks Mr. Hyman to reconsider his resignation.

Nov. 21—Mr. Hyman sends his resignation as a member of the House of Commons to Mr. Speaker, but neglects having the usual two witnesses.

Nov. 22—Mr. Speaker announces that Mr. Hyman has resigned his seat irregularly.

Nov. 26—The Prime Minister announces that Mr. Hyman has gone south in very poor health.

Dec. 5—The Prime Minister states that he has written Mr. Hyman a letter, to which he has received no reply.

Jan. 10—The Prime Minister informs the House that Mr. Hyman's condition is "serious, but not without hope."

Feb. 2—Mr. Hyman wires Prime Minister as follows: "Improved health and the assurance that a few weeks' rest will find me able to resume work of department, permit me to comply with your request to withdraw my resignation as Minister of Public Works."—C. S. Hyman.

Feb. 8—Mr. Speaker receives the following letter: "Sir,—I have the honor to tender my resignation as a member of the House of Commons for the electoral division of the City of London. Yours truly, (Sd.) C. S. Hyman."

Witnesses:
(Sd) C. J. Bial.
(Sd) W. F. D. Jarvis.

Feb. 12—Mr. Speaker announces that he has issued his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a writ of election for the City of London.

Feb. 15—Mr. R. L. Borden asks how Mr. Hyman is. The Prime Minister replies that Mr. Hyman is not in his usual health, a condition instanced by his going to bed quite early.

Feb. 18—Motion adopted that Mr. Speaker's warrant for an election in London be stayed and the matter referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

March 15—Mr. Lavergne, M. P., junior, moves that the House declare Mr. Hyman's seat vacant. Mr. Hyman's resignations (2) [illegible] read and motion negatived.

March 18—Mr. Hyman's resignations declared void by Committee on Privileges and Elections.

March 21—Mr. R. L. Borden asks if it is proposed to make valid Mr. Hyman's resignations. The Prime Minister has no information on the subject.

March 21—Mr. Hyman, having started for Canada, returns to California.

March 22—Mr. Hyman is given seat No. 20 in the House of Commons, he being member for the City of London, Ontario.

April 16.—Mr. Fielding announces that he has a telegram that Mr. Hyman's resignation is on the way from California.

The Citizen forgot an important event. Mr. Hyman recovered and started for London. He arrived in San Francisco, heard of the Emmerson [illegible] Fowler to expose the "wine, women and graft" events, got sick again, and returned to the south to rehabilitate himself. Where he is now no one knows.

Valuable Because Absorbent—A Clay Pipe Makes a Good One.

Physicians are often asked whether there really is any virtue in what are called madstones. One of them declares that these stones are of value, but that they would be of more value if their limitations were understood.

"There is no particular variety of stone or substance which may be designated exclusively as the madstone," he says. "I have seen many of them, so called, and no two were of exactly the same composition, geologically considered.

"Madstones act on the same principle that a blotting paper does when absorbing ink, and there is nothing that makes a better one than baked pipe-clay. A new clay pipe, procurable for a cent at nearly any store where tobacco is sold, cannot be excelled by any madstone, no matter how great its reputation.

"The action can be clearly demonstrated by placing a common dry red brick in contact with the margin of a puddle of water and noticing what capillary attraction will accomplish. Therefore to be efficient the only necessity is for the stone to be porous and have strong adhesive and absorbent qualities. Nothing mysterious about it.

"I have seen several that appear to be concretions, either vesical, renal or biliary, and were found in the bladder, kidney or liver of some animal—those taken from the deer supposed to be the best.

"When a person is bitten by a reptile or dog supposed to be mad and the porous stone applied to the wound the blotting paper action begins, and the blood, saliva from the mouth of the animal and whatever poison these fluids contain will naturally by capillary attraction be absorbed by and into the substance applied, no matter what name you may give it.

"The saying that if a stone sticks the wound is poisonous and if it does not take hold there is no venom present is untrue. If the stone is clean and dry it will adhere when moisture is within reach till it becomes saturated.

"For instance, a new red brick will absorb one pint of water. After the venom has been taken into the circulation the madstone is worthless, but as the victim is usually filled with whisky or alcohol at the same time the stone is being used the spirits may counteract the effect of the poison.

"I know of a stone which has a wide reputation and makes a good living for the family owning it. They never let it go out of their sight, and when the victim cannot be taken to the stone one member of the family can be hired to take the stone to the victim. In addition to traveling expenses, they charge $5 for the application and $2 extra for each hour that the stone sticks.

"This stone is busy a large part of the time. Not long since the stone held to a man's leg for over 100 hours, yet the man died. His life could have been saved if dependence had not been placed entirely in the stone."—Medical Brief.

A "Touching" Story.

The young lady who had sat for a crayon portrait was not altogether pleased with the result. "It looks like me, of course," she said, inspecting it doubtfully, "and yet I think there are some things about it that ought to be changed."

She suggested that the eyes should have rather more of an upward look, that the right hand should be a little less prominent, that the hair should be made more wavy and that certain changes ought to be made in the drapery.

"That would require a great deal of retouching," said the artist, "and I should have to charge you about $10 additional."

"Oh, dear!" she exclaimed with a pout. "I shall have to give it up. Papa won't stand my 'retouching' him to that extent."

A Case In Point.

Of Sergeant Arabin, who had not a clear method of speech, it is related that he said to one criminal, "Prisoner at the bar, if ever there was a clearer case than this of a man robbing his master, this case is that case." At another time he said, "Prisoner at the bar, you have been found guilty on several indictments, and it is in my power to subject you to transportation for a period very considerably beyond the term of your natural life, but the court in its mercy will not go so far as it lawfully might go, and the sentence is that you be transported for two periods of seven years each."—London Globe.

Real Distress of Mind.

Dora—I'm in such distress of mind, and I want your advice. I am loved by three men, and I don't know which to accept. Clara—Which one has the most money? Dora—If I knew that, do you suppose I'd waste precious time running around for advice?

Something More Recent.

"What was the cause of this rumpus?" asked the judge.

"Well, you see, judge," replied the policeman, "this man here and that woman there are married"—

"Yes, yes, I know. But what other cause?"

Setting Him Right.

"Er—really," began Mr. Chesty, "you have the advantage of me, sir. My memory, perhaps, is at fault, but"—

"No," interrupted Pepprey, "it isn't your memory, but your manners."

Wisdom alone is a science of other sciences and of itself.—Plato.

SAVING THOUSANDS OF LIVES YEARLY

Established at Government Standard of $1,000 Each, the Yearly Financial Benefit to the Country is Very Large. Yet Other Considerations Outweigh This.

In estimating the value of emigrants or settlers to the country the Government places the sum of $1,000 per head as a fair estimate of the increase of the country's wealth. The value of a native-born or naturalized citizen is much greater. Any means by which large numbers of lives can be saved, especially to a new and growing country, where population is its pressing need, is of the greatest value to a country. Physicians, who save the lives of tens or possibly, hundreds of citizens, each year are valuable factors in the country's wealth. Therefore, a remedy that is saving the lives of thousands and tens of thousands of Canadians citizens every year is one of the most valuable assets any country could have. Psychine is doing this, and doing it in a way that is rejoicing the hearts and homes of many of our best citizens. A thousand lives a year would be $1,000,000 annually saved to the country's wealth. This is but a small fraction of what Psychine is doing every year. Here is a fair sample of the letters daily received at the offices of the Company. The names are left out, as we have no authority to use them, but the original letters are open to the inspection of those interested. These two extracts are from yesterday's mail, both being from prominent business men;

"Please send samples of Psychine and Oxomulsion to ——. They have a daughter in decline, and I have mentioned your remedies to them. Also some of the miraculous cures that they have accomplished in the last eighteen years, of which I have knowledge." (Signed.)

The following is an extract from a letter received yesterday from a well-known publisher and public man, known throughout Canada;

"A full history of the G—— case which I know, should make a good story. G—— was given up as a hopeless case, and something (the underscoring is his) pulled him together. I was glad to learn that it was Psychine." (Signed.)

Thousands of people need "pulling together" and those who have used Psychine recommend it to their sick friends For stubborn coughs, colds la grippe, catarrh, bronchitis, pneumonia, loss of appetite, indigestion and all wasting diseases and consumption Psychine has no equal. TAKE WARNING.

Now, as to weddings, let me speak.
Avoid the kind described as freak.
When you're in love
You're apt to find the deuce to pay
If married in outlandish way,
As I will prove.

I knew a man named Abner Boone.
This chap got spliced in a balloon,
The reckless lout!
But one result could come, I wis,
Of such an episode as this—
They soon fell out.

Another fond but foolish swain
Got married on a railroad train,
Oh, being rash!
Of course he got it in the neck;
Affairs with him soon went to wreck
And total smash.

Avoid freak weddings when you go
To take a wife. They bring but woe
To serf or prince.
One chap I knew wed in a mine,
And he has ne'er, his friends opine,
Seen daylight since.

Veil Comedy.

She was standing by the mirror. He was buried deep in the sporting page.

"George!"

"Well! Well! What is it now?"

"How do you like my new veil?"

"Oh, it is very pretty. Anything else?"

"But how do you know it is pretty? Men don't know anything about veils."

"You are very polite toward our sex. I would have you understand that I have a taste for veils."

"You have a taste for veils?"

"Yes, I have tasted a dozen veils—that is—er—I mean I have—no, yes, I—what in thunderation do I mean? I"—

"Stop! Not another falsehood, George Brown! You have been kissing some girl through her veil. You know the taste of veils, eh? You deceiver. I"—

Little Bobby on Bees.

Little Bobby wrote an essay on bees as follows:

"The bee is a queer sort of an insect, that gives people a few points that they don't appreciate. The queen bee bosses the hive, just like ma bosses our house. The drone bee is like pa. He don't care much about work. There are other kinds of bees, including political bees, quilting bees and husking bees. But the best bees of all are the kissing bees. There is a kissing bee in our parlor every Sunday night, and I get a nickel not to tell about it. When it comes to a choice of bees give me a kissing bee every time."—Chicago News.

Making It Easier For Him.

The conventional husband was making the conventional spring bonnet remarks.

"After I have worried all winter over the money I was trying so hard to save," he said, "I find that you have spent it all for your new hat."

"Yes," replied his sweet young wife. "I want to relieve you of as many of your worries as possible."—Judge.

THE BUSY BEAVERS.

These Tireless Workers Have Altered America's Landscape.

Because its operations are chiefly nocturnal, so that it is seldom or never seen, and because of its skill in controlling water and in house building, something of mystery has grown up about the beaver. It is said that it fells trees for the purpose of building its dams and can lay a tree where it wishes to with the accuracy of the most skilled axman. It is said also that it uses its tail as a trowel, plastering the mud on its houses and dams with this appendage as a mason spreads his mortar.

Myths like these will probably have a long life. The latter belief is no doubt encouraged by the beaver's frequent habit of slapping the water or earth with its tail as an alarm signal whenever it is startled. There are many unexplained things about the beaver's life.

Long before the white man came to America the beaver was hard at work building his dams all over the country and in narrow and sometimes in wide stream valleys, arresting the water and so collecting in its ponds the detritus swept down from the hills and from the upper reaches of the stream.

As this sediment gradually filled up the shallow ponds the beaver moved to other places, and when in time the dam broke down and the waters drained off a wide level meadow was left—the bottom of the old pond.

All over the continent in suitable localities, from Mexico north to the tree limit and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, this was going on century after century, and in this way no doubt were made vast areas of level meadow, whose origin is now unsuspected by the people who occupy them.—Forest and Stream.

PUZZLES IN NATURE.

Some of the Seeming Contradictions That Science Encounters.

The man of science, like the man of law, has brought before him many an anomaly; but, unlike the judge or the advocate, he knows that the contradictions he studies are only such in seeming. He feels confident that nature at the core is in agreement with herself. Any day, he believes, these apparent contradictions may be resolved into cases of detected law, not simple enough to disclose itself to aught but the most rigorous analysis.

In the realm of heat it seems that certain rules of radiation, conduction, boiling points and the like are general, not universal. In most cases they act as if alone; in a few cases their effect is masked by causes as yet not understood. Let a few cases as perplexing as that of the alloys under refrigeration be briefly recounted.

Common solder has a lower melting point than any of its ingredients. Sulphur fuses at 120 C. and thickens again at 220 C. When steel is heated and dipped into cold water it is hardened; the same treatment softens copper. While almost every substance expands with heat, rubber shrinks. In most cases electrical conductivity is impaired by increase of temperature, yet a carbon pencil rises to an almost threefold augmentation of conductivity when brought to incandescence in an electric lamp.

We may be well assured that when these anomalies are resolved the explanations will bear in their train other difficulties for research yet more subtle. Science never does worthier work than where, as here, she points to her own unfinished walls and bids the student as a privilege and a duty to supply their gaps as best he may.—George Iles.

"Old Moore."

"Old Moore," under whose name almanacs and prophecies have been appearing regularly for generations, was not a charlatan. His name was Henry Andrews. He was a bookseller of London, and, according to an old year book, "his prophecies were as much laughed at by himself as by the Worshipful Company of Stationers, for whom he manufactured them, in order to render Moore's almanac salable among the ignorant, in whose eyes a lucky hit covered a multitude of blunders." Andrews "had a very extraordinary genius for astronomy and was greatly esteemed for his integrity and modesty by every scientific man who was personally acquainted with him."

As Others See Us.

"And do the Americans shine in their conversation?" asks the interviewer of the foreigner who has returned to his native land.

"Let me tell you," replies the foreigner. "In mixed company the ladies assemble on one side of the room and all talk at once about cooks and dresses, and the men assemble at the other side of the room and talk about automobiles and money."

His Quest.

An Irishman whose wife was fond of moving from one house to another was met by a friend the other morning while walking behind a van load of household goods and saluted with: "Hello, Mick! Shifting again? Where might you be going this time?" "I don't know, begorra," said Mick. "I'm following the furniture to find out."

No Chance.

"Opportunity," remarked the boarder who is always quoting maxims, "knocks once at every man's door."

"It'll never knock at any door of mine," said the seedy boarder. "I sleep in an attic."

A man who shows no defects is a fool or a hypocrite whom we should mistrust.—Joubert.

WOMEN OF HOLLAND.

Dutch Feminine Costumes Are Too Complex For Words.

The women's costume is a trifle too complex for verbal description, as feminine belongings usually are, but the white lace cap which covers the head from eyebrows to nape of neck and from ear to ear, curving out in rounded wings on each side of her cheeks, is always a conspicuous and inevitable portion of a woman's attire. It may possibly be that on Sunday this cap is a trifle whiter or stiffer or daintier than on week days, but the difference is not very apparent.

The ladies assure us there is a vast difference in the quality of the net and the amount of handiwork employed, but the lens made no special note of that. In shape and outline the camera finds great distinction between these caps and those of Katwyk or Marken or Bois le Duc, but between Sunday and Monday caps in Volendam it records none whatever. For the rest of the costume feminine Holland asks above all things apparently a very flat, narrow chest surmounting enormous hips, and Volendam is no exception to this fashion rule. The invariable black "best waist" of the elder women is usually brightened by a square yoke of lighter color and material, and the dark apron or overskirt is topped by six inches or more of gay plaid or bright colored band worn over an underskirt of dull blue striped or black material and uncountable petticoats. About the throat a collar formed of many rows of heavy dark red coral beads is fastened by huge silver clasps, and the number of rows, the size and quality of the beads are matters for feminine pride. Long hair is not the glory of women in Holland, save perhaps at Marken. It is usually hidden and at Volendam is cut quite close and entirely covered by a tight fitting thick black silk cap concealed beneath the snowy white lace. The younger girls from the tiniest toddler to the young meisje, old enough to wed, wear dresses and caps the exact counterpart of their grave mothers and less full of skirt or narrow of chest, but much gayer in color. A group of tiny maidens in a stiff breeze on the dike resembles nothing more than a swarm of butterflies.—Florence Craig Albrecht in Scribner's.

York Ginger Ale

is made of ideally pure York Springs Water and sugar, with pure vegetable aromatics and Jamaica ginger-root. There is hardly another drink so allaying of thirst; and it is a mild and healthful stimulant.

The quality of the ginger and aromatics used accounts for the spicy pungency, the fragrant aroma, and the delicious flavor of York Ginger Ale. The purity of all the ingredients accounts for the good this beverage does people with weak stomachs.

But all ginger ale doesn't owe its flavor to ginger root. Too much of it gets pungency from cayenne pepper (capsicum).

Too much of it has the harsh, corrosiveness of vitriol, instead of the healthful acidity of lemons.

Some ginger ale is sickly-sweet with saccharine. The use of saccharine is prohibited in those countries where pure-food laws are enforced. Pure sugar, of the best quality, sweetens York Ginger Ale.

You run risks when you drink cayenne-peppered ginger ale—and the more of it you drink, the dryer your throat gets. It burns, not refreshes.

You run risks when you drink ginger ale dosed with glucose or sugar-substitutes,—upsets your digestion, affects your kidneys.

But you run no risk when you drink this pure, honest, wholesome York Ginger Ale, though you pay about the same for it as for spurious ginger ale. Look at the label so you can be sure you get the purest, most aromatic, most refreshing ginger ale made. It is safe to drink, inexpensive to buy, sure to satisfy, when it is labelled

Of Interest To Miners And Investers

The North Ontario Reduction & Refining Company, Limited, who are installing a plant for the refining of Cobalt and other ores at Sturgeon Falls, have their buildings, including a laboratory and sampling plant, just about completed, and have contracted for all their machinery, which will be installed as rapidly as possible. They expect to be ready to receive ore some time in June.

This is the first refining plant to be erected in the Province of Ontario, which should enable the Company to secure the bounty offered by the Ontario Government, which amounts to $165,000 a year, this will pay thirty per cent on the entire capital. In addition to the bounty, enormous profits made by refiners will enable the Company with its low capitalization to pay very large dividends.

We advise you to investigate this proposition. As a bona fide investment it has no equal. Prospectus and full information will be mailed on application to E. ASA BALL & CO., 609 Temple Bldg., Toronto. Members Standard Stock & Mining Exchange, 'Phone Main 2385.

No angels watch the golden stair,

And patronage but gives him pain.

Tread lightly, friends; led no rude sound
Disturb his solicitude profound:
Here let him live in calm repose,
Unsought except by men he owes.

And when he dies, go plant him deep
That nought may break his dreamless sleep;
Where no rude clamor may dispel
The quiet that he loved so well.

HUMOR

ANNIE'S SELF RESPECT.

New Servant Ranked Below the Dog and Couldn't Stand For It.

A lady who lives on the north side had occasion a few days ago to go through the ordeal of engaging a new housemaid. The young woman who had applied for the place was evidently not a native of the United States. In fact, it was apparent that she had been in this country only a little while.

"Can you cook?" asked the woman who expected to be the mistress in case they came to an agreement concerning terms.

"Yis, Oi can that."

"How about washing?"

"Well, ma'am, not sayin' annything ag'in the washin's you may have, Oi'd rather take less and let somebody else do it."

She was a pretty girl, with rather shapely hands, and it was hardly reasonable to blame her for desiring to preserve her beauty if arrangements could be effected that would make such a course possible. So it was decided that she might by accepting a dollar a week less than she would have otherwise received omit the washing.

There was some further questioning, which proceeded satisfactorily to both sides until the girl was asked why she had "left her last place."

"Well, Oi'm that ashamed Oi hardly like to tell you," she said.

This at once aroused suspicion on the other side, and of course negotiations could proceed no further until the matter was thoroughly explained.

"You'd 'a' done it yourself if you'd 'a' been in my place," said the girl.

"That doesn't matter. I must know just what the trouble was, or I cannot engage you."

"Well, if you must know, the missus had a little dog."

"Yes?"

"And Oi had to take it out every day for a walk."

"I should think you would have enjoyed getting out."

"I did. It wasn't that Oi had annything ag'in the dog or the fresh air, but she always made me go out the front door when I took the dog, but when Oi went out by meself or with anny of the young men that come afther me we had to leave be the back door, and me self rayspect wouldn't stand for it."

"Very well, Annie. You may bring your trunk around. We haven't any dog to be aired."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Arctic Attractions.

"I cannot imagine," said the woman with the short sleeves, "why in the world the Eskimos live in their country after they have learned what is to be had and seen in civilized places. Just think! They have no theaters, no hotels, no trains, no street cars, no shops, no schools, no churches, no clubs, no yachts, no scandals. They positively have nothing that we have."

"Possibly that is the reason they stay where they are," ventured the man with the dinner jacket.

His Admiration.

FALSE ALARM OF FIRE.

A Peril Always to Be Met Promptly on Board Ship.

It was on board the Northern Light, says Captain Osbon in "A Sailor of Fortune," that a false alarm of fire was sounded and disaster prevented only by prompt action. A passenger, looking down through the boiler hatch, saw the red painted boiler fronts and, seeing the flamelike color amid a cloud of steam, shouted, "Fire!" Immediately the whole vessel was in an uproar, and a dangerous panic was imminent. I was one of the underofficers.

The climax came when the quartermaster saw a minister of the gospel on the rail trying to lower the bow of one of the ship's boats. I ran to him and ordered him to come down on deck. The minister paid no attention, and I seized his coat tail to drag him down by force.

Perhaps it was an old coat, for the seams parted, and a second later I had the ministerial coat tail in my hands. He came down then. He was angry and was likewise a spectacle to look upon.

He started to call an indignation meeting, but most of the passengers had recovered from their fright by this time and were inclined to be merry at the reverend gentleman's expense.

He went raging to the captain, who summoned me to appear. I came, still carrying the coat tail in my hand.

"Mr. Osbon," he said, "what are your orders in case of a false alarm of fire?"

"My orders," I said, "are to stop it by any means necessary. I may knock a man down, throttle him or split him wide open."

The captain turned to the irate minister.

"Those are Mr. Osbon's orders," he said. "You are fortunate that it was only your coat that was split open."

The danger from the false alarm of fire on shipboard is second only to the real thing and is always a peril to be met promptly.

SPEED OF FISHES.

Tarpon, Shark and Mackerel Are the Swiftest of Swimmers.

When scientists desire to find out how fast a certain bird flies, it is necessary only to set up poles and note by stop watches the time the bird requires to cross the interval. The speed of fishes is more difficult to ascertain. Nevertheless, as the Saturday Evening Post explains, estimates have been made showing that the mackerel, considering its handicap in size, comes close to being the champion racer.

Unquestionably the mackerel travels sometimes as fast as an express train at high speed—say, at the rate of sixty or possibly seventy miles an hour. Other things being equal, the larger the fish the faster it swims, just as the huge steamboat is able to travel at a speed much greater than the little harbor tug.

Undoubtedly the energy employed by a fish of great size, such as a thirty foot shark, when traveling at its best gait is something tremendous. An ordinary tug, which represents a maximum of energy in a minimum of bulk, utilizes about 200 horsepower. Of course it is only a guess, but it would not seem to be over the mark to suppose that a seventy foot whale makes use of 500 horsepower when it propels its huge bulk through the water at a rate of thirty miles an hour.

A whale, which is a mammal and not a fish, might be compared to a freight train if the shark is a cannon ball express, but it can beat the fastest "ocean greyhound" in a speed contest.

The tarpon is probably faster than the shark. It is believed that a tarpon in a hurry can travel at the rate of eighty miles an hour.

An Interrogation.

While dining with friends in Cambridge, Bishop Phillips Brooks described with much enthusiasm a college service he had recently attended. "It was an inspiration to see all those young men singing so heartily. Especially they seemed to throw their whole souls into the hymn—

"Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the Lamb?

Even Dr. X., the president of the college, sang as if he felt the contagion of inspiration." "Dr. X. sang that?" broke in an incredulous listener. "Does Dr. X. believe that?" "Oh, no," replied Bishop Brooks quickly. "He was merely asking for information."

An Act of Heroism.

On one occasion General Lee, while making an observation, stepped to a somewhat exposed position to secure a better view and thus stood for a moment at personal risk when General Gracie, who was in the party, quietly stepped before General Lee without obscuring his view and remained thus covering the body of his superior until the fieldglass was lowered and the danger over—a simple, quiet act, but showing cool bravery and a self sacrificing spirit.

The Limit.

It was just a plain lying contest, but the prize was to go to the man who told his lie most briefly and casually.

"I came in on a suburban train this morning," said the prize winner, "and as I hastily flung up a car window"

INTENSIFIED FRUIT JUICES

AN IMPROVEMENT ON NATURE

A Discovery that is Revolutionizing Medicine.

Remarkable Success Attends the Finding of a New Medicinal Compound by Combining the Juices of Apples, Oranges, Figs and Prunes.

Fruit helps to keep one healthy. Fruit, in itself, will not cure disease. The medicinal principle—or that part of fruit which has a curative effect—is in such infinitesimal quantities, that it is unable to overcome a diseased condition of the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys or skin.

Just here is where science stepped in. An Ottawa physician did what nature could not do. He first found that some fruits were stronger medicinally than others—and that apples, oranges, figs and prunes contained all the healing properties of other fruits. There are two principles in fruit juices—bitter and sweet. After extracting the juices of the four fruits mentioned, this physician succeeded in replacing one atom of the sweet principle by one of the bitter. This resulted in an entirely new combination being formed. This new compound was many times more active medicinally than the fruit juices. Where eating fruit only helped to keep one well, this compound actually cured disease.

To make it more valuable still, this physician added the finest tonics and antiseptics, and then, by evaporating the entire compound to a powder, made it into tablets.

This, in short, is the method of making "Fruit-a-tives"—these wonderful tablets — the most reliable cure for Constipation, Biliousness, Stomach Troubles, Kidney and Bladder Disease and Skin Affections. Being made from fruit, "Fruit-a-tives" may be taken by women and children without fear of ill-effect.

Don't take a substitute. If your druggist does not handle them, send 50c for a box to Fruit-a-tives Limited Ottawa.

the Archbishop of Paris and the saintly Bishop of Bordeaux, then in the capital, had been invited by the King's confessor to come to Versailles. Towards dawn the doctors reported that His Majesty had been twice bled, that he had rallied for an hour and then slowly slipped back into virtual unconsciousness. Unless—unless, the whispers ran, a change for the better came soon, France would have a new king.

And Madame de Pompadour? Her name was on every one's lips. A new king! Would it be the Bastile or Vincennes for the grisette then? Fierce joy throbbed in the Queen's apartments when the rumor was confirmed that Madame de Pompadour, on hearing of her royal lover's illness, had at once hurried to his room, but that the door had been shut in her face, by whose orders no one knew, nor whether it was with the King's consent or not. What was certain was that the King's confessor had refused to prepare his Sovereign for absolution so long as he remained in mortal sin, and that the Archbishop of Paris and the Bishop of Bordeaux would, without doubt presently support the confessor. The dramatic scene at Metz was in fact repeating itself at Versailles. The King must be reconciled to his Queen and wife, must confess his sin, and promise to dismiss the partner in his guilt from his Court and his presence before he could receive the most solemn ministrations of the Church. And when Queen Marie Leczinska's ladies were aware that their royal mistress had on her own initiative gone to her husband's sick couch, had been admitted, and had not yet returned, a sigh of thankfulness, exultation, and vengeance went up. The hours of Madame de Pompadour's supremacy were numbered. A just Heaven had intervened. Madame de Pompadour was doomed.

By nine o'clock next morning the noblesse had flocked, or were still flocking, in crowds from Paris to Versailles, thirsting for news, pining for revenge, on the tiptoe of excitement. The court-yards and stables were blocked with their carriages and every minute brought fresh arrivals. The Oeil de Boeuf was filled with officers, nobles, clerics, officials, who overflowed into the Galerie des Glaces, in the noble windows of which chattered groups of eager questioners. In the Oeil de Boeuf itself the subdued babble of talk rose and fell, but all eyes were alertly watching the white and gold doors so jealously kept by the Swiss Guards. Beyond was the royal bedchamber, but what was passing within who could say? The physicians had forbidden the entree to every one save the King's valet, a couple of menial servants, the royal confessor, and now the Bishop of Bordeaux. How critical affairs were reckoned to have become could be judged by the presence of the Chevalier de St. Amant, the Duke of Pontchartrain, and the Comte de Mont Rouge, who had dared thus to defy the exile imposed by the sick King.

"I t'tell you," Des Forges was saying, "he s-saw a d-devil and f-fainted. I d-don't w-wonder."

"It was n't a devil nor the devil; it was a woman," the Abbe corrected. "Some women are devils, but all devils are not women. That is logic and truth together, which is rare."

"Yes, it was a woman," Mont Rouge added. "A woman in the shape of a vampire."

"It was only a flower girl," Pontchartrain laughed, and he threw in a ribald story which set his hearers choking with laughter.

"Well, when he was bled the blood came out black——"

"No, no; purple"—"yellow"—"blue"—corrected half a dozen voices, and each had a witness who had seen the bleeding and could swear to the color: and so the speculation as [illegible] causes of the King's illness gai[illegible]. The most extraordinary theories were afloat, for that the King had "seen something" was now a matter of common knowledge. But all were agreed on one point—Madame de Pompadour's fate was sealed. Whether the King recovered or whether the Dauphin succeeded him the grisette was ruined.

Andre had hurried from the Queen's antechamber to learn what could be learned. A glimpse of Denise's proud, pale face had been granted him as his spurs rang along the galleries. He had read in it pity wrestling with joy, and his soul was bitter within him. And the cold glances, the silence of his friends if he drew near, the shrugs of the shoulders, completed the tale. He, too, was ruined if the Court could have its way. His foes, though they had not published their evidence yet, could prove that he was the ally of Madame de Pompadour. His success inspired their jealousy, his ability their fear. They had tried to murder him in order to procure the final damning proof, and they had failed. But he could never be forgiven for the humiliation of the Duke of Pontchartrain, and Mont Rouge's arm, not yet healed, cried out for vengeance. To-morrow it would be his turn for exile to Nerac, stripped of his honors, happy if permitted to eat his heart out in a debt-loaded chateau far from Paris and Versailles. Andre had played for a great stake; he had been within an ace of winning and now he had lost. Yet alone, shunned, neglected in this seething crowd, he found himself despising as he had never despised before the noblesse to which he belonged. The Court of a dying king does not show even an ancient and haughty nobility, justly proud of its manners and its refinement, at its best. Of the hundreds here were there any who felt any pity, any real affection, for the Sovereign over whose vices they were jesting, at whose weaknesses they jibed? Ambition, curiosity, greed, avarice, jealousy, could be read in many faces; the noblesse were here to worship and honor the rising sun, to flatter the Dauphin, to intrigue, to traffic at the foot of a new throne in the squalid and sleepless scuffle for places, pensions, ribbons, honors, power. Andre turned away and gazed out of the window, at the serenely noble gardens where the autumn sun was shining on the autumn trees, on the dewy grass, and gleaming statues. Yes, the peace of Nerac near the Loire would be welcome, though bought by failure in this Court of Versailles. But there remained "No. 101," and the fascination of that unsolved riddle gripped him to-day more mercilessly than ever before. The key to the mystery was so near. Was he, too, like all the others, to be baffled? And then there was Denise. He could have had her love; never could he forget that supreme moment when they had stood hand in hand, and life had given him all that a man's soul could dream or desire; but he had lost Denise. Had he? Ah, had he? And as he stared out towards the Fountain of Neptune the gardens melted into a dark and secret staircase, and once again he heard the beating of the heart of the Pompadour. The vision filled him with a great pity. She was no worse than he had been. There were women in this Court—did he of all men not know it?—on whose carriages glowed coronets and haughty coats of arms, with as little right to absolution as Madame de Pompadour and the dying King. But they confessed and were absolved. Confession and absolution! The mummery of priests. She at least had sinned from ambition, because the flesh and the spirit would not permit her to remain Antoinette de Poisson. But she was a bourgeoise and they were noble. For all that, could understand—would the world ever understand before it judged the heart of such a woman as the Pompadour? To him, perhaps, alone some of the inscrutable riddles of the spirit had been revealed because his heart, too, beat as hers did, and assuredly to that hated and feared woman to-day the bitterness of death would be sweet and welcome compared with the bitterness—the tragic bitterness—of failure. God alone—if there was a God—could know all and judge aright. For her and for him, in this hour of defeat, a great pity was surely fittest.

No one came to speak to him. The renegade Vicomte de Nerac, alone there in the window, scarcely moved even compassion. He had deserted his order; he deserved punishment—to be an example to traitors who betrayed their dignity—and the punishment had begun. No one? Yes, one; the Chevalier de St. Amant. Andre was surprised—touched.

"Pardon my presumption," the young man said, "but you and I, Vicomte, have more than once crossed swords. I at least have done my best to defeat you; you have done yours to defeat me."

"Certainly," Andre admitted readily.

"And you have won."

"Have I?" Andre smiled as he looked down the crowded Galerie des Glaces and back at the empty space where they stood.

"Yes, Vicomte, you are victor." His tones trembled with emotion. "Victor in the one prize that matters—a woman's heart. Do not you forget that. I at least cannot."

Andre looked into his eyes, but he said nothing.

"Whether," the Chevalier continued, "I go to Italy or you go to Nerac is a little thing; but the other is a great thing; and the result will always be what it is—always. It has been a fair fight if fights for a woman's love can ever be fair. Will you give me the pleasure of shaking hands?"

"Yes," Andre answered, with much emotion. "And if I am not sent to Nerac you shall not go to Italy."

"We will see." The Chevalier had resumed his jesting tone, for they were both being jealously watched. He nodded and slipped away. André, muttering, "Always, always," slipped away, too. "Always." Was Denise still to be won, or why had a tear stood in the boy's eye when he had spoken?

"Madame!" he cried, aghast, as he stepped into the Marquise de Pompadour's salon.

She was sitting in her peignoir in front of the fire, her hair about her lovely shoulders, staring at the smouldering logs. Trunks half packed littered the room. Papers torn up and drawers half open met the eye in every corner. And when she wearily turned round at his exclamation her face was the face of a woman sleepless, haggard, and worn—the face of one quieted by fear, misery, and failure.

"Ruined, Vicomte," she murmured hopelessly, "ruined, and you, too."

"Not yet," he answered, with such poor courage as he could summon.

She flung back her hair and pointed at him with a bare arm. "Look in the glass, miserable fellow-gambler; your eyes are as mine, hunted by despair and defeat, and we are both right. My God, have I ever passed such a night? And unless I am gone from this palace in six hours—oh, they have warned me—I shall sleep in a cell at Vincennes. Courage, pshaw! The King alone could save me and I have lost him for ever."

"Are you sure?"

She waved the question on one side. "It is a plot," she cried passionately, "a plot of my enemies. They tried to murder you and they failed. Now this—this is their last device. They have poisoned the King, that his sick body may fall into the hands of the priests, who will torture his soul till they have frightened him into dismissing me. What can one woman do against the Church, whose bishops keep mistresses as the King does? Nothing, nothing. I am ruined. I fly from here that I may leave Versailles free. Do you save yourself. I can protect you no longer. Give me up, go back to the Court, trample on the unfortunate—it is not too late for you. Even my wenches know that, and dare to insult me."

"No, Madame, I will not give you up."

"Poor, mad fool!" But the sudden, radiant flush in that haggard face would have inspired a man under sentence of death to hope and joy.

"And I will save you yet, Marquise."

She looked at him, fixedly. "Vicomte," she moaned, with an exceeding bitter cry, "save me. Yes, save me, I implore you."

Her helplessness and her misery, she, who twenty-four hours ago had been the Queen of Love to the Sovereign of France, did not appeal in vain.

"The King may recover," he said, "do not fly yet. If in twelve hours I do not return you will never see me again. Then, but not till then, for God's sake save yourself, Madame."

"You have a clue—know something?"

"Adieu."

She strove to keep him, but he bowed himself resolutely out, and he knew she had flung herself back into that chair in front of the fire to watch her fortunes and her ambitions flicker out with the dying flames in the remorseless march of the hours.

This time he boldly left by the public entrance.

Twelve hours! Twelve hours! he had no clue, no information. He had spoken from the infatuation of sheer pity; alas! he had nothing but a fierce and meaningless resolve.

"Andre," called softly a voice he knew only too well. Denise was standing in the empty gallery, and in her eyes there was something of the hunted despair and fear Madame de Pompadour had read in his. "Andre, you have been to see her?"

"Yes."

"She is ruined." She paused. "And they will ruin you too. Let me save you; I can."

"No," he said, very quietly, "you cannot." Denise looked at him, trembling. "You can only save me if I now at once go on my knees to my foes. To you I would gladly do it, for I have wronged you, and I love you, but to them, never! never!"

Her head bowed in appealing silence.

"The Marquise de Pompadour," he drew himself up, "the Marquise honored me with her friendship when she was powerful. Now that she is fallen and in misery I will not be such a dastard as to save myself by helping to ruin her. No, I will not!"

"You are mad," she cried incoherently. But his chivalry fired her heart.

"You must do as you think right, Denise," he said gently, "and so must I. It is cruel for me—how cruel—no, I must not speak." He broke off and returned to the Oeil de Boeuf.

The crowd was denser than ever. Monsieur le Dauphin had just passed through the heated, suffocating room and was now in the royal bed-chamber. Suddenly the subdued babel of tongues ceased as if by magic. The doors were opening. Dukes, ministers, nobles, lackeys pushed and fought to get to the front. The King was dead! Resolutely the Swiss Guards stemmed the surging tide. Ha! the King's physician. Dead silence.

"Nobles of the realm, and gentlemen," cried the physician, "I am happy to say that the sacred person of His Majesty is no longer in danger." A dull roar as of inarticulate wild beasts rose and fell. "With God's help the King of France will, we trust, be shortly restored to perfect health."

"It is now or never," he whispered savagely to the Duke of Pontchartrain.

"Yes, now or never," smiled the Duke, "for I prefer the society of the ladies of Versailles and Paris to that of the drabs and bigots of Pontchartrain."

CHAPTER XXV.

The excitement was rather increased than diminished by the report of the King's recovery. Indeed, throughout, men's and women's thoughts were absorbed far more feverishly with the fortunes of Madame de Pomdadour than with those of Louis himself. A palace revolution was what was desired, vengeance on the woman who had threatened to become dictator, a happy return to the old order; and the King's illness was only important as the extraordinary miracle which would accomplish what was so passionately prayed for. The noble gentlemen and ladies spent the next hour in agitating suspense. And when it was reported that the King had rallied so marvellously as to be out of bed, to eat and to talk, the high hopes sank. Another miracle had supervened to undo the work of the first.

"A fig for miracles," said Pontchartrain. "Voltaire and the philosophers are right; they are either stupid, useless, or meaningless. We can get on so much better without them."

The "saints" of the circle in the Queen's ante-chamber were inexpressibly shocked. And they sighed at the inscrutable and irritating way in which things in this world were ordered by Providence.

"Your theology, my dear Duke," savours of bourgeois vulgarity and ignorance. Heaven will only help those who help themselves. That woman must be ruined before the King is well enough to become insane again. If we can only drive her from the palace today she will never return."

"And," Mont Rouge added significantly, "there is a pleasant pit into which we can drive her. The fall will break her charming neck." He began to explain very earnestly his scheme, which was listened to with the most eager attention.

"We have her," he wound up, triumphantly. "I shall not spend the winter at Mont Rouge."

The next news was very inspiriting. The King, on the advice of his physicians, was to leave Versailles for Rambouillet, where change of air and, presently, some of his favorite hunting would completely restore his health. He was to leave that afternoon, accompanied only by his confessor, his physician, and half a dozen servants.

"Poor fellow," commented Pontchartrain, "how bored he will be. I suppose they left out his wife because there are limits to what husbands can endure. You agree, ma mignonne?" He kissed his Duchess's hands.

"Yes, because there are no limits, mon cher," she retorted, "to what wives must endure."

"Ah, we shall make you a vulgar and ignorant philosopher yet, chere amie. And, as His Majesty said to the grisette, yours is an education which promises me infinite amusement."

But the best part of the new information had still to come. Madame de Pompadour had tried again to see the King, but His Majesty had listened to his confessor's warning and refused. The doctors, too, had forbidden any such interviews. The King must on no account be excited or annoyed. Physicians and priests alike had their cue from the ministers; and the King, subject all his life to fits of gloomy remorse and superstition, was again ready, after his illness, to listen to the solemn remonstrances from the Church on his evil life. Nor did the Court know that the memory of the apparition, which had been the cause of his collapse, had played its part in strengthening his determination to free himself of Madame de Pompadour.

"She, too, must leave Versailles," St. Benoit urged. "Mont Rouge has shown us how we can complete the victory once we have driven her out. When the King returns from Rambouillet he must find her fled and then—" He and they all smiled. As soon as the King could bear exciting news there would be exciting news for him with a vengeance.

Denise had so far listened in silence. She now made a suggestion: "Can we not frighten her away?" she said. "If

HON. H. R. EMMERSON

Director of Record Foundry Co.

There are few men in the Maritime Provinces, or, for that matter, anywhere in Canada, better known to the public than the Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Minister of Railways and Canals.

Hon. Mr. Emmerson is a son-in-law of the late Charles B. Record, who, some 75 years ago established the Record Foundry and Machine Co., at Moncton, N.B., and is a heavy stockholder and a director therein. He is responsible for much of the untiring energy which has advanced this concern to a front rank in Canadian industries. The Record Foundry and Machine Co. now have works at Montreal and Moncton, and have also sales branches at Moncton, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

BURNING MARTYRS.

Cost of the Funeral Pyres Told in a Curious Old Bill.

A bill for the materials with which to burn Cranmer and his fellow martyrs is probably the most curious and suggestive document ever presented for payment. The execution of Latimer and Ridley took place on Oct. 16, 1555, while Cranmer did not suffer until March 21 of the following year.

The memorandum of the bill is included in the book which was found by Strype when he wrote his "Memoirs of Archbishop Cranmer" in 1693, in which the expenses of the martyrs were entered during their imprisonment. This book is probably somewhere among the manuscripts of Oxford university, now a grim matter of fact witness to the fanatical hatred of the day.

The following are exact transcripts from the bills by the person who had charge of the funeral pyres:

"Paid for the burning of Archbishop Cranmer and his two fellow sufferers, Ridley and Latimer: For one hundred of wood fagots, 6s.; for one hundred and a half of furze fagots, 3s. 4d.; to the carriage of them, 8d.; to two laborers, 1s. 4d.; to three loads of wood fagots to burn Ridley and Latimer, 12s.; item, one load of furze fagots, 3s. 4d.; for carriage of these four loads, 2s.; item, a post, 1s. 4d.; item, for chains, 3s. 4d.; item, for staples, 6d.; item, for laborers, 4d."

REAL COUNTRY LIFE.

Why the American Farmer Grows Old Early in Life.

Any one who has lived on a farm does not need to be told the reason farmers grow old early, for he knows of the strain under which the American farmer lives during the five months of spring and summer. His workday is from 4 or 5 in the morning until 8 or 9 at night, including chores—fifteen to seventeen hours of the hardest kind of physical labor, and every minute of it at high tension, especially during harvest. Then comes a period of relaxation in the fall, the one time in the year when he has just enough muscular exercise to keep him in health; later, the winter season, approaching stagnation, in which he takes on flesh, gets "logy," and then a furious debauch of hard labor through the spring and summer again. No or has "a weak back," or his "heart gives out," or a chill "makes him rheumatic," and when you add to this furious muscular strain the fact that the farmer sees his income put in peril every season and his very home every bad year, so that each unfavorable change in the weather sets his nerves on edge, it can be readily imagined that the real "quiet, peaceful country life" is something sadly different from the ideal.—Woods Hutchinson, M. D., in Harper's.

An Optical Illusion.

An interesting optical experiment may be made with the ordinary incandescent light. Gaze steadily at the light for a few seconds, then suddenly extinguish it. The experiment is best performed in a very dark room. In about half a minute you will see the perfect image of the light, with the fine strands of wire plainly visible. It will be red at first. In a few minutes it will turn purple and then a bright blue. Later it will apparently move to the right. As you turn your gaze it will continue moving to the right. If you keep your gaze fixed, it will come back. It is surprising how long the illusion will last. It will be seen for fully five minutes, perhaps longer, and if you turn on the light and look away from it you will see the old image for several minutes, though more faintly than in the darkness.

POLITICAL SPIES.

They Are Quite Common All Over the Continent of Europe.

On the continent of Europe it is quite a common thing for royal personages to be subjected to espionage, mainly, of course, for political reasons.

In France, Spain, Russia, Germany and Austria the practice obtains. At one time during the reign of Napoleon III. a small army of political spies was engaged in watching royal subjects. In fact, the vigilance of the different parties was so great that there were three or four distinct secret services. The emperor had his; the empress had hers; the government and the republicans respectively had theirs—all employed to watch the other parties and their spies.

Moreover, Bismarck had his spy over the emperor. So that France was overridden by spies, the most important, however, being Bismarck's, to whom the war was indeed to a great extent due.

This secret service agent was a German doctor, whose advice the unfortunate emperor even preferred to that of his own court physicians, and thus Bismarck knew even better than Napoleon the real state of the latter's health, which was, of course, a very important factor in the political situation at those times.

Lincoln and a Suit of Clothes.

On one occasion a judge was ill and, being unable to sit in a case, delegated Lincoln to hear the matter. The account of a guardian was in question. He had paid $28 for a suit of clothes for his ward and justified it on the ground that it was a necessary expense. Lincoln held against the guardian on the ground that it was an extravagant expenditure and in passing on the case stated that he had never in his life owned a suit of clothes that cost $28.

Wasn't Sure.

"Remember," said the lawyer, "you have undertaken to tell nothing but the truth."

"I'll do my best," answered the expert witness, "but I won't know how far I have succeeded until I'm through with the cross examination."

JOSEPH SOLD BY HIS BRETHERS — GOLDEN TEXT: "FOR WHERE ENVYING AND STRIFE IS, THERE IS CONFUSION AND EVERY EVIL WORK."

Historical Setting.

Time.—Considering Jacob to have remained in Padan-aram forty years, Joseph's capture would be in about B. C. 1729, eleven years after Jacob's return.

Place.—Hebron, the home of Isaac and Jacob, twenty miles south of Jerusalem. Shechem, in Samaria, fifty miles north of Hebron. Dothan, twelve miles north of Shechem.

Persons.—Isaac was a blind, feeble old man, 168 years old; twelve years before his death. Jacob was about 108 years old, with twelve sons and one or more daughters. Joseph, who had left Padan-aram when he was about seven years old, was now seventeen. Benjamin was ten or eleven years old.

After his reconciliation with Esau, Jacob moved on alone, with his family. He finally settled in Hebron, south of Jerusalem, where Isaac died at the age of 180. On the journey thither Rachel, the beloved, passed, and the cloud of that grief never lifted from Jacob's life. But another heavy grief was added, a family torn by dissension, the hatred of Joseph's brothers toward that best-loved son. Joseph, from this point, occupies the centre of the stage.

Joseph, whose name means "May God add," was born in Padan-aram seventeen years before the time of this lesson. He was Rachel's youngest son, and inherited from her a beauty of face, of manner and of character, which had the profoundest influence upon his fortunes. At the same time, from his father Jacob and his grandmother Rebekah the lad inherited quickness of intellect, readiness to grasp advantages, the marked ability to get on in the world.

5. And Joseph dreamed a dream: Robert Bird imagines that this dream came to the lad one night after "they had all been at work in the fields at Mamre, cutting down the yellow wheat. As he toiled in the very hot sunshine his brothers were constantly finding fault with him, and speaking roughly to him."

7. We were binding sheaves in the field: "It appears from this that Jacob was not a mere nomad, but like his father Isaac (Gen. 26, 12) had adopted agricultural as well as pastoral employments." And, lo. "The 'lo' and 'behold' repeated in his narration shows that he had a presentiment of something great." The bowing of their sheaves before his was a token that they were to acknowledge him as their superior, as actually happened years afterward in Egypt.

8. They hated him yet the more for his dreams. The superstition of the times attached great importance to dreams. The brothers would think it "neither right nor seemly that the lad should thus dream about his own advancement at their expense, and yet the belief of the age forced them to believe that the dreams might yet prove true." "The fact that neither the princely dress nor the confident dreams excited their ridicule, but that both excited their hate, shows that they saw the appropriateness of the dress, and already felt in Joseph a superiority which lent significance to the dreams."

9. And he dreamed yet another dream. "In Joseph's history the dreams are always double." Joseph was born in a land where the wise men studied the stars with especial assiduity, and where every one believed that they controlled human destiny. "He had often lain upon his back by the camp fire, when the nights were warm and lovely, gazing up at the throng of dazzling stars until he seemed to be up among them, and could clasp a hundred shining worlds in his arms." The sun. Jacob, his father. The moon. His mother. Probably this has reference to Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid, who after Rachel's death may have acted as mother to Joseph. And the eleven stars. The eleven brothers.

10. And he told it. "Had Joseph been but a little older, and had he been, but once or twice at Dotham, he would have hidden his dreams in his heart like so many guilty secrets. But, innocent child that he was, he must up and out of his bed and tell all his dreams to all the house." His father rebuked him. "In making the sun and moon bow down before him, Joseph's dream seemed to violate the respect due to parents."

11. And his brethren envied him. This envy, which was the cause of all the sorrow that followed, sprung in part from Jacob's foolish partiality, in part from Joseph's imprudent but innocent boasting, but most of all from the hatred which evil-minded men feel for the pure and upright.

12. His brethren went to feed their father's flock in Shechem. Jacob's sons had conquered Shechem, as is told in Genesis 34; but the family must have been very powerful to venture to send their flock sixty miles from the home in Hebron. However, in that place after what had happened, they must have been surrounded by enemies, and Jacob might well have feared for their welfare, and wish to be assured of their safety.

13. And he said to Him, Here am I. "In the flash of a thought he realized the perils of the mission—perils of wild beasts, perils in the lonely nights, perils among false brethren, who bitterly hated him." But Joseph's reply was prompt, full of trusting obedience and manly courage.

14. And he came to Shechem. "For three days he traveled on, now climbing up steep stony paths in the bare hot hills, now urging his camel into a long swinging trot over level ground, now going down into glens, wading across streams, climbing up again, and pausing on the high land with his hand shading his eyes, to take a long view of the country beyond, and see which way the road went. At night he slept sometimes with noisy merchants in an open court, which was the only inn for travelers at a village: sometimes among the black tents of friendly shepherds."

17. Not finding his brothers at Shechem, Joseph wandered about till he met some one who told him where they had gone. Pursuing this fortunate information, he found them in Dothan. This place, where Elisha afterwards struck the Syrian army with blindness, is twelve miles north of Shechem. It still bears its ancient name (being called Tell Dothan), meaning "two wells," and the wells are still there. One of them is called "the well of the pit." The pastures of the plain of Dothan are to this day the best and freshest in time of drought.

18. And when they saw him afar off. As Joseph descended the ridge which bounds the plain of Dothan on the south his figure would stand out against the sky-line, and would be marked by the keen eyes of the shepherds. They conspired against him to slay him. Evil thoughts in the heart take the first opportunity to get themselves carried out in action.

19. Behold this dreamer cometh. A contemptuous phrase, "This lord of dreams," "master of dreams."

22. The first savage plan, to kill Joseph outright, was frustrated by more horrible death of slow starvation, it was really with the purpose of coming back later and delivering Reuben While he proposed the still his brother. But how much more noble he would have appeared if he had not tried this underhanded and ineffective method, but boldly rebuked his brothers' cruelty, and shamed them from their murderous purpose! Cast him into this pit. "Underground cisterns abounded in Palestine, and when dry, were so often used for a dungeon—escape from them being impossible, from their frequently bottlelike shape—that the Hebrew word for them also means a prison. Jeremiah's prison was such a place. That is in the wilderness. "Reuben apparently pointed to some cistern in the desolate region which girds the little valley of Dothan around."

23. They stript Joseph out of his coat. The hated token of superiority and favoritism was to be shown their father to deceive him.

24. And cast him into a pit. Thousands of such cisterns still exist in upper Galilee, excavated out of the solid rock or built of stones and plastered, to hold rain water in that dry climate. They are "trap-like" and deceptive cisterns, the mouths of which are about the size of the coal-hole in the pavement of a London street, of a demijohn shape, and with smooth sides, from which escape would be hopeless." The pit was empty. The bottom, however, was doubtless full of slimy and foul-smelling mud. "In such a place he was left to die under the ground, sinking in the mire, his flesh creeping at the touch of unseen slimy creatures in darkness alone."

25. They sat down to eat bread. Doubtless they feasted on the very dainties their father had sent them by the hand of Joseph. This heartless merrymaking went on while their brother's cries were sounding from his prison. Afterwards, when they in turn were in prison in Egypt, they remembered how they "saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought them, and they would not hear." See Gen. 42; 21. And, behold, a (travelling) company. A caravan of traders, of Ishmaelites. "A term used in a generalized sense, for denote itinerant caravan-traders in general." From Gilead: A country abounding in spices. Down to Egypt. One of the main roads to Egypt still passes through Dothan, by way of Philistia, to the Nile delta. The gum tragacanth ("spicery") and the laudanum ("myrrh") were used in Egypt for embalming, and the balsam ("balm") of frankincense for the temples.

26. And Judah said. Perhaps his brother's cries had moved his conscience. What profit is it. They would get no gain from Joseph's death, for Jacob would only transfer his affections to Benjamin.

27. His brethren were content "hearkened unto him." Their guilt was not palliated, for slavery was generally worse than death; they merely added greed to murder.

28. Midianites. "The trading company must have been of mixed origin, Ishmaelites and Midianites preponderating; some of them probably, cousins of Joseph himself." Sold Joseph. "The slaves of Syria were highly prized, especially when they were handsome and intelligent; and the trader in spicery was also a trader in slaves." "Modern Ishmaelites would not now hesitate to make just such a purchase, and actually do so in certain parts of the country." For twenty pieces of silver. Probably in rings, for money then was weighed and not coined. Each piece was a shekel, worth about sixty cents; and money had ten times its modern purchasing power. Thirty shekels appears to have been the normal value of a slave (Ex. 21: 32), so that the slave traders probably made at least fifty per cent. on Joseph.

Gen. 37: 29.30. Reuben was not present during this sale of Joseph. He probably went to another part of the field to tend the sheep and to draw the rest away from the pit, that he might return and rescue Joseph. When he learned what had been done his grief was great, and was doubtless increased by the thought that a little more manliness on his part might have prevented the terrible deed.

The artifice by which the brothers successfully sought to deceive their father as to the cause of Joseph's non-appearance was just such a trick as Jacob himself had played on his father in the matter of the birthright. It was completely successful, and the wretched men were compelled to witness for years the heavy sorrow of the bereaved parent. That sight must have touched their savage natures, and prepared them for profiting by the events that followed.

WINS SUIT AGAINST I.O.F.

Society Refuses to Pay Alleging False Representation.

Rochester, N.Y., April 20.—A supreme court jury yesterday awarded Mrs. Theresa Bossenbach a verdict for $2,000 against the Supreme Council Independent Order of Foresters; the amount of a policy on the life of her brother, William Marzhauser, of whom she was the beneficiary. The case has been in litigation six years.

The fraternal order refused to pay the policy on the ground that Marzhauser concealed his true habits, alleging that he was a drinking man, while representing himself to be a total abstainer.

No License For Algonquin.

Toronto, April 20.—Premier Whitney stated in the Legislature on Thursday night that even if there were a hotel in Algonquin Park the Government would not issue a license to it.

The question was raised by G. S. May, who asked whether a permit would be issued to erect a summer hotel there, without which visitors were not attracted.

Twenty Thousand Homeless.

Manila, April 20.—The Town of Iloilo, Island of Panay, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday morning, with the result that 20,000 persons are homeless. The conflagration is still raging and, owing to the heavy wind blowing, it is beyond control.

The library of the Vatican is the successor of the Roman Imperial library, founded by Augustus, and contains manuscripts that were written during the later empire.

A Pretty Fancy.

The Lithuanian mythology says of life and death: "When a child is born the 'verpeja' spins a thread and hangs a star at its end. On the approach of death this thread of destiny breaks and the star falls headlong to the earth and is extinguished."

Dominos.

Two persons playing dominos ten hours a day and making four moves each minute could continue playing 118,000 years without exhausting all the combinations of the game.

Curiosity.

Curiosity is a thing that makes us look over other people's affairs and overlook our own. Xenocrates, reprehending curiosity, said, "It is as rude to intrude into another man's house with your eyes as with your feet."

Whalebone.

The whalebone of commerce is simply the baleen plates which take the place of teeth in certain species of whales.

Cotton.

Cotton has been cultivated since time out of memory. One of the presents received by Jacob, Joseph's father, from the royal hand of Pharaoh was a cotton rope.

Grass Nesters.

Among the large variety of birds which are to be found on the islands to the south of New Zealand is a species of paroquet, which is very plentiful. These islands do not contain a single stick of bush of any description, and the birds build their nests in the grass. They are not to be found in any other part of the world.

Spartan Women.

The Spartan women at certain games laid hold of old bachelors, dragged them round their altars and inflicted on them various marks of infamy and disgrace.

Borax Curd Soap.

Borax curd soap is very convenient in the household. It is made as follows: Dissolve three ounces of borax in two quarts of warm water; add to this two pounds of best yellow soap sliced fine; stir altogether in a warm place until all is melted, stirring occasionally. When it is cool it will form a jelly. One tablespoonful will make a strong lather in a gallon of water.

Many ancient records have been preserved on bricks, tiles, tablets of various substances and on oyster and other shells.

Water at high temperature cannot be raised any considerable distances by suction, as the vapor discharged from the water so heated follows the receding pistons of the pump and resists the entrance of the water. MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve, the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

INDIGESTION CURED

BY DR. WILLIAMS PINK PILLS AFTER SIX DOCTORS HAD FAILED TO BE OF BENEFIT.

That gnawing pain in the stomach, sometimes shooting up into the chest, often producing a choking sensation in the throat; fierce pains around the heart; a feeling of drowsiness and a distaste for food—that's indigestion. Its victims are numbered by the thousands. To them life is a burden. Dr. Williams Pink Pills have done more towards relieving this suffering than any other medicine. Often they have cured after all other help had failed, as in the case of Mr. Willis Herman, of St. Catharines, Ont., who says:—"I had been afflicted with indigestion and stomach trouble for years. At times my suffering was almost indescribable. Sometimes for whole days I was unable to touch food. I dieted and at different times was treated by six doctors but they did not help me; I only grew worse. For a time I was living in New York and while there consulted a specialist but he was unable to give me any relief. I then decided to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills and in less than a month I felt some relief. I continued their use for a couple of months longer and gained in weight; my appetite improved; the pains left me, and I now feel better than I have at any time during the past twenty-five years. I will always gladly recommend Dr. Williams Pink Pills to other sufferers, believing that they will surely do for others what they have done for me."

When you use Dr. Williams Pink Pills as a blood builder and nerve tonic you are not experimenting—they have been tried and proved successful in thousands of cases. It is their power to actually make new, rich, red blood that enables them to cure such troubles as anaemia, indigestion, rheumatism, kidney trouble, St. Vitus' dance, partial paralysis and those special ailments of girlhood and womanhood that cause so much misery. For sale by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CANADIAN INDUSTRIES PAY.

Another Successful Year of a Leading Canadian Manufactory.

Montreal, Jan. 19.—The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Slater Shoe Company was held at their offices in Montreal a few days ago. The address of the President laid stress on the continuous upward progress of the Company's business since the standard price Slater Shoe became the feature of their business.

The Slater Shoe Company were the first Canadian manufacturers to adopt newspaper advertising as an adjunct to the more economical selling of their goods. In five years their business has more than doubled. In 1906 the increase over 1905 was exactly $200,000. While this year achieves the largest gross increase in a single year, it is also by far the largest percentage of increase in twelve months. The orders for the first two months of their present fiscal year exceed those of the corresponding months of the previous year by $159,000.

Ninety-eight new agencies were opened by the Company during the year. Orders came unsolicited from many foreign countries, including South Africa, the West Indies and from Newfoundland. The President pointed out the need for more factory accommodation. "We have outgrown our present quarters," he said. The directors arranged to hold a special meeting to deal with factory requirements and extension.

The financial report of the Secretary-Treasurer, with the dividend declaration of 7 per cent. on both preferred and common stock, and a substantial balance added to the rest account, was received with approval by the shareholders.

The Board of Directors were elected as follows: Charles E. Slater (President), William Starke (Vice-President), Anson McKim, J. N. McKim, W. F. Borland, William Smith, J. W. [illegible]

J. J. Haines, Belleville, Ont.

A Pleasant Gathering.

An entertainment was held last evening in the Sunday School rooms of the Tabernacle church, under the auspices of the Mission Band. There was a good attendance and the programme, consisting of vocal and musical selections, drills, recitations, etc., was much enjoyed. Rev. G. Brown, pastor, presided over the gathering.

End Of the Skylark.

The Kingston Whig has the following about the Skylark, which will be remembered as the private yacht of Mr. H. Corby in this city. She was sold by Mr. Corby to Hon. The Skylark will be turned into a house boat for Ira

Died In The Hospital

MR. THOMAS SULLIVAN, OF KINGSTON, MET HIS DEATH HERE WHILE ON A VISIT.

Mr. Thomas Sullivan, who was known to many in the city, died last evening at the hospital here. Some six weeks ago the deceased went to the hospital for treatment and appeared to be improving, but yesterday a change for the worse occurred and death resulted. Mr. Sullivan was 55 years of age and was born in Limerick, Ireland. The greater portion of his life was spent in Kingston, where his home was. He came to this city occasionally on a visit to relatives and this was his mission here when he was taken ill. Some years ago Mrs. Sullivan died at Kingston. The deceased was a member of the Roman Catholic church and in politics was a staunch Conservative. Mr. Sullivan was a brother of the late Mrs. [illegible] Truaisch, of this city, and an uncle of John, William and "Doc," who will regret to learn of his demise. The remains will be taken to Kingston to-morrow for interment.

A Schooner's Mishap

A well-known vessel in this harbor, once upon a time, was the schooner Oliver Mowat, of which the Kingston Whig says:

"The schooner Oliver Mowat met with hard luck while on its first trip of the season, and as a result the vessel is laid up here, and will have to undergo repairs. Capt. Robinson, of Port Hope, cleared from Oswego, with a cargo of coal for McLellan, at Bowmanville, but ran up against a squall yesterday, was robbed of almost all headgear, and had to seek shelter at Cape Vincent. The vessel was towed here last night from the Cape by the tug Frontenac and is at present in [illegible] company's slip. The vessel m[illegible] a double misfortune, springing a bad leak just after the squall set up. The crew had a busy time working the pumps, and this morning there were about three feet of water in the hold of the vessel. The crew had been on the job all night, and this morning Capt. Robinson secured a number of men here to work at the pumps."

A Good Man Gone

MR. WM. BRENTON PASSED AWAY LAST NIGHT, AGED 77 YEARS.

If to be good is to be great, then one of Belleville's greatest men passed away yesterday afternoon in the person of Mr. Wm. Brenton, Charles street, at the age of seventy-seven years and six months, after a lingering illness. Mr. Brenton was born in Trigonetha, Cornwall, England, on the 1st of November, 1830, and came to Belleville over fifty-five years ago, where he has since continually resided, having in that time gained and maintained the character of one of our most upright citizens.

Mr. Brenton is survived by his wife, two children, Mrs. S. S. Moore, of this city and Mrs. G. B. Scott, of Detroit, one brother, Mr. Francis Brenton, of Corbyville, and ten grandchildren.

Since coming to Belleville, Mr. Brenton has been a much appreciated member of Bridge St. Methodist church, and has held the offices of trustee, member of the quarterly official board and Sunday School teacher.

Politically he was an ardent Conservative.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found It at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me.—ELDER JOHN T. Trenton Advocate: Mrs. G. T. Thompson and daughter, Helen, returned home to Belleville after spending a few days with her sister, Mrs. Bensley. — Mr. Charlie Sanderson has taken a position in Belleville.

One of the jolliest old ladies in this district, as well as one of the most estimable, is Mrs. Ann Aris who lives on Herchimer avenue, Front of Thurlow. Mrs. Aris celebrated her 92nd birthday yesterday. She is still bright and chipper and her many friends hope to see her live to reach the century mark.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Mr. R. J. Colville, of Toronto, has been compelled to postpone his visit, and the giving of his address at the Y. M. C. A. from to-morrow until a week later, on account of illness. Mr. Hunter, of Albert College, is expected.

At the close of the Junior Gym. Class Saturday morning, Rev. A. H. Drumm gave one of his famous baseball talks. His subject was "Play the Game!" Mr. Drumm is a strong advocate of honesty in any sport. What the referee fails to see, the Great Referee of life never fails to see. Dishonesty and intentional fouls on the field shows up a player better than the Sabbath School. Stop the fouls and dirty plays. Play the game!

We hope to see all football teams represented at the League meeting at the Y.M.C.A. at 8.30 to-night.

The McMaster Band are meeting with great success at the Union meetings in Kingston. They return to Belleville under union auspices the first week of May.

SAFER LIGHT FOR CARS

Jury Give Verdict in Regard to Chapleau Wreck.

Broken Rail Was Cause of Accident—Horrors Might Have Been Avoided Had It Not Been For Acetylene Gas—Railway Exonerated From Blame—Safer System For Lighting Trains Is Suggested.

Chapleau, April 20.—The coroner's jury investigating the wreck, in which 15 lives were lost, yesterday returned the following verdict:

"The immediate cause of the accident or derailment of train was a broken rail, located on a curve around which the train was running at the time.

"No blame is attached to any of the railway crew or to the roadmaster or sectionmen or any employe of the railway company for the accident.

"The train was lighted with acetylene gas, except one coach, and upon derailment the gas escaped and ignited and seems to have prevented to a certain extent at least the occupants of one of the coaches from escaping and to render all attempts at rescue almost useless.

"This jury is strongly of the opinion that had it not been for the fire that broke out in the coaches almost immediately after the derailment, the accident would not have been attended with such marked fatality.

"We, the jury, having viewed the scene of the disaster and having carefully considered the facts placed before us, would strongly recommend a safer method of lighting trains than by gas."

Possible Causes.

Coroner S. McCuaig of the Soo conducted the enquiry, assisted by Crown Attorney McFadden.

Roadmaster Faugh was the principal witness. He stated that four men, a foreman and three laborers, had charge of the eight-mile section on which the wreck occurred.

Early on the morning of the day the wreck took place he instructed them to go over their section which they afterwards said they did.

He was of the opinion that the weight of the engine forced down a rail until it came to break, when the flange mounted it, causing a jolt, which probably loosened the rail still more. Broken rails occur more frequently at this time of year owing to frost getting into the steel in the night and being thawed out in the day. There is no method of positively telling when a break had occurred.

As to the likelihood of the track having spread, he thought it might have been possible. If the right elevation of curve had been altered by the frost coming out of the ground and raising the truck it might have spread by the train's weight. The weight of the rail on the curve where the derailment occurred was 73 lbs. to the yard.

Heavy Engine.

Walter Dummert, locomotive foreman, stated that the engine and tender alone weighed 180 tons, without either coal or water. Asked if he thought a 73-lb rail was strong enough for such a heavy engine, he replied that engines of her type ran much easier than locomotives of lighter weight, but could not definitely answer the question.

BROKEN RAIL AGAIN.

Was Cause of Another Train Wreck Near Chapleau.

Chapleau, April 20.—A westbound freight train was partly derailed fifty miles west of here Thursday night. Two cars were derailed, severing telegraph connections in their plunge. Three other cars ripped along the ties, tearing up the track for 60 yards. The derailment is thought to have been caused by a broken rail.

Roadmaster Faugh left here early yesterday morning with a wrecking crew, and it will take all day to clear the tracks; in the meantime all passenger trains are held up and the sidings here are blocked with freight cars awaiting power to haul them.

The supply of coal is only sufficient for passenger and way freights for the next two days, unless boats are able to load coal at Fort William at once. All movement of trains will be at a standstill.

CONSPIRACY WAS BOGUS.

Chief of Detectives "Planted" Evidence Against Russian Officers.

St. Petersburg, April 20.—M. Ponomarieff, chief of the Government detectives attached to the Lower House of Parliament, is threatened with dismissal owing to revelations made at Vilna during the trial of military officers and others charged with inspiring to import arms from Germany, the discovery of which caused M. Ponomarieff's promotion.

The court acquitted the accused on the ground that the "conspiracy" was really an invention of Ponomarieff. [illegible] showed that Ponomar- [illegible] and a paper hiding of arms, ammunition and bombs [illegible] purchased abroad in pre-arranged spots, notably in the stable of Col. Miasoyedoff, one of the accused officers.

Ponomarieff's main work in connection with Parliament was to furnish his confidential reports of the doings of the deputies, and it is understood that his highly colored accounts caused much of the friction between Premier Stolypin and the Lower House.

TO STOP COAL STRIKE

Suggestion That Provinces Be Permitted to Work the Mines.

Also to Build and Operate Necessary Railways — Government Asked to Control the Situation—Miners and American Unions—Hon. Mr. Oliver Declares Trouble Is Due to Lack of Transportation Facilities.

Ottawa, April 20.—The most significant event of yesterday's debate upon the coal "strike" in the West was the suggestion by W. F Maclean (South York) to turn over to the prairie provinces their own coal deposits and to leave them free, if they see fit, to adopt provincial operation and to build and operate such railways as may be necessary.

Cut Loose From U. S.

W. E. Knowles, M. P., Regina, also had a telegram from the Regina Board of Trade urging the Dominion Government "to immediately take such action as may seem best to avert the dire calamity."

And further strongly suggest "that the time is opportune for the Dominion Government to take necessary steps towards diverting Canadian miners' unions from dependence upon American organizations and their influence, making these unions thoroughly Canadian."

Mr. Verville protested against the suggestion that the Government should take steps to divorce the Canadian miners from the American unions.

Mr. R. L. Borden declared himself in favor if necessary of taking over the coal mines and having them operated by the Government. He drew attention to the numerous representations from the Boards of Trade at Regina, Calgary, Edmonton and Winnipeg.

None So Blind as Lemieux.

Mr. Lemieux thought that the various Boards of Trade were getting hysterical. They exaggerated conditions. Some men had quit work at Coleman and Fernie, B. C. That was about all there was to it. Freight and passenger traffic had not ceased.

R. L. Borden asked how many men were on strike? It was reported that at Fernie, B. C., 1,000 men had walked out. Why did not the Government enforce the law? Mr. Borden suggested that the Government should take coal lands and operate the mines.

Give Province a Chance.

W. F. Maclean (South York) was heartily in favor of public ownership and the operation of this great utility. If the Federal Government was not willing to undertake this, then let the coal lands be turned over to their respective provinces and let the Provincial Governments furnish cheap fuel to the West. He pointed out, however, that it was useless for the Government to control the coal mines unless they also owned and operated the railways.

Hon. Mr. Oliver agreed that the problem was essentially a problem of transportation. During the Lethbridge strike he had investigated complaints as to the car supply and coal output. The mine owners assured him that they could not get cars. One company answered that they had been furnished eight cars in ten days, while they require five cars a day. Another company had only had cars two days out of the month. A third mine closed down half the time for want of cars.

Should Prepare.

R. L. Borden could not understand why the coal could not be stored. Mr. Oliver said that this was impracticable. Mr. Blain (Peel) said that enormous quantities of coal were stored every summer in Ontario, so as to prepare for winter.

Mr. Fielding thought that some of the Boards of Trade were unduly excited. They proposed violent and heroic remedies, including the calling out of the militia. It was the object of the Government to prevail, not through coercion, but through conciliation.

Supplementary Estimates.

Ottawa, April 20.—Supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908, were tabled in the House last night. They amount to $10,941,558, bringing the total appropriation for the year up to $116,631,077.

The items under the head of civil government provide for numerous increases in civil service salaries. It is the intention of the Government to create a new office, that of assistant Deputy Postmaster-General, at a salary of $3,000 a year.

For the first time provision is made for paying duties on articles imported by the Government.

The following appear under the head of arts and agriculture: Enforcement of the Meat and Canned Food Act, $75,000; cold storage warehouses, $50,000; additional for exhibitions, $100,000; for the construction of an electric railway track at the central experimental farm, $15,000.

FOR YOUNG OFFENDERS.

Special Treatment for Juvenile Lawbreakers—Bill In Senate.

Ottawa, April 20.—In the Senate yesterday Hon. R. W. Scott moved the second reading of the Juvenile Delinquents' bill. It was not proposed to press the measure through this session, but to put it before the public for consideration.

The bill declares it "inexpedient that youthful offenders should be classed or dealt with as ordinary criminals, the welfare of the community demanding that they should on the contrary be guarded against association with crime and criminals and should be subjected to such wise care, treatment and control as will tend to check their evil tendencies and to strengthen their better tendencies." Progress had been made in legislation of the sort in Ontario, British Columbia, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. President Roosevelt had declared that special treatment of youthful offenders was necessary for the good of the state.

Senator MacDonald of Victoria declared that in nine out of ten cases parents were responsible, chiefly through neglect and indifference, for children going wrong.

Senator Cloran stated there had long been crying need for special dealing with young offenders, particularly in Montreal and other centres of population.

LONGBOAT WINS RACE.

Canadian Won Easily In 25 Mile Marathon Race at Boston.

Boston, April 20.—Thomas Longboat, the great Canadian Indian runner from Toronto, Canada, won the Marathon yesterday afternoon, leading all his competitors by a long distance. Longboat ran a game race and showed splendid generalship throughout.

He got off well and for the entire distance was well in hand, always looking as if he could win as he pleased.

About ten miles out he started his spurt and after that was never headed, coming in like a railroad train, leaving his competitors straggling in the rear.

Within three miles of the finish he was five minutes in the lead, and then he seemed to slow down, at the request of his friends.

He was still going at a tremendous pace, however, and finished two minutes in front of all competitors, covering the distance in the remarkable time of 2 hours, 24 minutes, 20 3-5 seconds.

The second man was Fowler, of Cambridge.

The rest of the runners were strung along the road for miles and came straggling many minutes behind the wonderful Indian and the Cambridge man.

HIS LIFE FOR OTHERS.

Wm. Martineau Played a Hero's Part At Montreal Fire.

Montreal, April 20.—The coroner's jury to investigate the Canada Steam Laundry fire Thursday afternoon when three people lost their lives, was chosen yesterday, but the work of taking evidence was adjourned until next week.

Miss Furlong was employed on the top floor and near at hand were she was stationed was a stairway leading to the roof. It had been a matter of comment on the part of the employes on that floor how easy it would be for them to make their escape to the roof in case of fire. Instead she went to another part of the flat and was lost.

It seems that William Martineau played the part of a hero. He brought several girls out of the fire, and reentered the building on his errand of mercy, only to himself fall a victim to the flames. He got all the women on the top floor out on the fire escape except one.

VOLCANO'S GREAT DAMAGE.

Showers of Red Hot Ashes Falling—Inhabitants Ruined.

New York, April 20.—A despatch from Lima, Peru, says: The volcano Puyehhue, in the Province of Valdivia, Chile, is still in active eruption and new craters have opened. The losses in the neighboring country are enormous, and the inhabitants are panic-stricken.

Showers of red-hot ashes are falling, and there are continued earthquake shocks, accompanied by underground explosions. Absolute darkness would prevail, but for the light from several fires over an extent of six miles.

A great number of cattle have been killed near Lake Ranco. Several brooks which had furnished drinking water for the people have dried up. The inhabitants, ruined, are fleeing in all directions. The Government has sent assistance.

SMALLPOX NEAR BROCKVILLE.

Contagion Supposed to Have Been Carried Through Newspapers.

Brockville, April 20.—Smallpox has broken out in Kitley Township, a few miles north of Toledo, the victim being a prosperous farmer named Thomas Heffernon.

His wife and two children are the occupants of the house, and these, with an adjoining family exposed to the infection, have been placed under quarantine.

It is thought the man contracted the disease from papers sent through the mails from an American city.

Attempted Suicide.

Montreal, April 20.—Almost immediately after the arrival of the train from Toronto at the Bonaventure station yesterday morning, a woman, 24 years of age, was noticed to have fallen to the floor, frothing at the mouth, and clutching at the legs of the chairs. Several tablets of bichloride of mercury were still clenched in her hand. She was taken to the hospital and revived, giving her name as Mrs. Hannah Fordham of Toronto. She said her husband had deserted her.

230 Drown.

Berlin, April 20.—Colonial Director Dernburg stated yesterday that a cable message had been received from the Governor of the Island of Yap, announcing that a disastrous typhoon swept over the Caroline Islands on Good Friday last and that 230 of the 800 natives of the Ululthi group were drowned.

Cocoanut trees were destroyed and famine threatened the surviving natives.

Machine Shop Burned.

Welland, April 20.—Fire yesterday morning burned the Robertson machinery Company buildings with contents. They carried some insurance. Valencourt's boiler shops were saved, although badly damaged; no insurance.

Miner Horribly Mangled.

Haileybury, April 20.—Harry Boyne of Welsh, England, was killed by an explosion of twenty sticks of dynamite which he was thawing out. He was horribly mangled and lived only an hour. Mrs. Prentice, his housekeeper, was rendered unconscious.

Property Loss Is Great.

Mexico City, April 20.—Communication has now been opened with all the important points in the section most affected by the earthquake.

The latest reports indicate that the loss of life will not reach a hundred, but many persons have been injured, and the property loss is great.

Vice-President Corral yesterday declared that the whole of the State of Guerrero has been devastated.

Thousands of dollars are being subscribed to the relief fund being raised here.

Thaw Stays In Jail.

New York, April 20.—No movement to attempt to secure the release of Harry K. Thaw on bail has been made, and none is likely for some time.

That Thaw must spend another summer in the Tombs is apparently indicated by the departure from the

The Cayuga Murder Trial

Detective Greer Tells How The Pill Box Was Found.

Mrs. Carter Says Perkins Hinted at Suicide--Police Told Her to "Go Easy" on That Point--Counsel Refused Statement by Macdonald--Witness Faints on Stand--Evidence for the Defence.

Cayuga, April 22.—The intention of the defence to heap discredit upon the crown officers who prepared the case was apparent in the cross-examination.

Mrs. Carter of Walkerville, whose importance to the crown's case was considered so great that her non-appearance until noon on Tuesday nearly produced an adjournment, was in the witness box on Saturday.

Mr. Johnston drew out from witness that she had told Detective Mahoney of Windsor about Henry Perkins having said that he suffered from stomach trouble and would rather suicide than die a lingering death from cancer of the stomach, like his father, and that Mahoney told her to "go easy" on that part of the story and that she was not obliged to say anything about it if she were not asked.

Mr. Johnston strenuously opposed admitting the evidence of the Detroit detective, that poisons could be bought in that city, on the ground that the crown had not connected Mrs. Perkins with any transaction in Detroit, and therefore the evidence was only collateral. He reserved his right to state a case in the point.

Wanted to Buy Poison.

Mrs. George Carter of Walkerville was the first witness. Mrs. Perkins visited her last October. After supper one night Mrs. Perkins told her Henry had been very sick with his stomach and had been to an expert in Hamilton. Next morning Mrs. Perkins said she would leave on the 11 o'clock train in the morning. Before she returned she said she wanted to do some shopping. Among other things she asked witness where she could obtain some strychnine. She said she wanted it to poison rats. She asked witness if she would get it for her with a prescription which Mrs. Carter had. Witness declined, telling her where she could get it "over the river"—meaning in Michigan.

In the July previous Mr. and Mrs. Perkins had paid her a short visit. Henry complained of feeling tired on that occasion.

The party also had a steamboat trip and during the night Henry became sick. Previously he complained of thirst and asked for a drink.

In October Mrs. Perkins asked witness not to say anything to Henry about the strychnine. She said: "He would go crazy if he knew I had it in the house."

Had Stomach Trouble.

Perkins said he had stomach trouble and thought of moving to the coast to see if it would do him any good. He spoke of the terrible sufferings his father had when he died of cancer in the stomach, and said that if it were not for the "sin of body" he would rather commit suicide than die a lingering death. Witness saw a detective and told him the whole story, including the portion about Henry's thought of committing suicide, and he told her to "go easy" on that part of the story. The man was Detective Mahoney of Windsor.

Witness replied: "I will tell the whole truth." Mahoney said, "You are not obliged to tell that part if you are not asked."

Greer on the Stand.

Detective William Greer said he was put on this case on the 4th of February by the Attorney-General, and performed his duties up to Feb. 19, when Mrs. Perkins was arrested. On that date he searched the Perkins house in company with Crown Attorney Murphy, Constables Farrell and Everingham. In the front room used as a sitting room he found the book. In the kitchen bureau he found the box produced in court. The drawer was open and contained spoons and bottles as well. He did not get the box back again until the 9th of April. The box had great interest to him because Dr. Snider had given him a similar one a few days previously. He got certain information from the attorney, and, in consequence, took the Perkins' pill-box to Prof. Ellis on April 12, having had it in his possession for three days. He had also taken the Snider box to Prof. Ellis on Feb. 24, and a package containing strychnine which he had purchased and asked that it be weighed.

He told of seeing Mrs. Perkins at her home previously. She told him she and her husband had lived together very happily, and that if he had died of strychnine poisoning, he must have been given it by Dr. Kerr of Dunnville in mistake.

He searched the house and inquired for her husband's trunk, and she promised to let him see it as soon as she could get it from Welland. The trunk was sent to Mr. Johnston's office instead.

The MacDonalds' Statement.

Detective Greer said in evidence, when questioned about the statements made by Mrs. and Thomas MacDonald, that Crown Attorney Murphy and himself heard their stories and dictated the statements to the stenographers and told the McDonalds to return in half an hour and sign the statements, which they did.

Mr. Johnston asked witness to produce these statements, but Greer said he had not got them. Mr. Johnston then said he must ask the crown to produce them. Mr. Arnoldi refused to do so.

Mr. Johnston appealed to the judge, saying that it was quite proper to show all evidence. An English judge had recently given that decision, and that such statements were good in evidence. These statements were improperly obtained. Greer had testified that parts of these statements were objected to and altered, but he was dissatisfied to rest his case against them merely on Greer's evidence.

Justice Mabee said he would have to rule against Mr. Johnston, who stated he would ask for a reserve case. In the meantime he will endeavor to produce a satisfactory authority by Monday morning.

Detective Greer denied using threats to either Tom MacDonald or his mother. He denied telling Tom MacDonald he would get himself into trouble if he didn't own up.

County Crown Attorney Murphy was called and gave his version of finding the box and book.

Witness said he could not swear positively that the box produced was the same box, because there were millions of boxes like it, but it was a similar one. He saw Greer initial it, but did not know Greer's initials well enough for identification.

The evidence of Crown Attorney Murphy closed the case for the crown, and Mr. Johnston at once proceeded to call witnesses for the defence.

For Defence.

Dr. Emmet of Fonthill said he had known Henry Perkins for many years. He had practiced at Fonthill for forty-two years and had treated Perkins for six or seven years for rheumatism, which was caused by uric acid in the blood. It was a poisonous condition.

Mrs. Perkins sent for a doctor, although Perkins did not seem to desire one.

John MacDonald, father of Thomas MacDonald, said he was in the hardware business in Canfield, and that his family and the Perkinses were on terms of closest friendship. In the fall of 1906 Mrs. Perkins was several times unwell, and Mrs. McDonald stayed all night with her on two or three occasions.

Witness Faints.

At this stage witness called out: "I'm feeling ill," threw up his arms and collapsed in the witness-box. Medical assistance was summoned. Restoratives were given him. He recovered and returned to court later and continued his evidence. He was given a seat in the box. He said the occasions when Mrs. MacDonald and Tom stayed at the Perkins' home was toward the end of November.

Merville MacDonald, a law student in the office of Johnston, McKay, Dods and Grant of Toronto, gave evidence of bringing a trunk from Canfield to Toronto, and identified the contents, which included keys, circulars, empty bottles, three pass-books, a writing pad, a "pink pill" box, an atomizer, medical lozenges and some medical tablets. There was a quantity of clothes, also. Prisoner wept bitterly while the items were being enumerated and exhibited.

The court adjourned until this morning.

Buried In Sand Pile.

London, April 22.—Two men employed on the new sewer which is being put down on Dundas street were for 10 minutes buried beneath a pile of sand and shoring at the corner of Dundas and Wellington streets Saturday afternoon. The men were A. Van Conkoghnet and R. McConechy. Neither was seriously hurt, though they were almost suffocated.

Poisoned by Medicine.

London, April 22.—Mrs. James Bone has been dangerously ill at her home for several days past, but is now on the road to recovery.

The cause of Mrs. Bone's illness is supposed to have been a sample package of a patent medicine. The package was left at the door and Mrs. Bone took a dose of it, according to the directions on the wrapper.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The weather yesterday reminded one of a fire made from coal ashes (according to what the scientists in Toronto say): It was lively and bright, but there was very little heat attached to it.

Beautiful Zephra is now a thing of the past, but the memory will remain a joy forever with many people in this city. And five performances to crowded houses should have pleased the management fairly well.

All things considered, it is doubtful if anything nearly as good was ever put on by amateurs in this city. It is safe to say that everyone who went was very agreeably disappointed. This was a case where you did not need to make allowances for amateurs. That the manager must have a wonderful capacity for detail was very apparent. And, without at all meaning to indulge in indiscriminate taffy-throwing, it is extremely doubtful if, in many places the size of Belleville, he could have found a cast so excellently suited to his wants, from either a histrionic, musical or terpsichorean point of view.

The principals, both male and female, filled their parts "to the King's taste," as the vernacular has it; the choruses were splendidly balanced, the costumes and scenery superb. It would be hardly overstepping the truth to say that, outside of the "profession," one would search many moons before he found as pleasing female vocalists, chic, graceful and shapely, as those on whom the calcium light was turned in "Zephra."

The Intelligencer once more begs to extend congratulations to all who took part in the production for so good a cause, and to hope that the financial returns may be commensurate with the success of the brilliant spectacle.

In the Kitchen—use WINDSOR SALT. It is a serious mistake to use common salt. Use the fine, pure Windsor.

The following story, you may be sure is an outcome of the Thaw case:

"Mildred," began the young man, hesitatingly, "suppose a fellow has been—has been paying attention, you know, to a girl for more than a year, and he kind o' hesitates—that is, he isn't at all sure how the girl—and all that time he has been—well, he—he hates to run the risk, you see——"

Here Mildred interrupted him.

"Ask it right out, Gerald," she said. "Don't puzzle me with any hypothetical questions."

Here's something worth remembering: It doesn't pay, usually, to tell your friends about their faults. It only makes them mad, and then they tell you about yours.

• • •

U. S. food experts now say that a regular diet from generation to generation determines the individual's temperament. But what good does it do a fellow to find this out, since it is manifestly impossible for him to be born soon enough to get his ancestors started on the right kind of food?

• • •

The small boy with an irascible father is, perhaps, apt to wonder why a young man has the shoulders of his coat padded, instead of the seat of his trousers.

• • •

An elevator builder in New York fell ten stories and complains that he caught cold on the way down. Falling ten stories must be as bad as sitting in a draft.

A local builder who expects to tender for the new drill shed tells us he thinks Bellevillians will be somewhat disappointed in that edifice when it is erected, as it will not be nearly so ornate or grand as some people think it should be. Some places, of course, which have no local corps, or, perhaps, one company, can get cut stone buildings costing $160,000 or so, but it's brick for Belleville—after a wait of about seven or eight years.

We have not, so far, heard of any coal man committing suicide because of the ashes and salt story. Some of them point to what a Toronto scientist says about it. "A scientific absurdity." It is even insinuated that the reports are only newspaper yarns, published for the purpose of reducing the price of coal. However, all coal men do not scoff at the theory, but they do smile at the story that "it will cut the coal bills in half. Some say there is a certain amount of cinder thrown away in all ashes. It is the cinder which burns. A large coal dealer in a neighboring town has tried the experiment, and gives this out in an interview:

Asked as to what difference it would make in the coal bill, he figured that the people would benefit to the extent of 15 to 20 per cent. That is, if one bought five tons of coal, one ton would be saved. But there is only 20 per cent. ashes in coal, and therefore, the coal business will not be killed outright. After the first supply of ashes has run out more coal will have to be burned to make more ashes. The bulk of the business will be decreased, but so will the expense of handling it, so that the total profits will not be materially affected. Continuing, he believed this invention would be of wonderful benefit to the world. He did not doubt but that it would work perfectly satisfactorily in furnaces, but he would not be so sure about a range or self-feeding coal stove.

Summing up the findings of the scientists and laymen we seem to arrive at this situation: In return for considerable dirty work and the risk of raining boilers, firepots and stovepipes, one MAY make a saving of 15 or 20 per cent. in the coal bill. Is the game worth the candle? It all depends on the point of view.

The financial statement for "Zephra" has not yet been prepared, but The Intelligencer is told on unimpeachable authority that the gross receipts for the five performances were about $1600. Of this Mr. Booth received 60 per cent. gross. It is expected that, after paying local expenses, the Hospital will have a handsome balance to show.

It is now a settled fact that dandruff is caused by a germ. Falling hair and baldness are the result of dandruff. Dr. E. J. He says, "I used Herpicide for my dandruff and falling hair, and I am well satisfied with the result." Dr. J. T. Fugate, of Urbana, Ill., says; "I have used Herpicide for dandruff with excellent results. I shall prescribe it in my practice." Herpicide kills the dandruff germ. A Surprise Party

On Thursday evening, April 18, 1907, over fifty of the neighbors and friends of Plainfield, assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. German Horton, to give them a hearty welcome. They had about three weeks previous bought a farm and moved in their new home. The party was a great surprise to them, being especially arranged for Thursday evening, which was the first anniversary of their wedding. The evening was well and profitably spent. All seemed to enjoy themselves and helped to make a a success, with plenty of music.

After the social intercourse a grand tea was furnished by the ladies and after tea one of our worthy neighbors was appointed chairman for the evening which was made very enjoyable by a number of addresses of welcome, after which a suitable reply to the addresses by Mr. and Mrs. Horton were given. It being about 12 o'clock the chairman brought the programme to a close by all singing "God be with you till be meet again," followed by prayer by the Rev. Mr. Buckler, and the party left for their homes all pronouncing a well spent evening.

It is easier to make both ends meet than it is to weld them together.

In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Electoral Immorality

The House of Commons, by a vote of 87 to 44, defeated the motion offered by Mr. R. L. Borden to secure greater purity in elections. The resolution deplored the existence of corrupt and fraudulent practices, as shown in the revelations from London and other electoral districts throughout Canada. It asked for an amendment of the electoral laws, for the more effective suppression and punishment of bribery, to prevent fraudulent marking, counting and substituting or switching of ballots, and also to prevent the accumulation of huge campaign funds and to prohibit contributions thereto by corporations, contractors and promoters.

Mr. Borden supported his motion in an exhaustive address, in which he dealt with the practices in question as revealed in the election courts and before commissions of inquiry. It is a formidable list of criminality, which should call the blush of shame to the leaders of the party implicated in those particular frauds, through its authorized agents, as a contemporary points out, yet the word was passed among Liberal members to declare by their votes that nothing was worthy of condemnation among all the proofs of wrongdoing that had been forthcoming.

Among the eighty members absent from the House when the vote was taken were doubtless many upright, conscientious Liberals who would have found it too hard a pill to swallow, that nothing was wrong in the wholesale debauchery of constituencies with funds received from corporations having deals with the Government. The member for London, for example, must have felt strong qualms on the subject when he showed his readiness to resign the seat in face of the testimony brought out before Mr. Denison.

It is a humiliating and ridiculous position for those Liberals who voted against Mr. Borden's motion, to justify the criminal proceedings which caused Mr. Hyman such shame that he refused to sit longer in a seat obtained by systematic and wholesale bribery. Yet that is the position they are in. Practically they applaud the corrupt machine as a proper adjunct of the polls: in effect they declare that the purchase of votes is a laudable form of electioneering, that ballot substituting is an electoral virtue.

Those gentlemen may feel justified in voting that such frauds are like Spartan thefts, only to be frowned upon when found out, since that very doctrine was delivered to the "saints" by an honored member of the Government, no less a personage than Sir Richard Cartwright. It fell to that hon. gentleman to answer for the appointment of J. B. Jackson, the lawyer charged with suborning perjured evidence to unseat Donald Sutherland. Though this man was "found out," and denounced from the bench in the most scathing terms, Sir Richard declared that he had done nothing to deserve the censure of his party except that "he had been indiscreet." No blame came to Jackson for this heinous offence, but only praise and reward from the Laurier Government in the shape of a fat office in England. Preston is another of the corrupt political instruments whom the Government of Sir Richard rewarded because they dare not do otherwise, if so inclined.

Others of the gang are not so fortunate. They have to go into exile without stated Government salary, but only the precarious doles which are given out as "hush money" for a time.

The Liberal party in Parliament are not ashamed of the fragment of corrupt electoral history so truthfully read to them by Mr. Borden. They say by their votes that it is no wrong to bribe an elector; no crime to switch ballots by the score; no offence against morality to take large cheques from corporations and contractors for political dirty work; but that all these things are in accordance with their code of morality.

Anxiety never yet successfully bridged over any chasm.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

At the above church yesterday morning, the rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached on "Freedom," from the text

"The truth shall make you free."

In these days, the preacher said, many people demanded freedom when what they really wanted was license. The true freedom was found only by those who accepted the evangelical religion of Jesus Christ, which freed men from all the trammels and temptations of this world.

On Sunday next the I. O. O. F. lodges of this city will attend Emmanuel Church, in honor of the founding of the order in 1819.

Holloway Street.

That the bright April Sabbath was appreciated was shown in the attendance at all the services at Holloway St. church, and the early services were much enjoyed. The pastor's theme in the morning was "At the door of the Kingdom: who will enter?"—Matt. 18: 13, saying in part, Our Lord put new beauty into child life. His birthday parties are many, and child stock has been going up wherever the lessons of obedience, innocence, and purity are appreciated. No wonder children are happy with these characteristics. Jesus taught us older children to return to and adjust our lives to God as the flower turns its face to the sun, so it is rewarded with beauty of texture, color, fragrance and maturity. Joseph, the hero of our Sunday School lesson to-day, like Samuel, when called of God or his parent, responded "Here am I," and following the providence of God he became the saviour of his family, and of Egypt, where his praises are sung to this day. God's Kingdom is for us on earth, and in heaven. The singing of the Sunbeam choir was much appreciated, as also the anthem and voluntaries.

In the evening the topic was "In or out of the royal procession,"—Matt. 16: 24. Miss Price sang a beautiful selection, "Rock of Ages."

Tabernacle.

At the evening service Rev. Mr. Brown preached, taking for his text Matt. 13, 7th verse.

Mr. J. Dyer sang in his usual fine voice a solo, "O Happy Day."

Bethel Hall.

The hall was well filled last night, the subject being the four suppers. First, the Gospel supper of Luke 14th, All are invited to this feast, God is beseeching sinners to accept His Son, but excuses are made and will be until the door will be shut. Second, the Lord's supper, this being only for those who come to the supper of salvation. Third, the marriage supper of the Lamb (Rev. 19: 7), being also for those only who accept the invitation to the gospel supper. Lastly, the supper of the Great God (Rev. 19; 17), when all the fowls of the air will be called upon to feed upon the flesh of kings, captains, and mighty men. All were urged to accept now God's invitation to receive His Son and be saved. At the close five confessed Christ by being buried in baptism.

St. Andrew's.

Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, the pastor, preached at both services yesterday, his discourses being much enjoyed and appreciated. At the evening service the choir sang an enjoyable anthem, "Softly Now the Light of Day," by Schilling, the solos being nicely taken by Miss Lazier and Mr. Chris. Pratt. Miss Lazier also sang a solo, "Just as I Am," by C. B. Hawley, in a beautiful way.

A Reliable Medicine.

WHY OUR LOCAL DRUGGEST, J. S. McKEOWN, RECOMMENDS VINOL.

So many patent medicines and advertised cures are now offered to the public that our readers will be glad to know the opinion of a man who has spent years in handling them, and profit by his advice.

Said Mr. McKeown; "There is no one medicine that will cure everything, but this I do know, that if the people of Belleville only realized the wonderful curative and strength creating power of Vinol I would not have clerks enough in my store to put up the orders for it.

"You see, Vinol is not a patent medicine, and it actually does contain every one of the fifty odd medicinal curatives actually taken from fresh cods' livers, with the useless oil eliminated and tonic iron added. It contains no poisonous drugs, and you know just what you are taking.

"Therefore, in the strongest manner we indorse and recommend Vinol to increase the appetite, cure stomach troubles, give strength to the run down, tired and debilitated, invigorate and build up old people, make rich, red blood, cure chronic coughs, colds and bronchitis. If it fails we return your money." J. S. McKeown, druggist.

"Balderdash!" Says Dr. Sheard of Toronto

WHO CONDEMNS THE ASHES AND SALT THEORY IN UNMEASURED TERMS—SALT WILL RUST AND RUIN BOILERS, HE SAYS.

"Balderdash!" says Dr. Sheard.

This heartfelt expression of disgust, says the Toronto Star, is wrung from the Medical Health Officer by the stories of successful ash-burning which are being brought to him daily.

"It is more than foolish; it is dangerous," he declared this morning. "People should be cautioned as to the use of salt and water with ashes. When brine is thrown on a hot fire, hydrochloric acid is formed, which is one of the most rapid rusters known. A very little of it will very quickly rust out the pipes and all the iron attachments in connection with a furnace. Chloride of iron is produced instantly, and the air and heat reduce it to oxide of iron, which is another name for rust."

If Dr. Sheard is correct in his statement, and he is very positive in making the assertion, the present experiments are being carried on with danger to boilers, and without saving of coal beyond what might be saved by sifting the ashes.

"It is not," says Dr. Sheard, "a question of discovery or speculation, but of positive scientific chemical fact. When I was a boy we used to go up on the roof, and pour salt down a burning chimney. That was the correct principle, for salt generates chlorine, which does not permit of combustion.

"All there is to the discovery," he continued, "is the fact that in every ash heap there is a certain amount of waste coal; that is, unconsumed coal, which has not been sifted out, and that, of course, will burn. There is nothing in ash to burn any more than there is in stone. Ashes consist of aluminum, which is another name for clay; iron, which you know is not a fuel; and silica, which is sand, and from which, in its pure form, glass is made. The result of heating this mixture is the formation of a sort of slag, which could be made very useful, but which the experimenters with the new fuel will hardly produce economically. Such clinkers, with a sufficient amount of iron, make a good foundation for laying concrete upon.

"Oxalic acid," explained the head of the Health Department, "is sold commercially as 'salts of lemon,' but, let the public not be deceived, there is no lemon in it. In fact, it is a dangerous poison, and here again the public should be cautioned. Of course it will burn, but as the wholesale cost is about ten cents per pound, it will hardly prove an economical fuel. It burns because it is rich in carbon and oxygen and is easily decomposed."

"Are the city scavangers being refused ashes by some citizens now?" asked the reporter.

"We have not had any reports," laughed Dr. Sheard, "nor do we expect any, though some people may do so for a few days. They will soon find out that the 'discovery' is useless."

Evidence goes to show, however, that a large number of citizens are experimenting with their ashes. As many of them have employees who are careless in sifting these, and the ash heap consequently is often full of bits of carbon, they would obtain results under any circumstances, and the question which remains to be solved is whether other elements of the ashes besides these combustible pieces of material are being consumed.

At any rate, the drug stores report a brisk demand for oxalic acid, and grocers have been kept busy handing out coarse salt to their customers. It remains for some enterprising merchant to advertise "five cents' worth of coarse salt with every one dollar order."

Engineer Charles Power, at Mr. R. G. McLean's printing establishment, has been experimenting with ashes and salt mixed in the ratio of three tablespoonfuls of salt to three shovelsful of ashes. He uses no coal. He claims to have kept up a good fire with this mixture from 8 to 10.30 a.m. without touching it. He says that four shovelsful of coal would ordinarily have been required. Later he threw in a mixture with a larger proportion of salt and some oxalic acid. With this he claims to have made a saving of 40 per cent.

Mr. James Hannon, City Hall engineer, under instructions from Property Commissioner Harris, is experimenting with ashes, screenings, a saline solution, and oxalic acid, with a view to ascertaining their heating qualities. The results of the test will not be given out till Monday, but Commissioner Harris stated that from his observation the experiment will not prove satisfactory.

MERELY REDUCTION OF WASTE, SAYS THE GLOBE.

(Toronto Globe.)

Experiments with the cobbler's alleged discovery of the fuel value of ashes are going on in all parts of the city, and to-day we will have the report of the experts at the City Hall. That is precisely the right way to test the matter, as it is the proper method in deciding all scientific problems. The Medical Health Officer has pointed out that ashes will not burn. This is universally conceded. The claim is that the ashes with the brine will supply conditions under which the coal can be burned without sending three-fourths of its energy up the chimney. It is now necessary to waste, or at least to lose that large proportion of heat-producing capacity of coal in securing a sufficient supply of oxygen to support combustion. All the ashes and brine can do is to cause the coal mixed with it to burn without the great waste heretofore accompanying combustion.

Many reports of successful experiments have been received, but it is as yet too soon to decide positively as to ultimate results. The effect of the new system of combustion must be noted on grates, furnaces, stoves, boilers and all heating and steam power appliances. There are many things to be considered, and it would be well for all experimenters to note accurately both the methods adopted and the results obtained. It must be borne in mind that it is the coal, and not the ashes, that burns. If coal and ashes form into an unusually hot and glowing mass of fire it is because the coal mixed in it is burning, and the ashes, salt, and water are supplying sufficient oxygen to support the combustion. All that can be accomplished is the reduction of waste, and so far as this is achieved without the injury or destruction of heating appliances the experiments will be successful. It is matter for experiment and not scientific dogmatism at the present stage, and, as with all experimenting, the chief need is care in carrying out the processes and accuracy in noting the results.

HUMOR

HIS MEMORY RETURNED.

He Wanted a Snow Shovel, as Surmised by the Storekeeper.

He stopped in front of a hardware store for a moment and looked all around and then carried his hand to his head like a man who had forgotten something. Then he slowly entered the store and looked around and shook his head.

"You want something?" observed the clerk as he came forward.

"I do."

"But for the moment you have forgotten what it is?"

"That's exactly the case. I knew when I left the house, but it has gone from my head now. If you'd offer me a hundred dollars, I couldn't remember what I started after."

"We have lots of such cases, and we solve them in a moment. Here is what you want."

And he passed behind a lot of stoves and dragged out a big snow shovel and placed it in the other's hands and said:

"Thirty-five cents, please, and you'll find the material of the best."

"By George! By George!" exclaimed the customer. "But that's exactly what I wanted! What a curious thing memory is. I wanted a snow shovel, and now I'll take it home and put it in the cellar, and if my neighbors don't keep their walks clean I'll complain to the police."—Chicago News.

Did Not Count.

There is a small boy in Pittsburg who is intensely patriotic and who is, as a rule, a very well informed Sunday school student. Not long ago there were some visitors, and Tommy's teacher, wishing to show off her class to the best advantage, called upon him to answer a series of questions. All went well until the very usual one, "Who was the first man?"

"George Washington—first in war, first in"— Tommy began enthusiastically, but the teacher hastily interrupted.

"No, no, dear! You mean Adam, don't you?"

"Oh, if you are talking about dagoes, I s'pose he might be," admitted Tommy.—Harper's Weekly.

Which?

Once upon a time two young women came to a wise theatrical manager and applied for positions as stars.

"It is not our custom to engage stars who have had no dramatic experience," he said. "And neither of you has been on the stage?"

"No, sir," they replied.

"Then what qualifications do you possess?"

"I, sir," said the first young woman, "have ambition and a future."

"I, sir," said the second young woman, "have ambition and a past which would make copy."

And so the manager made out a contract for one of them.—Judge.

Why Paper Cuts.

Have you ever cut yourself with a piece of paper? The edge of a piece of glazed paper looks much like that of a knife under the microscope. Of course the little teeth have not the strength of steel, but if the edge of the paper is drawn swiftly over the finger without much pressure that peculiar property of matter called inertia comes into play, and the tender teeth will cut the flesh before they are broken. The same property it is which allows a candle to be shot through a one inch plank or permits a bullet to pass through a pane of glass without shattering it, leaving only a clean, round hole.—C. H. Claudy in St. Nicholas.

To Make Campherated Oil.

Get the common cottonseed table oil, which is sold for sweet oil. Small bottles at retail stores usually cost 10 cents. Half fill a six ounce bottle with gum camphor, then fill with oil and let it stand in a very warm place over night. The oil will take up only just so much of camphor, and when it is used off fill with oil again, repeating the process until the camphor is dissolved. This is cheap and clean and will not soil clothing.

THE DINNER CALL.

(Birmingham Age-Herald.)

Of all the calls a fellow hears
To bring him greater pleasure,
To fill his daily cup of joy
And make a brimming measure,
The sweetest and the finest is
A dandy and a winner,
A sound that wakes up appetites—
The cheery call to dinner.

No matter what your earthly woes,
No matter what your trouble,
If all your cares be weighty ones,
And all your griefs be double,
You cannot be a pessimist,
Nor any more a sinner,
When full and clear you chance to hear
The cheery call to dinner.

Its magic quickly makes us glad,
And puts us in good humor,
A sort of rare prediction, too,
An ever welcome rumor
Of edibles to fill us up—
The magnate and the thinner,
There's nothing else could hope to beat
The cheery call to dinner.

It brings a smile to any face,
Makes anybody pleasant—
The monarch on his throne of gold
The simply faring peasant,
It kills the blues and keeps us all
From surely growing thinner,
Oh, best of all it is to hear
The cheery call to dinner.

In Texas and Louisiana it is estimated that there are 8,000,000,000 feet of standing hardwoods. Fifty-five saw-mills in this territory have an approximate output of 1,590,000,000 feet of lumber annually, and of this amount there is exported through the port of Galveston alone over $3,000,000 worth of lumber, logs and other products per year. The total value of products of all commodities through the port of Galveston for the year 1905-06 amounted to $163,239,881.

In an interesting article on Mr. Carnegie, The Kolnische Zeitung, of Berlin, declares that if all signs do not fail, the reign of Messrs. Rockefeller and Carnegie in the United States will soon come to an end. The people, the paper says, are up in arms against great accumulations of wealth. How Socialism is progressing, of course, none can tell, but Carnegie and what he stands for will probably disappear and in fifty years a new generation may consider his 10,000 libraries as the remnants of a cyclopic age — gigantic, but the inner kernel of which was barbaric.

The recent death in Berlin of Col. Heros Von Borke, has brought to light documents and statements which go to show that if the Southern States had been successful against the North, in the war of succession, it was the intention to have established them as a monarchy, with Prince Frederick Charles Von Hohenzollern as their king. Generals Stuart and Lee are said to have favored the Prince and the Prince himself knew of the plan. Prince Frederick Charles was friend of Stuart and had a picture of the southern General above his writing desk.

TRAIN NUMBERS.

How They Are Used and How They Grow So Large.

Travelers and commuters have often to consider the trains as numbered in what appears to them inexplicable ways. For example, a request at the information bureau of the Grand Central station will elicit the reply that train No. 470 will not stop at Peekskill or on the New Haven line that train No. 570 will stop on Saturdays at Coscob, but not on other days; that on the Pennsylvania train No. 634 will stop at Metuchen, but not at Rahway; that on the Delaware and Lackawanna train No. 410 is an Easton express, and that train No. 390 is the millionaires' special to Bernardsville and will stop only at Newark. The traveler knows, of course, that there are not so many trains and only identifies them by the hour of departure and arrival, so this information is usually vague enough as given by numbers to him, although relevant enough to railroad men, for it tells of the history of the trains.

When the railroads were new they put on a passenger train numbered 1 and 2 and a freight train numbered 3 and 4, and they increased this service according to the demands of traffic, raising the numbers consecutively, the even numbered trains running one way, the odd numbered trains the other. As the exacting demands of new business developed trains were increased, and some of the old ones were dropped, but their numbers, which still lived in the minds of the operatives, could not readily be duplicated, and they named them with still higher numbers until their numerical titles have lost relation to their source except in the minds of employees. But as the railroads extended themselves and a generation of employees passed they returned to the primal numbers for their important trains, so that trains 1 and 2, 3 and 4, 5 and 6, etc., are on nearly all railways the through expresses. But the original trains, by shifting of time or other causes, run under titles of 400, 500 or some numeration that means nothing to the traveler, but to the railroad man reveals its history from origin to date.—New York Press.

Violent Deaths.

In New York city occur ten violent deaths a day as a direct result of daily activities. In Chicago the number falls to six a day, according to Dr. Thomas Grant Allen. But the storm center of the country is Allegheny county, Pa., in which the city of Pittsburg is situated, combining steel, iron and coal industries, mills, mines, railroads and building industries. Over 17,000 deaths and injuries a year in all industries is the record for this single county.

"Conditions are such that the life of a foreigner employed in the mills is given less consideration than is the life of a horse or mule," says the coroner of Allegheny county. "During my first month in office I was astounded to find that within the thirty days twelve men were killed in one plant alone of the United States Steel corporation." "If even the present laws were enforced," the Hungarian consul has protested, "conditions would not be so bad."—Everybody's Magazine.

Wintering Dahlia Tubers.

As soon as the tops are killed by the frost they should be cut off to within six inches of the ground. The tubers may then be dug and inverted in the ground, to permit the sap remaining in the plant to settle without dripping among the tubers, as it is believed the sap is an injury to the roots. After the plants become dry they may be placed in a cellar in boxes or baskets and kept dry, but not permitted to shrivel. Any condition suitable for good care of potatoes is favorable for wintering dahlia tubers. The tubers are very susceptible to injury from freezing.—Country Gentleman.

Hardening Arteries.

Arteriosclerosis, the thickening and hardening of the artery walls, is one of the most common causes of death. It is indicated by increased or lessened blood tension in the arteries, and when the sphygmometer reveals such condition Professor d'Arsonval, the eminent Frenchman of science, applies six baths of a high frequency electric current. Such applications, it is claimed, completely restore the normal blood pressure. The baths, of five or ten minutes each, may be taken three times a week, and they cause no inconvenience or disagreeable sensation.

Tea Drinking In China.

Nothing tends so much to keep down mortality in China as the habit of drinking hot tea instead of possibly contaminated well water. Tea to a rich Chinaman means concentrated tea, costing 10 cents an ounce; to the poor it is hot water with a few tea leaves dipped in and to the very poor simply hot water. It is significant of the increased wealth in the country that the majority of the lower classes, who heretofore could only afford hot water, are now indulging in actual tea.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

"Heavier Than Air" Flying Machines Now the Goal of Inventors.

Prizes aggregating many thousands of dollars for the production of a flying machine of the "heavier than air" variety, offered by English and French enthusiasts, have caused great activity among would be inventors, and some of the most prominent aeronautic experts predict that the year just begun will be marked by remarkable advances in the science and practice of aerial flight. To the gasoline engine and to the extraordinary mechanical progress made in automobilism is due the hope that something definite and worthy may be achieved by those who seek to solve the problem of aerial traveling.

The ordinary balloon, it is agreed, has little practical value save as an exciting form of sport and for purposes of observation in calm weather. In anything like a stiff breeze it is the sport of the winds and quite useless from a practical point of view. Better things are said of the cigar shaped contrivances utilizing both the gas bag and the gasoline engine. Six years ago Santos-Dumont was able to steer an airship of this kind around the Eiffel tower, running with and against the wind. Since that time hundreds of similar steerable balloons have been built in France until today they are nearly as common as the spherical gas bag. Nevertheless it is realized that these are far from representing a solution of the problem of practical navigation of the air. They have, in fact, only stimulated the desire for something that will represent a radical improvement, such as the successful "heavier than air" vessel would be. The latter would mean, naturally, a dirigible vessel which could be driven in any kind of weather and in any desired direction. A fortune in prizes already awaits the inventor of such a vessel, to say nothing of the monetary return in a business way. Two prizes of $50,000 each, one in England, the other in France, await the inventor of the successful aeroplane.

The mechanical difficulties in the way of producing a perfectly dirigible airship are immense because of the number of contingencies that must be provided for in traveling through such a mobile and treacherous element as the air. Machinery that can be depended on not to fail and precipitate the "heavier than air" machine to the earth is the most necessary qualification, but this can be provided, it is known, if the method of propulsion can be invented. The screw propeller idea is by no means ideal because of its great bulk, its poor lifting power and its enormous waste of energy. A flapping propeller, moving from side to side, seems to give promise, but many sound thinkers favor an approximation to the bird method of flight, though serious difficulties lie in the way of converting circular motion derived from a motor into the complicated and various motions performed by the wings of a bird. Even if such motion could be approximated by mechanical means great skill would be required in directing the controlling mechanism, as the constantly changing aerial conditions would have to be instinctively provided against.

Toy models working after the manner of a bird's wings have successfully traveled a few yards, but have failed of success when enlarged to any extent. That the air is a region in which man can travel has been proved, however, and that under conditions he can sail or fly through it by the aid of mechanical power has also been demonstrated, but many years are likely to elapse before any practical method of aerial navigation can be attained. It is a problem that will not be solved hurriedly, but that a solution will come eventually is now almost a settled conviction with students of aeronautics, and the incentives offered abroad within the past few months give the hope that great progress, if not actual achievement, will mark the current year.—New York Sun.

London Theater Cleaners.

The housemaids, or, in theatrical language, the cleaners of a theater, if an average were taken of London theaters, would number a dozen. Every day the whole of the auditorium has to be swept and dusted, and the actors' dressing rooms cleaned and made ready for their occupation at night. The work is under the superintendence of a housekeeper, who gets a salary of at least £3 a week, while each cleaner gets about £1. There are many ladies' maids to each theater who are known as dressers. To each dressing room there is at least one, and the pay is the same throughout the whole company—2 shillings for each performance, exclusive of the tips.—London Leader.

To Help the Divers.

The difficulty a diver experiences in lifting weights beneath the water is partly overcome by a new Italian invention, which has been formally adopted by that government. The mechanism is a diving suit, the artificial arms of which are worked from the inside by the wearer. The leverage thus secured enables the diver to lift objects heavier than he could otherwise handle. In addition to this improvement over the old method, a high power electric light that will penetrate the water for some distance is placed in the helmet.

Oxen as Racers.

Attempts are being made in France to train oxen for saddle riding, and several races have been organized to test their capacity. They have been trained not only as racers on the flat, but also as successful jumpers. The bridle and saddle used are almost similar in general design to those for hunters.

Money a man has spent seldom worries him unless it was spent for something that interferes with his digestive apparatus.—Chicago News.

If a man has a testy temper it is folly to put it to the test.

BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1906) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

she could be persuaded her life is in danger, once the King has left the palace, she will go of her own accord. I am quite ready to see her and tell her so."

For Denise was still haunted by the desire, through some act of self-sacrifice,—and to visit Madame de Pompadour would be a painful humiliation,—to atone for what her conscience called treachery in the past to the cause. And if only the Pompadour would leave, Andre would be really free from her baleful influence and even now might be saved against himself.

"It is not necessary, Mademoiselle," the Chevalier said. "I have just come from Madame's salon." The company that had welcomed his noiseless entry waited breathlessly. "I think I have convinced her she had better leave Versailles this very afternoon."

Denise joined heartily in the sigh of relief. But the Chevalier's next sentence was disquieting. "The Vicomte de Nerac," he said, "is now in audience with the King."

What did that mean? Had the King sent for him? He was strong enough to see him? Had the doctors permitted it? Were the ministers and the confessor to be present? The Chevalier could not answer these questions. But he could vouch for the fact, as the Vicomte had himself told him half an hour ago of the royal summons.

"More than ever the grisette must leave," the Abbe de St. Victor pronounced. "Else the Vicomte will be her agent and effect a reconciliation."

Mont Rouge and the Duke de Pontchartrain were holding an earnest conversation in whispers with the Chevalier. What the Chevalier said clearly gave them great satisfaction, and Mont Rouge studied with ill-concealed joy a paper which looked like a plan that the Chevalier had produced.

"The time has come for the dice," Mont Rouge said decisively. With the help of the Duke he cleared a table and laid out on it four dice-boxes.

"The ladies will throw as well as the gentlemen?" asked the Comtesse des Forges. She was looking meaningly at Mont Rouge.

"It is hardly necessary," the Duke said carelessly. "But if one lady be good enough to take her chance then all must. What do you say, ladies?"

"I am always unlucky," remarked the Duchess, "so I will take my chance."

"And you, Marquise?" the Duke turned deferentially to Denise. Mont Rouge took up one of the dice-boxes and began to rattle it noisily. Had his courage not been beyond reproach, a close observer might have thought he was at that moment very nervous. The Comtesse des Forges was yawning at her beautiful face in the mirror.

Before Denise could reply, Andre was seen standing on the threshold. A cold air seemed at once to blow over the room. No one offered a word of greeting, and the conversation proceeded just as if a lackey had entered. The Chevalier, indeed, went so far as to bow haughtily and to leave the room with the air of a man who found Andre's presence an intolerable intrusion. Denise alone marked how pale Andre was and how his dark eyes burned. A choking sensation, as if her heart had ceased to beat, mastered her.

"I am sure," Andre said very slowly and distinctly. "It will interest you ladies and gentlemen to know that I have ceased to be Captain of the Queen's Guards, by His Majesty's commands." A rustle of skirts, a suppressed exclamation, a snuff-box dropped, showed in the dead silence the emotion this news had produced. "I am ordered," Andre continued, "to retire to Nerac until His Majesty is pleased to change his mind. My congratulations, ladies and gentlemen. You desired and plotted my ruin. You have achieved it."

The curtain dropped. "And you, Marquise?" repeated the Duke imperturbably, holding out a dice-box to Denise as if nothing had interrupted the conversation.

Denise saw all the flushed faces, the joy, the banished fears. Too late! Too late! She could not save Andre. No, but perhaps she could still punish the woman who had seduced and ruined the man she loved.

"Of course I will gladly take my chance," she answered.

Andre was pacing down the gallery. No one could have taken him for a ruined man, for aught than a proud officer in the Chevau-legers de la Garde, a Croix de St. Louis, and a Cordon Bleu. Though he knew that fate had at last smitten him down, the bitterest thought in his mind was that in a few hours Madame de Pompadour would be flying, too, from Versailles. The twelve hours would run out; she would never see him again.

"So it is Nerac after all?"

Andre started. The Chevalier was at his elbow. "No," he answered, "it will not be Nerac."

"The best swordsman in France will, to be sure, take a lot of killing," the young man retorted lightly.

The flash in Andre's eye showed with what true sympathy the Chevalier had divined his meaning.

"Well, Vicomte, let us say adieu. We shall not meet again in Versailles, nor elsewhere, I fancy." Behind the tone of raillery peeped out a strange, almost tragic, gravity.

They shook hands in silence, had, in fact, separated a few paces when the Chevalier added carelessly, "There's was a wench asking for you in the stables—Yvonne or some such name—I couldn't make out what it was all about, but she seemed distressed at not getting word with you. Pardon my mentioning such a trifle." He hurried away.

Yvonne! Andre halted dead. Yvonne! Name of St. Denys, what did that mean? For a moment he wavered as if he hoped against hope that Denise might appear. Then his spurs rang out on the polished floor. He was hurrying to the stables.

The Chevalier went back to the antechamber.

"Only two," Mont Rouge was saying, as he entered the room, "only two threw sixes, two ladies curiously enough, the Comtesse des Forges and the Marquise de Beau Sejour."

"How stupid," yawned the Comtesse. "Must we throw again? Or, perhaps, Mademoiselle Denise will kindly withdraw and leave me victor?"

"No, no," protested Mont Rouge, "the cast of the dice must be fairly played out; I insist. And the company unanimously agreed with him.

"Oh, very well." The Comtesse shrugged her shoulders. "Comte, you shall throw for me this time."

Mont Rouge took up one of the dice-boxes which he had been fingering for some minutes.

"And will the Marquise permit me to throw for her," inquired the Chevalier.

Denise assented with a nod. But the suggestion did not seem to please the Comtesse. A gleam of vindictive malevolence lingered under her heavy lids, but a glance from Mont Rouge reassured her.

The Chevalier advanced and threw a four and a three. Mont Rouge, the company standing round and watching eagerly, threw carelessly enough a two and a one.

"Bungler!" cried the Comtesse, "you have lost."

"I did my best," Mont Rouge answered, looking into her eyes, and he added in a whisper, "my best for you. You have lost, but I have won."

The Comtesse put her hand warningly on her lips. Her gaze lingered on Denise, pale and calm, accepting her victory as the inevitable will of fate. "My congratulations, Mademoiselle," she said in the silky tones with which women preface the insult of a kiss to their most-feared rival.

"I will accept them to-morrow," Denise answered, "when I have done my duty."

While the company were chattering gaily the Chevalier carelessly and unnoticed took up the dice, first the four and the three he had thrown for Denise and then the two and the one thrown by Mont Rouge, which were still lying on the table. As he put back the two and the one into the box which belonged to Mont Rouge he smiled. He had detected these two were loaded, yet curiously enough he said nothing. Indeed, the discovery seemed to give him positive pleasure, and he rallied the Comtesse des Forges for a good half-hour, till her husband stammered with rage and Mont Rouge was sulky with jealousy.

Just as the company were breaking up a sweating horse dashed into the stables of the palace. Andre flung himself from the saddle. He had ridden from "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold" at a break-neck gallop and his spurs were red. He now hurried off to Madame de Pompadour's salon, bursting in from the secret staircase.

Madame gave him one look. "Begone! quick, hussy," she cried to the maid who was packing. The scared girl fled from the room.

"Well?" Madame held out her arms in awful suspense.

"Is the secret despatch," Andre panted, "still in your keeping?"

"Yes, yes, what of it?"

He sat down and wiped his face. "Ah! thank God!" he muttered.

Madame kneeled down beside him. "What is it?" she asked, in a caressing voice, "does the King want it?"

"The King has already left Versailles; he is now on his way to Rambouillet."

A cry of despair was wrung from her. "Then I am indeed ruined," she moaned. "You have come to tell me so. Ah!" she sobbed, her head in her hands on his knees.

"No," he raised her up. "I have come to save you."

She stared at him stupefied, incredulous.

"Yes, Madame. You must leave Versailles at once, but you must go to Rambouillet."

"You are mad or drunk." She pushed him away angrily.

"No—no." He almost forced her into a seat and began to talk rapidly and with intense conviction. Madame listened at first sullenly, then gradually became interested, then excited; the lights began to blaze in her eyes, the color rose in her cheeks. She interrupted sharply with questions. When Andre had finished she sat thinking.

"By God! I will do it." She and sprung to her feet. She was once again the Queen of Love, unconquerable, immortal. "I can do it and I will."

"Leave the rest to me, Madame," Andre said.

She put a hand to his shoulder. "And your reward?" She was wooing him unconsciously, as she wooed all men.

"I will ask for it when I have succeeded."

"And you shall have it. I promise."

An hour later the Palace heard with rapture that Madame de Pompadour had fled to Paris, in such fear for her life she had not had time to take even her jewels with her. Her household was to follow her as soon as possible. In the Queen's antechamber the joy was inexpressible. A third miracle! a third miracle! The grisette had vanished. Ah! if she returned now to one of the King's castles it would be to the Bastile, not Versailles.

What had Andre discovered?

When he had reached the stables he could not find Yvonne, but at "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold," whither he hurried, he was not disappointed. And Yvonne had news to give him as thrilling as unexpected. The English spy she had learned was coming to the inn that very afternoon to meet a strange woman, and the meeting was to be kept a solemn secret. Yvonne had felt sure Monseigneur ought to know, and had ventured as far as the Palace in search of him. Andre's heart leaped at the chance that fate, which had buffeted him so sorely, had now by a miracle put in his way. The spy could be no other than George Onslow, with whom he had crossed swords in the wood the night before Fontenoy; and the woman? Would she be the flower girl of "The Gallows and the Three Crows," the crystal-gazer, the mysterious "princess," whose dancing had first stirred his blood in London, the woman who had said she loved him? Or would it be some unfortunate, caught like himself in the terrible toils of a mystery which bid fair to be the ruin of them all?

What did it matter? Andre was sure of one thing: Could he but hear what passed at that meeting he would be many steps nearer to the solution of the blood-stained riddle of "No. 101."

Perhaps he could yet save Madame de Pompadour, yet win Denise, yet take vengeance on his foes. The hand of destiny was in this. With "No. 101" his life had as it were begun; at each stage he had been now thwarted, now strangely aided, by the acts of the unknown traitor; with "No. 101" it was clearly fated to end. Despair, insatiable curiosity, the blind impetus of forces he could not control, alike steeled him to make the attempt.

Yvonne was easily persuaded; indeed, she had already schemed for it, and with her help he lay concealed in the room of meeting and awaited with a beating pulse the arrival of the traitors. The spy proved to be George Onslow, as he had guessed, and Andre studied his able, sleuth-hound face, the dark eyes of slumbering passion, and the sensual lips, with the eery yet joyous shiver of one who feels that here is an opponent with whom reckoning must be made before life is over. The woman, however, was unknown to him. She was certainly not the crystal-gazer. Nothing more unlike the black hair and dark eyebrows, the creamy skin, of that mysterious enchantress could be imagined. For this was a lady who to-day we should say had stepped straight from a pastel by Latour, or, as Andre thought, from the Salon de Venus at Versailles, a girl with the figure of Diana and that indefinable carriage and air which only centuries of high birth and the company of such can bestow. Denise's grey eyes and exquisite pose of head were not more characteristic of the quality that the noblesse of the ancien regime rightly claimed as their monopoly, than were the blue eyes and innocent insolence of the stranger. And yet Andre felt that in the most mysterious and irritating way she reminded him of some one. But of whom? Of whom? And then he almost laughed out loud. Of Yvonne!

They both talked in English as English was talked in London, without a trace of a foreign accent. Now if one thing was certain Yvonne did not know a word of English, for he had tried her by many pitfalls in the past and she had simply showed boorish but natural ignorance. Nor could it be the crystal-gazer, for he remembered her English was not the English of the salons. Once only did they drop into French, and then Andre was more puzzled than ever. Onslow spoke it extraordinarily well, yet his accent betrayed him at once; the girl, however, revealed to a noble's sensitive ear the idiom and tone so much more difficult to acquire than mere accent of the Faubourg St. Germain. Had the Comtesse heard that sentence she would have said it might have been spoken by the Duchesse de Pontchartrain. Strange, but true.

Much of the conversation was quite unintelligible. There was a reconciliation to begin with, and Andre marvelled at the subtle way in which the woman soothed the man's anger, and then with enchanting nuances of provocation, of look, of gesture, quietly reduced him to helpless and adoring submission. And George Onslow was not the only man in the room who at the end of that half-hour felt as clay in her hands. They talked, too, of incidents, of persons, of things which to Andre were a closed book. But the main substance was perfectly clear and deliriously enthralling to the concealed hearer. That very night the secret despatch in Madame de Pompadour's handwriting, which the Court had tried to win by murder, was to be stolen from the escritoire in which it still reposed, and in which the King's sudden illness and the ignorance of its existence by all save Madame herself and Andre had permitted it to stay. Onslow apparently had wormed out the fact of its existence; the woman now informed him of its hiding-place, and together they planned for its theft, that it might be used by the English Government to blast and ruin the King, with whom that Government was still at war. It would also ruin the Jacobites, which was not less important in English eyes. That it would ruin Madame de Pompadour neither Onslow nor the woman seemed to consider nor care about. Why should they? What were Madame and the hatred of a court to the English or they to her?

But Andre also learned many other things that were as interesting. It was George Onslow who had informed the anti-Pompadour party of the errand which had led to the attack on Andre himself. And Andre gathered that it was with the help of some one at Versailles whose name was not mentioned, for he was always spoken of as "Lui," that the theft was to be executed. A double-edged business, in fact, this plot. The stolen despatch would do the work of the English Government, but it would also do the work of the Court. When its contents were made public Madame would be ruined automatically. Hence the connivance of "Lui" and his friends in the scheme.

The completeness of their information, the cold-blooded way in which they arranged to a nicety the smallest detail, appalled Andre. They both knew exactly where Madame was lodged, how to get there, and how to escape, of every fact concerned with the King's illness and of Madame's certain flight, on which the success of the plot hung. Who exactly was to be the thief he could not make out; that apparently had already been arranged, but George Onslow was to be at the palace, and he was then to make his way to this inn, whence he and his accomplice were to vanish their own way into the friendly slums of Paris, that would shelter every crime committed against itself and France.

"And the Chevalier?" Onslow had asked.

The woman replied in a low voice: "Have as little to do with the Chevalier as possible. He is not to be trusted in this business. He is no friend of mine and no friend of yours. But," she paused, "he is far too much a friend of De Nerac."

At the mention of his own name Andre almost betrayed his presence, because the warning drew from Onslow a deep "Ah!" and a look of undying hatred, jealousy, and fear. But what had thrilled him quite as much as the look and speech itself was the suppressed emotion in the speaker's voice. He had only heard a woman speak like that once in his life, when he and Denise had parted at the foot of the Pompadour's stairs an hour or two ago and he had refused to let her save him.

"Take care of De Nerac," the woman added slowly, "he ruined you once, and if he can he will ruin you again. De Nerac is the only man who has beaten me. Nor am I the only woman who has found that out to her cost."

Onslow thrust out his hand. "What does that say?" he demanded with a curious mixture of bravado, curiosity, and fear.

She studied the lines carefully. "Before long you and he will meet," she answered, "and only one will survive: which," she paused, "rests with God."

Andre found his sword coming slowly out of its sheath. Pah! Let the traitor wait. The woman was right. Onslow must first do his night's work, and then—and then—ah!

Onslow, too, had said nothing, but his face was eloquent of his resolve. She let him kiss her fingers, even let them linger in his, and her look promised much more of reward when the task had been successfully accomplished. The spy left the room with the air Andre might have done, the air of a man who was daring all things, hoping all things, for a woman's sake. Bitter as Andre felt towards this cold-blooded traitress, he wished so fair a woman had not looked at that sensual sleuthhound like that.

Once alone the girl stood thoughtfully gazing into space, and presently with a shiver wiped her fingers. Andre, lost in his thoughts, missed the refined scorn with which she flung the handkerchief she had used on to the burning logs, as if it was soiled. Then she sat down in front of the fire, rested her chin on her hands, and mused. A faint but long-drawn sigh floated up to the blackened rafters. Andre started. Where was he? Lying, surely, in the damp grass on the rim of that grisly wood at Fontenoy, staring up at a window in a charcoal-burner's cabin, which had been stealthily opened. For just such a sigh had greeted him on that night, a sigh from a weary woman's heart.

And with an exultant throb in his blood he felt that at last he was in the presence of "No. 101." The riddle was solved at last.

The woman stretched her arms as if in pain,—the gesture was strangely familiar,—rose with decision, and glided from the room.

Andre waited a few minutes before he cautiously made his escape. All his doubts were gone. His suspicions of the Chevalier had been dispelled by the traitorous pair; if Yvonne was an accomplice it mattered not; he saw what must be done. One more great stroke and the game which he had been fighting for so long would be his. Yes. He would save Madame de Pompadour, take vengeance on his foes, and win Denise. Not least, the man who had saved an army of France at Fontenoy would reveal the secret and destroy the traitor who had baffled all and betrayed the destinies of his race.

And it was with the scheme planned out to a nicety that he burst into Madame de Pompadour's salon.

The Watteau-like shepherdesses of the clock on the mantelpiece in the salon of Madame de Pompadour chimed out eleven tinkling strokes into the darkness—how few of us who have stood to-day in that dismantled room have succeeded in hearing even the echoes of what those bare walls could tell of the true history of France, the history that can never be unearthed by the Ecole des Chartes. Just as the chimes died away Andre climbed noiselessly up the secret stair, and crouched with drawn sword and pistol cocked behind the curtain a corner of which he pulled back far enough to give a clear glimpse into the room. It was the third time since Madame had fled that he had, thief-like, lurked in that hiding-place, and, as before, all was ghastly still. Two or three of Madame's servants had followed her flight; the rest, he was aware, had proclaimed their allegiance to the Court. The powerful favorite who had dismissed a minister was ruined, and none now more noisily swore to their hatred of her than the men and women who had thronged her toilette or taken her pay.

In the dim light Andre could make out the half-packed trunks, the litter of disorder, so eloquent of their owner's disgrace. How were the mighty fallen. Here indeed was a truer text for priest and preacher than the sins of the woman who had not been the first to grace these silent apartments, an accomplice in the passions of a King of France. The air to-night was thick with ghostly memories of other women, not less fair and frail, to whose inheritance of soiled supremacy the Marquise de Pompadour had succeeded. And there, gleaming in a faint ray, shone the escritoire which contained the despatch. To complete her mastery of the master of France, Madame had written it with her own hand—had, by doing so, her enemies hoped, signed her own death-warrant. The King's secret. Little did Andre know, as he waited, that the true story of Louis's incredible and persistent determination to pursue his own tortuous policy, to revel in thwarting and intriguing against his own ministers—at once a disease, a passion, and a pastime in that enigma of kings—was in all its labyrinthine details reserved to be the discovery of a noble a century hence, and to be read in a Republican France, a France that had done with kings, that made Versailles a public picture gallery, a France that had seen the victorious legions of Germany offer an imperial crown to the descendant of the parvenu Prussian ally of Louis in the Fontenoy campaign in yonder Galerie des Glaces of the Roi Soleil.

Andre shivered. He was thinking only of "No. 101." Could that girl of his own race, if ever woman was, really

Women Avoid Operations

When a woman suffering from female trouble is told that an operation is necessary, it, of course, frightens her.

The very thought of the hospital, the operating table and the knife strikes terror to her heart.

It is quite true that these troubles may reach a stage where an operation is the only resource, but a great many women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after an operation has been decided upon as the only cure. The strongest and most grateful statements possible to make come from women who by taking made from native roots and herbs, have escaped serious operations, as evidenced by Miss Rose Moore's case, of 307 W. 26th St., N.Y. She writes:-

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured me of the very worst form of female trouble and I wish to express to you my deepest gratitude. I suffered intensely for two years so that I was unable to attend to my duties and was a burden to my family. I doctored and doctored with only temporary relief and constantly objecting to an operation which I was advised to undergo. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it cured me of the terrible trouble and I am now in better health than I have been for many years."

This and other such cases should encourage every woman to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before she submits to an operation.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised.

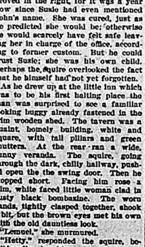
Autumn was dying in a blaze of crimson and gold. Everywhere color fairly rioted, from the vivid blue of the cloudless arching sky, against which the green of scattered firs stood sharply defined, down to the wind blown leaves through which the old white horse shuffled his slow way. Squire Godfrey, justice of the peace for the county and now out riding circuit, let fall the reins while he gratefully inhaled long breaths of the clear October air. The nuts must surely be ripening.

From the woods on his left rang out the merry voices of children, and involuntarily the squire smiled. In those very woods forty years ago he and Hetty had gone a-nutting—Hetty, with her dancing roguish brown eyes, her plain little calico frock and the deep sunbonnet always hanging by one string. How distinctly he could see the little figure!

Then the shaggy gray eyebrows met in a heavy frown over the keen blue eyes. What was Hetty to him but the girl who had flouted and mocked him, driving him away from home for these wretched ten years! Well, he had come back and made a success of his life, and the squire's frown smoothed itself as he reflected on the prosperity which was his. And Hetty had married Johnson Wetherby, who had died not long after, leaving her with one boy to educate and care for. She had done it well, admitted the squire grudgingly. But that young John should have presumed to court his Susie! The squire's frown became a scowl as he whipped up the old white horse. He would have none of that nonsense.

Luckily Susie was a good girl. She submitted quietly enough to the thundering pronunciamento launched at her head by the irate squire. She was not to see Wetherby, not to write to him, except the one letter conveying her father's decision.

"And you cannot marry him without my consent for three years yet,"



"LEMUEL," SHE MURMURED.

chuckled the squire, "for I won't sign the license. Of course if you choose to run off to some other county"—

But Susie shook her head. No, she would not do that.

It was well that he had been so firm, pursued the squire. He had been proved in the right, for it was a year now since Susie had even mentioned John's name. She was cured, just as he predicted she would be; otherwise he would scarcely have felt safe leaving her in charge of the office, according to former custom. But he could trust Susie; she was his own child. Perhaps the squire overlooked the fact that he himself had not yet forgotten.

As he drew up at the little inn which was to be his first halting place the man was surprised to see a familiar looking buggy already fastened in the trim wooden shed. The tavern was a quaint, homely building, white and square, with tall pillars and green shutters. At the rear ran a wide, sunny veranda. The squire, going through the dark, chilly hallway, pushed open the the swing door. Then he stopped short. Facing him rose a slim, white faced little woman clad in dusty black bombazine. The worn hands, tightly clasped together, shook a bit, but the brown eyes met his own with the old dauntless look.

"Lemuel," she murmured.

"Hetty," responded the squire, bewilderedly breaking the silence of thirty years.

A sudden appeal flashed up into the thin face. Her fingers strained themselves desperately in their cotton gloves.

"Lemuel," she began again, "I—I want to speak to you—I've wanted to for a long time, but you wouldn't let me. Then John told me that you would probably stop here today"—

"Ah, yes, John," said the squire in an altered tone. "For the moment I had forgotten John. It is to him, then, that I am indebted for this pleasure," his stubborn mouth wrinkling into a sudden sarcasm.

Mrs. Wetherby regarded him with a level glance.

"Yes, it is John," she said steadily. "For my own sake I should never have pleaded. That you chose to take as serious a bit of girlish folly, a childish pique which one kind word from you would have melted, for all that—let it go. The past is past. But John, my boy—must his life, too, be spoiled? He loves your daughter. She loves him," unheeding the squire's angry flush. "Must they lose their youth and let life's sweetest years be sacrificed merely to satisfy a dislike of me, Lemuel?" A passionate energy inspired her eager words.

"Dislike," repeated the squire thoughtfully. "Dislike. Was it really that?" Whatever his faults, the squire was truthful. "But, Hetty," a sudden warmth breaking into his own voice, "Hetty, you said—you said 'spoiled too.' Do you mean that you cared? Did you, Hetty?" with compelling eyes on hers.

"Yes," said Mrs. Wetherby simply, "I cared. And you went away, you never wrote, and so—at last—I married Johnson Wetherby.—He was a good husband." A sudden impulse of loyalty toward the dead surged within her.

"And I married Susan Martin," mused the squire aloud, but he was conscious of what he was saying. A great wonder held him fast. Was this the quiet, self repressed woman who all these years had sat across the aisle from him every Sunday morning in church, this slender, vibrant creature, trembling in the might of her demand for happiness of her son? Was this the woman whom he had believed without feeling? In a sudden flash of insight he caught himself, a man cherishing the hidden resentment which year by year hardened character and face, while she— A tender reverence slowly crept into the stern old eyes.

"Come," he said gently, "we'll have some dinner, and then we can talk about John."

When, a week later, the squire's buggy pulled up before the honeysuckle laden porch of home, the owner's brows were drawn together into a semblance of its former frown. The mouth held its accustomed lines. Only in the deep set blue eyes a new light gleamed irrepressibly. But Susie did not see. The girl came slowly to the door. Close behind followed a tall, slim young fellow with steady brown eyes. The squire stared.

"Father," announced Susie, pale, but resolute, "I want to tell you at once that I'm married to John. The blank licenses for any one needing them were on your desk already signed. It was only necessary to fill in the names. I—I hope you forgive me. But if you don't," as her father still stared with features unrelaxed, "I'm ready to go. I couldn't leave the house alone, though. And, besides, I wanted to tell you myself. We were married this morning." The squire's own defiant will beamed from her blue eyes. She was his own child, all right, the squire recognized, with an amused recollection of his former thought, and he could hardly sue himself for issuing a license to a minor without her parent's consent, his own name being signed to the document.

The squire threw down his reins.

"Well," he capitulated, "if it's done, it's done. And we were planning to give you such a fine wedding too!" Then as an amazed "we" broke from the startled girl Squire Godfrey leaned over and patted the curly head.

"I'm not going to scold," he declared heartily. "Fact is, I'm married myself. My wife's waiting now at the hotel for you to come; said I must tell you myself first. So run and get on your hat, John," while a long, searching look passed between the two men as their hands met, "you've got to be doubly a son to me now. Your mother has taken me at last."

Revenge Is Sweet.

In ordinary life he was a very important person, for he was a judge; but, alas, his liver got out of order just the same as if he had been an ordinary mortal, and a brother luminary had advised him to take a Turkish bath. It was a luxury he had not previously indulged in, and he noticed that the rubber was terribly rough. However, he patiently endured being punched, slapped and poked until he could stand the torture no longer.

"Is—it—qui-te—neces-sary—to—ma-ke—me—black—and—blue—all—over?" panted his lordship.

"Never you mind; you're all right." responded the rubber, redoubling his energy and grinning diabolically.

"Who (slap, groan) are (thud, groan) you?" gasped the judge, a horrible suspicion dawning in his mind. "Your (whack, groan) face does (whack, groan) look fa—(groan)-look fa—(groan) miliar" (swish, groan).

"Oh, you remember me, do you?" growled the rubber sarcastically. "Well, mebbe you'd like to have the chance to send me up for six months again for prize fighting—whoosh."—Pearson's Weekly.

Humors of Sculpture.

"When architects insist on decorating the facades of public buildings with symbolical groups," remarked a New York philosopher, "they often add unconsciously to the humor of everyday life. Just look at those two cherubs over the central window on top of the hall of records, for example. How can any one with a memory ever forget the scandals of the construction of that building in looking at these two figures? One of them is plainly going over the account books of the cost, while the other one is peering downward, as if he were trying to get a glimpse of that imitation marble work that has been put up on the walls of the upper stories. And the best of it is that such stories last. Who ever went to Washington for the first time that he did not have to listen to that yarn about the statue of Columbus or Washington or some one else that stands in front of the capitol, throwing the ball up to the Goddess of Liberty on the dome?"—New York Press.

Inflection.

The wife of an army officer at a western post recently had occasion to visit a small neighboring town to do some shopping at what is called the general store. She was much entertained by the variety and antiquity of the stock of goods, and as she passed out her eyes were attracted by a pile of mottoes, elaborately lettered and ornately framed, the upper one being the Scripture passage, "Walk in love."

As she paused the clerk, a dapper young man of more affability than advantages, stepped forward with the remark: "Them are the latest things in mottoes. This top one is swell to put over a young lady's door—'Walk in love.'"—Lippincott's.

The Outdoor Boy.

Let the boy learn to hit the bright spot with a rifle, and if war comes he can hit the button on the coat of an enemy the first shot and does not have to be taught to shoot over again after he enlists. If he is familiar with guns, boats, water and the wild woods, he will be handy anywhere, and you can't lose him. Any boy who has got a father who won't do the right thing by him and give him a chance to love the woods and the water and the free, clean air that God serves free, when you get far enough away from man's city can come along with me some time, and I will show him how to have the time of his life.—Outer's Book.

His Reformation.

"Yes," said the reformed cannibal chief, "I used to eat every missionary that came out here."

"That was before you got religion, eh?" queried the new missionary.

HUMOR

THEY MEANT WELL.

But He Was Not at All Offended at What Was Told Him.

"Say, old man, I don't want to butt in or poke my nose into other people's affairs or anything like that, but there's something I feel it my duty to tell you. I hope you'll not be offended at what I say, for I assure you that I speak as a friend. You are a very busy man, and you find it necessary to be out of town a good deal, so, of course, you can't be blamed for not seeing some things that other people have noticed, and, as I said before, I hope you won't think I am unduly meddlesome or"—

"For heaven's sake, what is it? Speak out."

"Well, the truth is that—now, I want you to fully understand that I am urged only by the purest motives to say this—the truth is that something has been going on for several weeks past that has worried your friends a good deal and that they think you ought to know. I can understand why you haven't noticed it yourself, and if I were in your place and any one came to me and said what I am about to say to you I'd be likely to get excited and perhaps cause trouble, but I hope you'll be calm and remember that it is only the feeling of friendship I have for you that urges me to"—

"Say, if you don't speak out I'll—I'll"—

"Now, don't get excited. That's just what I've been trying to keep you from doing. To come out plainly, old man, your wife has been seen in company with young Woodson a good deal lately. He's been taking her to matinees, to lunches and to"—

"Oh, ha, ha, ha! Is that all? He's half crazy about our daughter and thinks it is necessary to get solid with her mother in order to become a member of the family."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Candidate's Device.

A candidate for a provincial town council could neither compose a speech nor deliver one if composed for him, but he was a shrewd fellow and got rid of his difficulties, the local newspaper states, in an ingenious way. He bought a ready made speech for 2s. 6d. and then hired a gang of men to interrupt his meeting. As soon as the reading of the speech began the hired "taxpayers" became unruly. The speaker did not persist in the attempt to deliver the speech. He handed the manuscript to a friendly reporter, and the speech of Mr. —— at such and such a meeting was duly placed before the electorate.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Bright Side.

"Oh, this poverty!" wept the beautiful wife when her shifty eyed husband came home. "The gas and electric companies have shut off their service because you have not paid their bills."

"Well, we can use candles," consoled the husband.

"And the telephone company has disconnected our instrument because we owe it two months' rental."

"So much the better. If any one tries to ring us up to spend the evening with us, they will think we are not at home."—Judge.

Marjorie—Well, and what does Aunt Jane think of her photo?

Reggie—Eh? Oh, she's jolly wild about it.

Marjorie—Why? Doesn't she think it's like her?

Reggie—Well, I think she's afraid it is.—Ally Sloper.

CANADA NOW A NATION

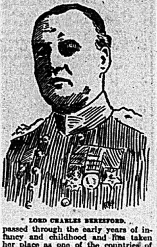
ADMIRAL LORD CHARLES BERESFORD PRAISES DOMINION.

Declares Canada Not Only Is the Country of the Future But Has Already Taken Her Destined Place—Unable to Find Greater Attachment to Britain In Any of the Colonies.

Lord Charles Beresford passed through Winnipeg recently on his way to New York. The admiral is in America in connection with the estate of his brother, Lord Delaval, who was killed recently in a wreck in Texas. He went west to San Francisco from Texas and reached the city by way of Vancouver.

"One of the common remarks we hear in Great Britain with reference to Canada," he said, "is that the Dominion is the 'coming country.' There can be no doubt regarding the future of the Dominion, which will be increasingly bright for hundreds of years to come.

"The fact is, however, not that Canada is the country of the future—Canada already has arrived. She has passed through the early years of infancy and childhood and has taken her place as one of the countries of the world.



LORD CHARLES BERESFORD.

"I cannot tell how pleasantly I have been impressed by all that I have seen in the West. I made short stays at several points, including Calgary and Medicine Hat. I had not previously seen much of Western Canada.

Visited Coast Years Ago.

"Many years ago, it was in 1864, I spent some time on Vancouver Island and on the main land of the Pacific Coast. These were the days when I was with the Pacific squadron. I was on three frigates on the Pacific, and was on shore on many fishing and hunting trips. The memories of those days are exceedingly pleasant.

"I was again in the Dominion in 1874, when I was on the Atlantic coast and saw something of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Of the great interior portion of Western Canada, I have seen nothing until the present time, and nothing would express my admiration too strongly.

"I was particularly struck with the great natural advantages about Medicine Hat, where we spent a few days. It would appear certain that this town is destined to become a city of great importance.

"The town appeared to me to be located very similarly, though in a smaller way, to, say Chicago, or Hanchow in China.

Great Commercial Future.

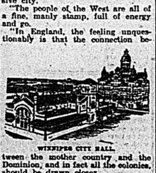
"The supply of natural gas, as long as it lasts, must have a great influence on the future commercial development of the city.

"Then there is the river, not very deep, but with an excellent water head and capable of carrying a considerable traffic. The town also has the rail head and, all in all, is possessed of singular advantages.

"Calgary also is remarkably built, and is a most thriving and progressive city.

"The people of the West are all of a fine, manly stamp, full of energy and go.

"In England, the feeling unquestionably is that the connection between the mother country and the Dominion, and in fact all the colonies, should be drawn closer.



WINNIPEG CITY HALL.

"I frequently have expressed the conviction, which is the conviction of large numbers of British people, that the colonies are of more consequence to Great Britain than Great Britain is to the colonies.

Imperial Feeling Strong.

"I have not been able to find anywhere in the colonies any traces of a feeling in favor of any change in the relations between the mother country and the colonies.

"If Canada should decide to break the connection between herself and the Empire, the tie of course would be broken at once.

"I believe, however, that there is not one of the colonies in which the people are more attached to the mother country than they are in Canada."

Speaking of war, Lord Beresford said: "There is less chance for war than at any previous time in the history of the world. There was a time when governors and rulers made war and peace. This is no longer the case. War cannot be declared unless the people are for war, and peace is not made until the people are for peace.

"What we must have in the Empire is a perfect organization, both in size and numbers, but it is better to have a small force, perfectly organized, than a large force disorganized.

"There can be no doubt that it must be the policy of the Empire now and for many years to come to be prepared for war."

Lord Beresford was informed of the contents of a letter appearing in The Morning Post from Sir Charles Tupper, suggesting that the representatives in London of the colonies should be members of the Privy Council, and thus admitted to councils of the nation.

"I should say it was a most excellent idea," he said. "We must get closer to the colonies. I believe the proposal would be warmly received in all parts of Great Britain, and there is no reason why the suggestion should not be adopted."

LIVED IN FIVE REIGNS.

Distinguished Canadian Lady Passes Away In Toronto.

By the death of Mrs. Featherston Osler who died recently in Toronto at the advanced age of 101, Canada has lost one of her most distinguished daughters.

Mrs. Osler, who was the widow of the late Rev. Featherston Osler, rector of Dundas and Flamboro, has lived under five British sovereigns, having been born in Cornwall, England, in 1806, when George III. was still on the throne. She was married in England, and accompanied her young husband to Canada when sent out in 1838 by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. As the pioneer missionary of the Church of England, Rev. Mr. Osler endured many hardships, all shared by his devoted wife. In 1882, Rev. Mr. Osler retired from active work and came to Toronto, where he resided until his death in 1895.

Since that time, Mrs. Osler seldom left her residence, but until a few years ago, she was an active member of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church of England, a body in which her deceased daughter, Mrs. Williamson, was a moving spirit in the early days of its existence.

There are now living five sons and a daughter, twenty-six grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

The celebration of Mrs. Osler's one hundredth birthday on December 14th last, aroused the very greatest interest not only among her large circle of relatives and friends, but in many cities where the names of her sons have become famous. All her living descendants with the exception of two or three were present on that occasion.

To few women fell the lot of seeing no less than four of her sons rise to eminence in differing but equally important walks of life, but this is the privilege which crowned Mrs. Osler's old age. Her second eldest son, the late Britton Bath Osler, K.C., was for years before his lamented death the chief ornament of the Bar of Canada. Edmund Boyd Osler, M.P., her fourth son is a leader in financial and political circles, and his brother, Mr. Justice Featherston Osler, has occupied an honored place on the bench for more than a quarter of a century. Her youngest son, Dr. Wm. Osler, regius professor of medicine at Oxford University, enjoys a world wide reputation in his chosen profession.

THE PRIME MINISTER.

He Is the Real Ruler of the Great British Empire.

The real ruler of the British empire is not the titular sovereign nor the hereditary nobility. It is the leader of the political majority, who derives his power solely from the direct vote of the people. The Prime Minister of England is subordinate neither to the King nor the House of Peers. Every man who shares with him in the work of the Government is his subordinate.

Following a general election the sovereign sends for a member of the majority party and instructs him to form a Government. This is one of those fictions of the constitutional authority of the sovereign to which the English people cling as to the heritage of tradition. The summons is delivered, but it is merely a form. The party leader is such not by the grace of the sovereign, but by the choice of the majority; not by election, but because he has the qualities of leadership.

Autocrat of the Empire.

The leader, having received the sovereign's instructions to form a Government, becomes by that mandate the autocrat of the empire. His power is absolute. Like the president, he may appoint whomsoever he pleases a member of his Cabinet, but, unlike the president, he is not influenced by geographical considerations, nor does he have to submit his nominations to the Senate. In both countries the members of the Cabinet hold office at the will of the appointing power, but the tenure of office is even more precarious in England than it is in the United States. Here a Minister may differ from the president on a matter of policy and not feel it incumbent upon him to resign. In England there can be no differences. Either a Minister agrees with his chief or he resigns.

Functions of Cabinet.

In England the Cabinet is an extra legal creation. Nominally it is one of the committees of the Privy Council, whose functions are to advise the sovereign, but this is simply a survival of mediaevalism. The Cabinet is under the sole control of the Premier, unhampered by royal or other interference. But—another survival—no member of the Cabinet may make public any matter discussed by the Cabinet, without the express sanction of the sovereign, and when the Premier issues a summons to a Cabinet council, which meets at irregular intervals, according to the exigency of public business, the Minister is "requested to attend a meeting of his Majesty's servants."

A Natural Question.

"Mamma, is Uncle Jake very wealthy?"

"Enormously so, dear."

"What is he guilty of?"

UNION IS STRENGTH

LESSONS GATHERED FROM THE TINY, BUT POWERFUL LOCUSTS.

WONDERS OF GOD IN NATURE

God's Mercy and Goodness Displayed In Creation—Value of An Observant Eye—How Locusts Work—Plea For Christian Unity—Sectarianism Must Be Eliminated If Christ's Kingdom Is to Prosper.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 21.—With the opening spring the preacher returns to the book of nature and finds a gospel lesson in the wonders of the awakening insect world. The text is Proverbs xxx, 27, "The locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands."

The more I study the Bible in connection with the revelations which science has given to us in the natural world the more wonderful and marvelous the omnipotence and omnipresence of God appear to me. There are some people who never study the goodness and mercy of God outside of the leaves of the holy book. When you begin to talk to them about the wonders of God in nature, they reply, "Why don't you preach the old gospel instead of talking about tadpoles and snakes and bugs and beetles and such stuff?" The reason I talk so much about nature, my friend, is because I find the character of God revealed there and the gospel preached there, and I am sustained by the example of the Bible itself, which is full of such sermonic themes. I have also the authority of the wisest of men, who bids us watch the conies building their houses in the rocks, and the ants providing food for the winter's storm, and the spider swinging her silken hammocks in the king's palaces, and the locusts marching forth to their conquests in great bands.

It is amazing how much our love and reverence for God will grow if we only study closely the marvelous conformations and habits of the lowest and most despised of his creatures. If we do not see God in the natural world, then it is because we have eyes that are blind, and it is about time we scattered the darkness of ignorance by letting in the light of investigation and study. When a new student entered one of Prof. Agassiz's classes, the great teacher of natural science would place before him the skeleton of an ordinary fish like the black bass. "Study that," would be his first command, "and then come and tell me what you see." The student in amazement would sit down and look at those dried bones for a little while, and then he would go to the professor's desk and say: "Why, teacher, I see the skeleton of a fish. That is all." Then the professor would show him how the fish's skeleton is joined together by one big backbone, like the skeleton of man; how the fish's tail and his fins are used by the fish as man's hands and feet are used when he swims; how the fish has a series of spines, above and beneath it to keep it in a perpendicular position, so it can cut its way through the water. The professor would point out that the head of the fish is made of strong bony substance, like the iron prow of a boat. There the strength of the fish must be very great. Thus the new student learned how the bones were fitted together and how the jaws were set for catching the prey. After he had spoken thus for a long time Prof. Agassiz would say: "My son, never say again that a bone is simply a bone. When you study a bone, you must notice how it joins with other bones and learn what is the purpose of that bone. Now you are ready to begin your scientific studies as one of my students." Thus, in my text, Solomon bids us study the locust, that marvelous little insect whose ravages are the dread of the farmer. He would have us observe how it is constructed, how it is adapted for the work it has to do and how it co-operates with its fellows, like a soldier in an army. This opening spring season is an appropriate time for following Solomon's advice and considering "the locusts, who have no king, but who go forth in bands."

In the first place, when I began to study the little creature of my text I was surprised to find out what an insignificant insect it was individually. God seems to have given it no means of self protection. It has no rapier with which to stab like the hornet, no sting like the bee, no cruel beak like the hawk, no deadly claw like the tiger, no deadly poison like the tarantula or the snake, no viselike jaw, as has the alligator, and no powerful wing like the wing of the albatross. It is so helpless as an individual that the smallest kind of insects can attack it with impunity. It is the prey of innumerable destroyers. Wherever the swarms of locusts go, there fly great flocks of greedy birds feeding upon them. When the locusts are in the egg or the larvae state, they are destroyed by the millions, yet these seemingly helpless insects have been the most feared of all the insects of the world. No plague of Egypt struck more terror to the hearts of Pharaoh and his subjects than this plague of clawless, beakless, poisonless, stingless locusts, but, when this thought dawned upon me I said, "Is it not a fact that the men and the women in this world who have accomplished most for God have carried no antlers, whose jaws concealed no poisonous fang, whose tongue never gave a rapier thrust and whose hand was never the murderous claw of the wild beast?"

But there is another fact to which I want to draw your attention in reference to these insignificant insects. They are insignificant as to the strength of their bodies. It seems as though the span of their life is as a breath. Hardly are they hatched and their wings grown than, like a moth flying about in a candle light, their lives seem to be snuffed out in a day, and yet the brevity of the locust's life does not startle me, for I find that some of the greatest men have been the shortest lived men.

Soon after Percy Shelley was drowned in the Bay of Spezia his widow, Mary Shelley, wrote these beautiful words: "Shelley, my beloved, this year has a new name from any thou knowest. When spring arrives, leaves that you never saw will shadow the ground, and flowers you never beheld will star it, and the grass will be of another growth. Thy name is added to the list which makes the earth bold in her age and proud of what has been." But, though Percy Shelley climbed to the highest pinnacle of fame, like John Keats, and Arthur Henry Hallam, and Raphael, and Robertson, and Alexander, and hosts of others of the world's greatest leaders, he died before middle life had been reached. You cannot judge a man's usefulness by the numerical list of his earthly days. Some of the world's greatest benefactors have been men who died before the silver hair was fringing their foreheads or before their youth had waned.

But the insignificance of the locust's intellect is even more startling than the brevity of its physical life. These locusts seem to be like the camels among the beasts and like the turkeys among the birds. They seem to be the stupidest of all insects. They seem to have no law of organization. They seem to have no skill in hive building, like the ant. They do not have the genius of the bee or the ingenuity of the beaver building his dam or the fox or the spider or the swallow. Dr. Henry McCook, the great authority on the ant and the spider, tells us that for hours he has lain down by an ant hive to study the wonderful intelligence of these insects. But the locust does not have the intelligence of an ant. Like the tortoise, which has been known to live and to walk for six months after its brain has been extracted, the locust seems to have but little intelligence, but this little intelligence used in a certain way has made its approach the terror of the beasts of the fields, the birds of the air and of man in his fortified castle.

In 1845 a considerable number of these insects visited the Lebanon region in Syria and remained there only a few days, just long enough to deposit their eggs and then disappear. In about six months those eggs were hatched. A short time afterward those small locusts started up the mountain sides. The whole earth seemed to be alive with them. From one hatching there seemed to be millions and billions of them. They rolled on like the movements of an augmented river. Then, when the reader realizes that this multitude of locusts was but the result of one hatching and that the same swarms of locusts not only deposited their eggs once, but many times during a year, he can to some extent realize the prolific and formidable power of these dreaded pests. Each female locust is supposed to lay about eighty eggs at a time. Nearly all their eggs are fertile. Thus it is possible for a female locust to have thousands and tens of thousands of descendants in a single year. This amazing power of multiplication staggers the imagination, but it is only the rapidity of it that makes it so wonderful.

The increase from year to year in the world's human population is as wonderful. Man is here exerting his influence on his generation. What will be his influence in the next generation through his children? We do not realize the past so clearly looking forward as we do looking backward. You had two parents. You had four grandparents and eight great-grandparents. You had sixteen great-great-grandparents and thirty-two great-great-great-grandparents. And if you trace your ancestors back to the time of William the Conqueror, or about 900 years, you had 800,000 different ancestors. And of all your ancestors there is not one whose influence is not being felt to greater or less extent in your life to-day. Let me illustrate this fact in another way even more startling. William Bradford of Plymouth colony died in 1657, or about 250 years ago. William Bradford had only three children, who lived to grow up and be married and have children of their own. Their names were William, Mary and Joseph. And yet there are living to-day in America over 5,000 direct descendants of William Bradford. Oh, do not tell me that my greatest gospel work is now in my children's lives! I tell thee if I can win them for God, and they, in turn, will win their children for God, within a few generations I will influence for God directly or indirectly more people than are to-day living in the state of California. There never was a truer statement made than "The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world."

But there is another fact to which I want to call your attention besides the fecundity of the locusts. It is to their gregarious habits. These seemingly insignificant insects are not hermits. They do not live alone or travel alone. They bury their eggs side by side. The young are hatched out together. They live together. They feed together. They travel together. And as a result they are not only feared on account of their numbers, but they are especially feared because these swarms of moving locusts can never be split up and separated from each other. Solomon, the inspired naturalist, wrote that, though the locusts have no king, they go forth in bands. If the locusts did not associate together in such great numbers, the damage they might inflict would not be seriously felt. It would be here a little and there a little. But when they unitedly move along and attack a garden or a valley or a forest they literally kill and devour everything in sight. Why cannot the Christian reformers of this world learn a mighty lesson to-day from the gregarious insignificant locusts?

The forces of evil make no such mistake as do the children of God. The saloon never fights the saloon as the church fights the church. There are enough advocates of temperance reform in the church to-day to sweep the wine sellers out of existence. What then is the trouble? One-half of those temperance advocates belong to one political party and half to another, and thus their influence at the ballot box is absolutely nullified. There are enough Christians to-day in the land to purify every city, morally as well as spiritually. But what is the difficulty? The church of one denomination will try to undermine the church of another denomination, and there is a common tendency to place sectarian creed higher than the gospel of the cross. The church members act just as though one half of a locust's swarm were to go to work and fight the other half of the swarm until they exterminated each other while the rich harvest fields were lying near at hand, full with ripened grain, ready to satisfy even their rapacious hunger.

What makes England the greatest factor of the world in international politics? It is this: The English people always act as a unit in a foreign movement. Though British subjects may have their home differences, as the members of a family criticise each other at their own firesides, yet when it comes to a foreign policy the world knows that all Britishers will stand shoulder to shoulder to support their king, no matter what their personal differences may be, even as the locusts in unison will swarm to attack a dense forest. May all the disciples of Christ learn to act as a unit for Christ! The most impressive power is the cumulative influence of overwhelming numbers. Internal differences mean friction. Friction brings exhaustion. Exhaustion is the forerunner of death. All that Satan wants is to have one half of the good Christian men of the world fight the other half of the good men of the world for the glory of God, and then there will be no need for Satan to wage a battle.

But there is one more thought that I have about the insignificant insects of my text, and then I am done. After the locusts have once taken up the line of march or of fight they can never be headed away from their straight course. When in a midnight tempest the great herd of cattle upon a western prairie take fright and, mad with bitter fear, stampede, the cowboy may ride to the head of the herd and turn the leaders and get them moving in a circle, but the locusts in their flight can never be headed off from moving in a straight line. Fires may be built, ditches may be dug, but they will march on or fly on until with their dead bodies they smother out the flames and fill up the ditches. Then over the corpses of their dead comrades the rest of the swarm will keep steadily on in their course.

Even the sea itself cannot stop them in their onward progress. Dr. W. H. Thomson, in his book called "Brain and Personality," records this wonderful fact: "While I was sojourning in Syria I heard that the whole country round Mount Lebanon was dismayed by the news that a vast army of marching locusts was coming from the eastern desert. The governor of the district ordered out a regiment of soldiers to aid the people to construct a great rampart of brushes to be set on fire as the locusts came up to it, hoping thus to save the gardens of Beirut. When they raked the prepared heaps of brush and these were set on fire, the locusts marched on without pausing until in a brief time they put the fires entirely out. As the sea was not far off, everybody hoped that they would take to surf bathing. When the vanguard reached the waves, like all true, good locusts, in they hopped till the billows seemed to roll only grasshoppers. Nor did the scene end until the last of the rear guard, faithful to the great law of his being, had skipped over the heads of his dead comrades to make his last leap into the blue waters of the Mediterranean." Oh, that we might all have the perseverance of the locusts! After God has once mapped out our line of march may we go on and on, no matter whether we live or die; may we still move on and on!

The trouble with most of our religious lives is that we do not act in concert. That is the first difficulty. The second is even more disastrous. We do not fight continuously and unrelentingly for the right. Our gospel movements for the most part are spasmodic. We are like a frisky colt trying to draw a load. We make a plunge now; we make a plunge again. But we not slowly and surely tighten the traces and then keep steadily on pulling in the straight line. When the locust once maps out his line of march, he never swerves one inch from the straight line. So may we first find out what our straight line of duty is, then slowly, surely and unswervingly go ahead, toeing that line, no matter what may happen to us personally.

And cannot we afford to follow the leadings of our God? Will he not direct us aright and care for us? Is not his power infinite? Cannot he triumph over even the power of the destroying locusts? Some years ago the harvests of one of our large western states were about to be destroyed by the annual visitation of this awful locust scourge. Year after year these locusts had come and deposited their eggs, and it seemed each year as though the farmer must desert his fields or starve. At that time there sat a Christian gentleman in the gubernatorial chair. He saw the almost certain financial destruction which was threatening his people. So he sent forth a proclamation that all Christians should gather in the different churches on a certain day and pray that God would save them for they were helpless before the locust plague. The day came. The whole state was in prayer. The proclamation was sent forth in the spring of the year. Now, what was the result of that day of fasting and prayer?

For a few days after the day of prayer the sun shone warm and bright. It was as hot a sun as that felt during any July harvest. The locust eggs were hatched out by the billions and trillions. The very dust of the road seemed to be alive with moving life. Then God placed his hand over the sun. A blizzard came whistling down from the far north. The biting cold made it necessary to start a fire in every stove. Within twenty-four hours the prayers of the pleading Christians were answered. The locusts were frozen to death. Man may stand helpless before an army of advancing, destroying locusts, but God's power is infinite. God's power is above every other power, even that of the locust.

MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve; the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"ZEPHRA'S FAREWELL.

The fifth and final production of "Zephra" at the opera house on Saturday evening attracted a good audience, and all were, as usual, delighted with the performance. Although this was the fourth night for the cast, all took their parts well and the play went off smoothly and with vim. During the evening Mrs. Jas. Grant, Mrs. A. P. Allen and Mrs. C. Wilmot were presented with handsome bouquets.

At the conclusion of the third act Col. Lazier came before the curtain and in a few well-chosen remarks, on behalf of the Hospital Board, expressed hearty thanks to all who had been instrumental in making "Zephra" such a decided success. From the little tots to the elder ones all had entered heartily into the spirit of the performance and he had no hesitation in saying that it was one of the prettiest plays which had ever been seen in the city. To Mr. Booth the Association and citizens owed a great debt of gratitude for the capable manner in which he had trained the children. His task had not been an easy one, but it had been most thoroughly accomplished. The speaker said he was certain he voiced the sentiments of the citizens generally when he requested that Mr. Booth should return to the city at some future period and again delight the citizens with the presentation of another play.

Mr. Booth, who next came forward, was loudly applauded. He thanked Col. Lazier for his kind references and said it had been a pleasure for him to train those who had taken part in "Zephra." Had he not been able to secure such good material the play could never have been so successfully put on as it had been here. He was delighted with all and was also delighted with the city. Since coming here nothing but kindness had been shown him on every hand. The announcement that he might possibly return here next fall or winter and present another play was most cordially received. He desired to publicly thank all who had taken part in "Zephra."

"THE KING OF TRAMPS" TO-NIGHT.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" says: "What yer face needs is—smiles." In "The King of Tramps," which comes to the Carman to-night, there is nothing but smiles. The sort that comes from honest merriment, caused by irresistible enthusiasm, from following the continuous moving panorama of comedy and music which for three hours floats merrily along in front of you. "Laughing with Philander" is the following day's bye-word, for truly Philander Tickle Pickle, the sunny "Tramp" will get you going and keep you moving with his quaint sayings and musical tongue. "Happy? why, happiness is my stock in trade; when the world looks dark to me I just put all my troubles down at the bottom of my heart, then I sit on the lid and smile."

RETURN BY REQUEST.

"Painting the Town," that very funny musical "hurrah" as presented by the Charles H. Yale Amusement Company, which so pleased our theatre-patrons earlier in the season, will be more than a welcome visitor when it plays a return engagement at the Carman next Friday. Without a doubt "Painting the Town" is one of the most entertaining musical comedies ever seen here, and it will without question draw the largest house of the season on its return engagement on the reputation made on its previous visit.

Female Immigrant Had Four Children But Not a Red Cent.

Two emigrant specials went through this city yesterday. We are told that one woman got off here, en route to Peterboro. She had four children and a ticket for Peterboro, but not a cent in the world. Inasmuch as the Peterboro train did not leave till to-day the immigration agent here had to look after the woman and her small brood, which he did. They left for Peterboro to-day, where the meal ticket of the family, it is to be hoped, is awaiting them.

Mrs. Dr. Coleman Died On Sunday

Mrs. (Dr.) E. H. Coleman, an old lady residing on the Front of Sidney, died last evening. On Friday last the deceased was taken ill and death resulted after twenty-four hours from an acute attack of indigestion and heart failure. Mrs. Coleman was 72 years of age, and was born in Canada. For over 30 years she had been a resident of Sidney, where she was favorably known and esteemed by a large circle of friends. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church. In addition to the husband, three daughters survive, namely: Mrs. H. Hoyle, Sidney; Mrs. Chas. Rice, Detroit, and Mrs. H. L. Ridings, of Utica, N.Y.

Elsie Janis' Brother Jumped From a Liner In Mid-Atlantic Ocean

The following despatch from New York will interest many in this city who saw the bright little actress referred to. Her brother, Percy, who is missing, was with Elsie Janis when she appeared last in this city, some two years ago:

New York, April 20. — Liebler & Co., theatrical managers, announce they have received a Marconigram telling of the disappearance of Percy Janis, the actor, and brother of Elsie Janis, from the steamship Minneapolis, on which he sailed for London. The wireless message read: "Percy Janis has been missing since Sunday. It is believed he jumped overboard."

Liebler & Co., immediately notified Mrs. Josephine Janis or Bierbauer, which was the original family name, Percy was 22 years old.

"I can't account for his disappearance," said Mrs. Janis. "He was a bright, cheerful boy, but has suffered for several years from severe stomach trouble. He may have been taken suddenly ill after the ship got to sea. He sent me a wireless from Sandy Hook, in which he said he was well and looking forward to an enjoyable trip."

For the last two years Percy Janis had acted as stage manager for his sister's play "The Vanderbilt Cup." At various times he had stepped in and taken small parts as he had shown promise of becoming something of an actor.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

There was rejoicing in the churches of Sherbrooke yesterday, for at the close of the previous day, the committee of one hundred citizens had secured in pledges for their new Y.M. C. A. building $31,000. A number of the pledges were binding only on the condition that $30,000 was realized by Saturday.

Mr Hunter of Albert College was the speaker yesterday afternoon. The quartette from the college rendered a beautiful selection. Mr. Hunter's timely remarks left a profound impression.

To-night Mr. Hunt meets his class at 7.30. The finance committee meets at 8.30.

Saturday evening the representatives met for forming the local football league. The election of officers and drafting of a schedule will be completed at the adjourned meeting next Wednesday.

Brockville People Want Cheap Bread

Brockville, Ont., April 20. — The workingmen of Brockville have taken the initial steps towards organizing a co-operative company for the manufacture of bread, and prospects are bright that the scheme will go through.

The shares are fixed at $2 each, and sufficient money will be subscribed to instal a plant. It is proposed to sell the bread at 4 cents per 1 1-2 lb. loaf, which, it has been figured, will cover the cost of production and operating expenses. The bakers are selling the 1 1-2 lb. loaf for 6 cents.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found it at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me.—ELDER JOHN T. A Razorless Shave

BURNING ASHES IS NOTHING TO LATEST DISCOVERY.

London, April 20.—There is consternation among the barbers of England over the invention of a Londoner named Witherington. He has made a paste which removes the beard without the use of a razor in 10 minutes.

The paste makes the hair so brittle that it can be rubbed off clean with a wet sponge. "No skin trouble" is guaranteed, and the performance is simply a part of washing the face upon arising in the morning.

The following advantages are claimed for the paste:

"No punctilious barber to ask if the razor is sharp enough? No second man waiting to brush your hat and ask with his manner for a tip! You rub on the paste, wipe it off with the sponge, and presto! You go down to coffee and rolls looking like a man fresh from the hands of the best barber in London. The cost is about one cent a shave—and tip yourself."

FOUR YEARS FOR BIGAMIST.

Belbeck At 53 Took 16-Year-Old Girl As His New Love.

London, April 22.—Jas. Belbeck of Exeter, who pleaded guilty to the charge of bigamy, appeared before Judge Macbeth Saturday and was sentenced to four years in the penitentiary.

Although he is 53 years of age, Belbeck became enamored of Ada Harris, a 16-year-old girl, and shortly afterward proposed marriage to her. The girl asked time to consider the matter and held him off for a while. One day she received a visit from Mrs. Belbeck, the prisoner's first wife, who informed her that she was the wife of Miss Harris' intended husband. The girl's parents then made a few casual enquiries in reference to the matter and found that no man by the name of John Bell had been married in this city in years. Miss Harris eventually accepted his offer of marriage.

"Did you tell the girl that you were not a married man?" asked Judge Macbeth.

"No sir, she didn't ask me out and out, your honor," replied the accused. "I lied to the minister who married us, though, and told him that I had never been married."

TWO MEN UPSET IN RIVER.

One Drowned, the Other Rescued by a Young Lad.

Brockville, April 22.—William Mack, 22 years of age, was drowned while crossing from Morristown to Brockville Saturday night, and his companion and brother-in-law, Joseph Mars, narrowly escaped the same fate. The men accompanied two others to the American side early in the evening, and when they started for home in a row boat are said to have been under the influence of liquor.

Mack was rowing, and in some way upset the boat. Neither could swim. Mars managed to cling to the boat, and his cries were heard by a boy named Peter Frazer, rowing from Morristown to Brockville, to whose plucky efforts Mars owes his life. Mars proved too heavy for Frazer to handle, so he towed the belated craft and the man to one of the sister islands.

After landing he was forced to wade out some distance to reach Mars, who by this time was lying on the top of the upturned boat unconscious. He pulled him off, but on reaching shore had not sufficient strength to take his body entirely out of the water. Leaving Mars partly submerged Frazer hurried back to Morristown and got aid. Doctors worked over Mars for two hours before he showed signs of life.

Mack leaves a wife and a young child.

Play Became Tragedy.

London, April 22.—A man, William Zeitz, while impersonating a signal man bound to the railroad line by robbers in a moving picture representation of a train-wrecking scene, was killed by a train near Croyden on Saturday. The train ought to have stopped, but failed to do so, owing to an error in the signalling.

Corn mills are often mentioned in the Bible. The original corn mill much resembled the modern druggist's pestle. Moses forbade corn mills to be taken in pawn, for that, he thought, was like taking a man's life in pledge.

LEGISLATURE CLOSES

Ontario House Prorogued on Saturday With Due Ceremony.

Important Address Made By Lieut.-Governor—Pledges Ministers to Take All Necessary Steps to Secure Provincial Rights—Reference to Cobalt Boom—Statute Revision Promised Next Session.

Toronto, April 22.—At 2.30 on Saturday afternoon his Honor Lieut.-Governor Clark formally prorogued the Ontario Legislature.

The ceremony was very simple and quiet, being marked by none of the pomp or display of the opening.

Only a few members remained in the city to see the end, and only a few ladies occupied places on the floor of the House. Being Saturday afternoon, however, quite a large number of people filled in their leisure by viewing the proceedings from the gallery.

His Honor, accompanied by his aides, Capt. Macdonald and Lieut. Young, was escorted by the Royal Canadian Dragoons. As they approached the buildings a salute of 15 guns was fired by "B" Battery of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery.

Makes a Long Speech.

His Honor's address was somewhat longer than usual. It mentions all the important legislation of the session, and congratulates the members on the careful attention displayed. Cobalt district comes in for special mention, and his Honor observes with satisfaction "the efforts of my Ministers, by careful legislation, to aid in the development of these deposits in the interest alike of the mining prospector, the investor and the people."

Agriculture and education are mentioned, and statute revision is promised for next session. Private legislation is described as "steadily growing," and a continued increase in the growing revenues is anticipated.

Provincial Rights.

To the question of provincial rights two paragraphs are devoted, as follows:

"Questions of grave character and great importance relating to the respective jurisdictions of the Dominion and the province with reference to railway and other corporations have come before you. A measure has been adopted, namely, an act respecting certain railway and other corporations, which, it is hoped, will serve to protect the province from any encroachments upon its jurisdiction.

"I observe by the terms of the address, which you have presented to me, that another grave question has arisen, namely, the claim of the Dominion to assume, for military purposes, and without compensation, certain lands and timber which are the property of the province. In pursuance of the terms of the address, my Ministers will take all necessary steps to protect the interests of the province in that behalf."

His Honor concluded: "In relieving you from your duties, I desire again to express my thanks for the great public service you have rendered, and join with you in expressing hope that the blessing of Almighty God will continue to rest upon our country and upon our people."

THAW'S FATHER A SHRINER.

Policeman Told Juror—Jerome to Find Guilty Party.

New York, April 22.—District Attorney Jerome has received definite information that the Thaw jury was approached by a policeman, who informed one of the jurors that Thaw's father, William Thaw, was a member of the Mystic Shriners.

Juror Charles E. Newton, himself a Shriner, said on Saturday that the approach was made to him, and it is said the policeman who conveyed the information was also a member of that society.

Mr. Newton said he immediately told all the other jurors what had been said to him. All the policemen who did duty with the Thaw jury will be lined up in the district attorney's office on Monday, and Juror Newton will be asked to pick out the man who is alleged to have made the remark.

TO FIND BAIL FOR THAW.

Aged Mother Is Converting All Her Property Into Cash.

New York, April 22.—A despatch from Pittsburg says when Mrs. William Thaw reached her Pittsburg home on Saturday she collapsed and physicians were summoned. With her is her daughter the Countess of Yarmouth.

Josiah Thaw, who accompanied his mother home, was very busy. He went to the Union National Bank and, after a meeting with J. Denny Lyon, deposited $3,000 to his cash account.

The work of converting part of the fortune of Mrs. William Thaw into cash will, it is stated, begin to-day. Practically every piece of property owned outright by Mrs. Thaw, will be sold and the money received pooled into a fund for bail for Harry K. Thaw.

Boy Blinded.

Brockville, April 22.—Playing at school H. Mather of Balderson was accidentally struck in the eye with the end of a broken broom handle by a playmate and blinded, the eye ball being ruptured. Mather is 12 years old.

Sandbagged, May Die.

Winnipeg, April 22.—Footpads probably committed murder Saturday night as well as robbery, when they sandbagged Simon Sherman on Main street. The man was so badly injured he will not recover.

Let Colonies Pay Cost.

London, April 22.—(C. A. P.)—The central unemployed body has decided to suggest to the Colonial Office that the Colonies be asked to contribute to the cost of emigration of the Woolwich arsenal unemployed.

HYMAN AGAIN RESIGNS.

$2,000 Voted for Deportation of Undesirable Immigrants.

Ottawa, April 22.—Hon. Charles S. Hyman has made a third and powerful effort to resign. Mr. Speaker, at the opening of the House on Saturday morning, read his resignation. It is adorned with two witnesses and a red seal and is probably regular. The letter is as follows:

"April 11, 1907.—Hon. R. F. Sutherland: I beg herewith to tender my resignation as member of the House of Commons for the elective division of London. (Signed) Charles S. Hyman; witnesses, Clarke and Finnan."

The House got into supply at noon and took up estimates of the Interior Department. Two thousand dollars was appropriated towards deporting undesirable immigrants. Last year 137 undesirables were deported.

In discussing Indian affairs, there was a general complaint that Indian lands and islands were being sold for nominal sums to political friends of the Government. Mr. Boyce spoke for Algoma, and Mr. Bennett (E. Simcoe) for the islands in the Georgian Bay.

In reply to a question Mr. Oliver stated that F. T. Congdon, legal counsel to the Yukon council, has resigned.

Mr. Fowler revived the Moncton land scandal. Last session the high price paid to Matthew Lodge as middleman was justified by Mr. Emmerson and Mr. Fielding by producing departmental records showing the amount paid a few years before by the Conservative Government for half an acre of land at Moncton. It now transpires that it was 61-2, but in some way the "6" disappeared from the record and the House was deceived thereby.

Mr. Fielding said that he relied upon Mr. Emmerson. The latter was absent.

Mr. Clement (W. Kent) appealed for more protection to the tobacco growers of Canada. Mr. Fielding thought that the farmers already had enough protection.

LAST COAL MINE CLOSED.

Operators and Employes Confer in Order to End Strike.

Rossland, B. C., April 22.—The last of the coal mines to close down in British Columbia and Alberta was the Pacific Coal Co.'s collieries at Bankhead, Alta., where the men quit on Saturday.

W. H. Aldridge, managing director of the Pacific Coal Co., will leave tomorrow for Fernie, to attend the conference of mine operators and employes for the purpose of endeavoring to end the strike.

The C. P. R. has given notice that, owing to the shortage of coal, it will handle no more freight, and refused freight consigned from Rossland to Greenwood Trail and other points.

A. B. MacKenzie, secretary of Rossland Board of Trade, when interviewed in regard to the coal mine trouble and the situation, said:

"I cannot understand the statement made by the Hon. Rudolphe Lemieux, Minister of Labor, in the House at Ottawa, Saturday, that there was no coal strike or lock-out. There is certainly a strike in all of the coal mines in Eastern British Columbia and Alberta. I see that the statement is made that difficulty has arisen out of posting of certain notices. So far as facts now appear only notices posted were by Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co. at Fernie and International Coal and Coke Co. at Coleman.

PUGSLEY ACCEPTS NOMINATION.

Will Contest Federal Vacancy For St. John In Liberal Interest.

St. John, N.B., April 22.—At a large meeting of Liberals on Saturday evening Premier Pugsley accepted the invitation to contest for the federal vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Stockton, M.P.

Sussex (King's County) Liberals had asked him to continue in provincial politics.

The city wishes a strong man at Ottawa to look after the winter port interests, as Fielding's policy to date has been favoring Halifax.

Liberals here have openly split, the machine considering personal interests.

Pugsley is undoubtedly the strongest man, but is not consistant. If elected he will undoubtedly be the next Minister of Railways.

The requisition was signed by 3,000. Mr. Pugsley denied that he had any Cabinet aspirations, and said he hoped Emmerson would clear himself and be taken back again. He announced that he would probably be chief counsel for Emmerson in his libel suits, and moved a resolution of sympathy with the late Minister.

Two Dead, Twelve Injured.

Birmingham, Ala., April 22.—Two dead and twelve injured is the result of a collision on the Southern Railway at Woodlawn Junction early yesterday.

A southbound freight train, entering the yard limits, found itself without power on the main line.

A passenger train some hours later ran into the rear of this train, though it is claimed a flagman was sent back to protect the freight.

A wrecking train leaving the city yards to clear another wreck ran into the Woodlown Junction wreck.

Sultan Defies Powers.

Tangier, April 22.—The Sultan of Morocco, according to a courier who arrived here yesterday from Fez, is not willing to carry out the terms of the Algeciras convention. He is said to be delaying facilities for the formation of the international police, and also pays no notice to the French claims relative to redress for the murder of Dr. Mauchamp.

French Bombard Native Town.

Konakry, French Guiana, April 22.—A detachment of French troops recently bombarded Boussedou, in Upper Guiana, which was occupied by natives of Liberia, who had pillaged in French territory.

The natives suffered heavily and the French force had two men killed and ten wounded.

LAURIER IS CRITICISED

Attitude of Canadian Premier Subject of Comment.

Conference Is Now "Imperial"—New Department Created At Colonial Office—To Be Advisory Only—Military Defence Outlined—General Staff For the Empire—Earl Elgin Clinches Matters.

London, April 22.—At Saturday's session of the colonial conference it was unanimously agreed to change the title to "imperial conference."

The conferences will be held every four years to discuss the common interests of the empire.

The Premier of the United Kingdom will be ex-officio president of the imperial conference and the Premiers of the Colonies and Colonial Secretary will be ex-officio members.

The various Governments will appoint other members, but with the exception of the special confirmation of the conference not more than two representatives of each Government shall participate in the conferences. Each Government will have two votes.

A department of the Colonial Office is created with a permanent secretarial staff, which shall be charged with the duty of obtaining information for the use of the conference and dealing tentatively with such matters of general imperial interest as arise in the intervals between the conferences.

Imperial Defence.

The Earl of Elgin, Secretary of State for the Colonies, referring to the matter of military defence, outlined the general principles of an imperial military organization, and the Premiers concurred in his views. The Premiers then explained the defence organizations of their respective colonies, and the extent to which the general organization could be put into practice.

The draft of a resolution creating a general staff for the empire was tabled.

Laurier and Botha.

The only striking feature communicated was the objection of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Premier of Canada, and General Botha, Premier of the Transvaal, to designating the conference "imperial conference."

All agreed that the conference should be consultative and advisory only, and the Earl of Elgin clinched matters by declaring that the establishment of a body with an independent status of authority would not be acceptable to His Majesty's Government.

Press Comments.

The press describe Saturday's decision on the question of imperial conference as a momentous one recognizing in it the germs of imperial federation.

The Morning Post, however, has a bitter article, and says the bureaucracy, the bane of every empire, has recovered much lost ground and succeeded in chaining the conference more firmly than hitherto to the colonial department in Downing street. It describes Lord Elgin's statements regarding the effect of the Deakin suggestions as sheer misrepresentation, inspired by Laurier's confusion of mind and misapprehension. As a result of the deliberations the status of the Dominion is less national and more colonial than before, and it will be easy to imagine that such a development must be galling to Canadians, who are able to realize their position.

Laurier's Attitude.

The Standard says the resolution is thoroughly British in a spirit of compromise. The caution of Laurier's preference for the Colonial Office is not easy understood without fuller knowledge of his speeches.

The Telegraph in an inspired article says Laurier knows the Colonial Office is looking to him as the main support for a "sit down and think" policy. If the Colonial Office can manage to make the conference do this, Sir Wilfrid will not be displeased, but he takes no risks in giving too much help. Evidently he was not prepared to see the Colonial Office give up the fight without further effort on Saturday, for he was visibly out of temper for the rest of the sitting.

ANOTHER COSTLY FIRE.

Montreal Grocery Firm Suffers Serious Loss.

Montreal, April 22.—A hundred-thousand-dollar fire visited Montreal at 4 o'clock Saturday morning, burning the wholesale grocery establishment of N. Quintal Fils, Limited, at 274 St. Paul street. It took the firemen over two hours to get it under control. The building next door, formerly occupied by Daoust Lalode, who had a fire about a month ago, was not damaged at all. The losses will be about $100,000, fully covered by insurance. Luckily for the firm this is the time that their stock is lowest, as a large consignment of goods was expected in a couple of weeks.

Big Blaze at Manila.

Manila, April 22.—Fire destroyed nearly 300 houses and parts of the districts of Singalong, Paco and Bambang, in Manila on Saturday.

The flames, fanned by a heavy gale, swept an area of 100 acres clean within two hours. The damage is conservatively estimated at $200,000 in gold.

Boy Killed by Gun.

Chatham, Ont., April 22.—As the result of the accidental explosion of a shotgun on Saturday, Francis Barnier, Concession 4, Dover township, aged 15 years, lost his life. In company with a 17-year-old brother, he was shooting muskrats in the Thames river.

Quake in Algeria.

Oran, Algeria, April 22.—A telegram received here from Mostaganem says a severe earth shock was felt in that section at twenty minutes before ten Saturday night. The message makes no mention of casualties or damages.

WHERE CANADA LACKS.

Should Be More Attention Paid to the Juvenile Offender.

Ottawa, April 23.—In the Senate yesterday afternoon, Senator Lougheed, resuming the debate on the juvenile delinquents bill, said it was a criminal law, and therefore within the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. The law was needed. He was therefore surprised that the Government should have taken the responsibility of offering the measure to Parliament, and, finding it was needed, say it should not go through and become law.

There were experts attached to most of the departments of the Canadian Government to study improvements, but there was n expert attached to the Department Justice for working out the gr sociological problem which had do with criminals and crime. Canada was spending millions on im ation. One of the subsidiary cons ences was an increase in crime Statistics showed that crime was wing at a greater ratio than popu on. From 1885 to 1904 there were 47 persons under 21 years convi in Canada of indictable offence Two-thirds of the inmates of C n penitentiaries were under 30 of age.

More About The Pill Box.

Witness Swears None was In Drawer When He Searched

Mrs. Perkins Victim of Insomnia--Has to be Dosed With Sleeping Draughts--Medical Evidence For Defence--Doctor Says Deceased Died From Bright's Disease--Jury Will Likely Disagree.

Cayuga, April 23.—The trial of Mrs. Mattie Perkins resumed at one o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the defence submitted some strong testimony concerning the mysterious pill box.

George McArthur, whose wife is a cousin of the prisoner, testified that a week before the arrest he had carefully searched the Perkins' house in an endeavor to find strychnine tablets, and swore that the drawers of the kitchen cabinet did not contain the box which has been produced in court, and in which Dr. Ellis found strychnine crystals.

"What did you expect to find?" asked Mr. Arnoldi, on cross-examination, "an elephant or a pink pill?"

"Well, if I was looking for an elephant and saw one, I wouldn't need a memorandum to remind me," retorted the witness.

Robert Currie, brother of the accused, swore to making an indefinite search for medicine bottle and drugs. He also swore to searching the bureau where later Detective Greer found the strychnine, and said he took away with him several boxes of that type, and was positive that none remained.

Doctor Says Bright's Disease.

Justice Mabee asked several questions upon this point.

Mrs. Heaslip, a sister of the prisoner, explained the writing of the word "ptomaine" in a book by telling of a conversation she and Mrs. Perkins had. They had read of a case of ptomaine poisoning from eating canned food, and Mrs. Perkins said she would make a note of it, as she thought perhaps that was what made Henry sick upon their trip to Detroit.

Mrs. MacDonald was severely cross-examined by Mr. Arnoldi upon the contents of the statements she made and signed to Detective Greer and Crown Attorney Murphy, the contents of which she in part repudiates.

Mr. Johnston sought unsuccessfully to prevent the signed statement from going in as evidence.

The evening session was almost entirely taken up with medical evidence and the defence is nearly closed.

Dr. Graham Chambers of Toronto became a tower of strength to the defence. He was most emphatic in his assertion that the deceased had died from an acute form of Bright's disease.

Counsel Exasperated.

His unequivocating evidence seemed to exasperate Mr. Arnoldi and the lengthy cross-examination produced many passages between them.

It is possible that a verdict may be given within 24 hours, or that the jury will have announced a disagreement.

A. K. Goodman, a practicing barrister of Cayuga, said he had known the Perkins intimately since their marriage. They seemed very devoted to each other and took communion at church together three months before Perkins died. In June, 1904, witness and firm arranged the conveyance of the house which Perkins bought. They paid $400 down, of which Mrs. Perkins supplied $250. She would not have the house in her name. When Perkins gave up the farm, he told witness that he was broken down by farming, and was sick with indigestion.

He himself had sometimes used strychnine to kill rats in his own garden.

Mrs. MacDonald's Evidence.

Mrs. John MacDonald testified that she had been a neighbor of the Perkins for several years. In the fall of 1906 she often visited Mrs. Perkins, and on several occasions stayed all night with her. Her son Tom went there to put up a gas stove and it took him till after midnight. This was three or four weeks before Christmas. Perkins and his wife were a very happy couple, but Perkins complained about his health.

That Statement.

She remembered the statement she had made. She signed it. She had not her spectacles, so did not read it. It was read over to her and she objected to several parts, but did not know if they were altered. Detective Greer had pressed her to make the statement. Crown Attorney Murphy did most of the talking. She did not know what was in it, and if there was anything in its contrary to her evidence "the statement would be wrong."

Witness had never seen anything wrong between Tom and Mrs. Perkins. She admitted she had spoken to Mrs. Johnston about the letter, but denied that she had laid hands upon her. "She was a mischief maker," said Mrs. MacDonald.

Mr. Arnoldi produced the statement and asked her if she had ever seen it before.

"I suppose that's it," said witness.

The statement said that witness had never of her own knowledge known Perkins to "take sick." That Mrs. Perkins "frequently said that Henry might die at any time"; that Tom should not go with Miss Moodie"; that "she said she had consulted Mr. Murphy of Cayuga about her rights if Henry should die without making a will."

The judge asked Mrs. MacDonald what time it was that Mrs. Perkins gave her the tablets.

"During the middle of December, while Mrs. Johnston was there."

George Baker, who witnessed the hammock incident, said they merely covered themselves with an ulster to keep the rain off. He denied cautioning Tom MacDonald.

George E. McArthur, a relative of Mrs. Perkins by marirage, said Mrs. Heaslip asked him to search the house on Feb. 16. Mrs. Perkins was with him part of the time. It was before two o'clock, and the blinds were up. He saw the kitchen cabinet and took each article out. He was looking for tablets because it was rumored that Henry got tablets containing strychnine. He was positive that there was no such box in it as the one produced in court. Mrs. Perkins was not in that room during or after the search.

DEAD PILOT BLAMED.

Was Responsible For Larchmont Disaster Say Inspectors.

New London, Conn., April 23.—United States Steamboat Inspectors Withey and Stewart yesterday made public their finding in the steamer Larchmont marine disaster, on the night of Feb. 11, when more than 100 lives were lost in the sinking of the steamer after collision with the schooner Harry Knowlton in Block Island Sound.

The responsibility for the collision is laid upon Pilot John L. Anson of the Larchmont, who was drowned.

"While it is true that the Larchmont was equipped with boats and rafts in excess of lawful requirements," say commissioners, "only a sufficient proportion of her boats to cover the boatage prescribed for passenger steamers of her tonnage was efficiently davited. This, in our opinion, accounts for the fact that only five of the Larchmont's eight boats reached Block Island."

It was clearly and definitely stated that, having asked the Legislature for permission to do certain things, the Council could not take any other action than that outlined in the Legislative permission given. They must live up to that or drop the whole matter. The Montreal Star of Saturday last had a highly appreciative two-column article about Sir Gilbert Parker, M. Gravesend, which I represent, was the first constituency to declare for the principles of tariff reform after Mr. Chamberlain's speech in May, 1903." The Star's correspondent gives a clever description of Sir Gilbert and his home. Speaking of the novelist's study, the writer says: "In this room there are also cartoons of Nicholson, as well as a pen and ink drawing that appeared some time ago in Punch, depicting Sir Gilbert, silk-hatted and frock-coated, in the foreground, while in the middle distance is a group supposedly of his constituents, jolly watermen, who look like characters escaped from a tale by Jacobs."

It does not appear that the poor coal men will have to go out of business yet awhile.

ENGLAND, MOTHER ENGLAND.

Little lonely woman, watching o'er the waters,
Tell me what you look for with your wistful eyes of grey.
"Far beyond the ocean I have sons and daughters;
What a mother's heart can love her eyes can see alway.
Day by day I see them—day by day I hear them—
Hear the murmur of their voices ever in the sea;
And my heart is yearning, yearning to be near them,
Children, I your mother am; cry 'Mother' back to me.
Make me proud, my children: that one word my heart shall fill,
Grey-hair'd England is your mother, call her 'Mother' still."

Little lonely woman, watching o'er the waters,
Let your bosom swell with pride, your mother's heart rejoice.
Far beyond the ocean you have sons and daughters,
Sons and daughters swift as flame to leap up at your voice.
Whisper but a summons, sigh to them in need,
East and West and North and South sounds back the answering hum
Stir of children marching: beat of hearts that bleed;
Thunder of ten thousand lips: "O, mother! here we come.
England, Mother England, all our blood cries back to thee,
Blood of kinship beats to blood like waves that seek the shore.
Bind us close, O mother, let us gather at thy knee;
Hand in hand there let us stand, thy children evermore."
—Edward C. Booth.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE KING OF TRAMPS."

A comedy entitled "The King of Tramps," was last evening presented at the opera house to a slim audience. Some features were fair, but upon the whole the play was not what was anticipated. Dave Derden, in the title role, was good and acted his part in a most capable manner. Some specialties in musical selections were enjoyed.

WITH US AGAIN.

The theatre patrons of this city will be pleased to know that arrangements have been completed whereby that very funny musical hurrah, "Painting the Town," as presented by the Charles H. Yale Amusement Company, will play a return engagement at the Carman on Friday next. It is to laugh to see "Painting the Town." Throughout the three clever acts there is no rest for the weary, for the ridiculous situations are screamingly funny and on its previous visit it made such a hit with the theatre-goers that a crowded house will certainly welcome its return.

Golden Wedding.

Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Greatrix, residing on Pinnacle street, who yesterday celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. On the 22nd of April, 1857, they were married in this city by the Rev. Dr. Gregg, a Presbyterian minister stationed here at that time, and who at present resides in Toronto. With some members of the family and a few intimate friends the worthy couple last evening fittingly celebrated the event. The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Greatrix in the city will unite with the Intelligencer in wishing them many more years of happy wedded life.

All men love power, but few know how to use it.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.
The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.
If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

A Striking Contrast

The session of the Ontario Legislature just closed forms a striking contrast to the one which is in progress at Ottawa of the Federal Parliament. Under the Whitney Administration it has been a business session of a business Legislature—there has been no unnecessary waiting for reports from this or that department, no delay, no loafing. In its university, agricultural, power, school, mining, and asylum legislation, as well as in its treatment of the business of a minor nature, the Government has been public-spirited and courageous. The session just closed, though an important one, has not, perhaps, witnessed such far-reaching legislation as its predecessor, but in all transactions the Ministry have shown a fidelity to the public interest, and a faithful desire to be true to the promises given to the people.

The legislation enacted has been progressive, and it is gratifying to know that the province's finances are in excellent shape. A very important reduction has been made in the railway bonus obligation, and the people are united in supporting the vigorous stand which the Government has taken to uphold provincial rights. The popularity of the measures introduced by Premier Whitney and his colleagues is especially evidenced by the fact that Mr. Graham, leader of the Opposition, has been found endorsing nearly every important measure introduced.

The people of Ontario have reason to feel proud of the Government of the province, and Mr. Whitney and his Ministers are to be congratulated upon the result of the business-like session just closed.

OBITUARY.

MRS. JOHN ROBISON.

The Grim Reaper has entered another home in Monteagle township and claimed as his victim the young wife of Mr. John Robison. Some four years ago Mrs. Robison suffered from a stroke, which followed an excitement regarding the burning of their home, and since that time has never regained her former strength. Though poorly, her own people had not thought of death until Monday 25th March, she was taken with fits and by 4 o'clock a.m., Mar. 26th, she passed away after suffering great agony. This mother leaves three little girls, Delilah, 8 years; Annie, 5 years, and Mary, 3 years of age.

Mrs. Robison was the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Best, formerly of Madoc township.

The remains were taken to Emmanuel church, where Rev. C. H. Garbutt conducted the funeral service, preaching from the text, "For me to live is Christ, to die is gain." The large attendance at the funeral in spite of the bad condition of the roads, owing to the break-up of snow roads, told of the esteem in which the deceased was held in her neighborhood. The pall-bearers were three of Mrs. Robison's and three of Mr. Robison's brothers. The bereaved husband has the sympathy of the community.

Hotel Quinte By-law Passed Last Night.

(Concluded from page 7.)

face had worn. He thought he was entitled to what he had paid for. He had spoken to Street Surveyor Hulme about the matter, and the latter said he could not re-surface the walk without instructions from the Council. — Referred to Public Works Committee.

Communications from Mrs. Bridget Dougherty and Surveyor Hulme were also referred.

THE MARKET TOLLS.

Mr. Vandervoort's tender for the market lesseeship was accepted, on the same terms as last year.

BY-LAWS.

Three by-laws were introduced, passed and numbered, namely:

To appoint a Collector of Taxes. F. D. Diamond was appointed, and the usual rate of one per cent. was fixed.

A HOUSE-MOVING BY-LAW.

Ald. Starling introduced a by-law to govern the moving of houses on the public streets. The measure forbids the moving of any building on the streets unless permission be first obtained, and the sum of $300 be deposited to cover any possible damage done, the money to be returned if the building be moved without damage to the city's interests.

Ald. Starling and Thompson spoke warmly in favor of the measure, referring in glowing terms to the building now being moved along Albert St.

Ald. Butler said such a by-law was absurd. Either prohibit the moving of houses altogether or put the penalty guarantee at a reasonable sum. He moved that the clause be struck out.—Lost.

There was, for best part of an hour, much perfervid eloquence displayed in regard to the matter, the Mayor, Ald. Green, Butler, Panter, Thompson, Starling and Burrows taking part. The hour hand of the clock was galloping on toward midnight, but still the City Fathers cheerfully gave of their more or less valuable time to the subject.

Finally the by-law was passed, after Ald. Butler had expressed the opinion that certain aldermen were using the Council to further their personal ends, and that they might yet get the city into a big lawsuit.

THE HOTEL QUINTE BY-LAW.

The Hotel Quinte by-law, incorporating the agreement with Mr. Jenkins, was passed. The three by-laws were numbered respectively 1315, 1316 and 1317.

A GRIST OF MOTIONS.

When motions were asked for, the City Clerk said he wanted instructions from the Council in regard to proceeding against the parties who were moving the old house. Did the Council want him to press the matter, or what?

Ald. Starling moved that the Solicitor be instructed to proceed, if necessary, against the parties who were moving the old house, now on Albert St., he to receive further instructions from a committee consisting of Ald. Starling, Thompson and Burrows.—Carried.

Ald. Thompson moved that the City Clerk correspond with different civil engineers re cost of sewerage system in this city.—Carried.

Ald. Green moved that the Gas Committee be empowered to make its repairs to streets after excavating, the same to be done, as soon as possible, under the supervision of the Street Surveyor.—Carried.

Ald. Vermilyea made practically the same motion in regard to the Water Committee.—Carried.

Ald. Panter gave notice of a motion to the effect that the City Council act with the County Council in action re the overhead bridge.

The Council adjourned just as the city clock struck the witching hour of night, when newspaper men were yawning, at all events.

Fire At Millbridge.

A camp dwelling situated at Millbridge, in the northern part of the county, and owned by ex-Mayor Graham, of this city, was burned to the ground on Saturday afternoon last. The building, a frame structure, was occupied as a dwelling and boarding house by some thirty men who are engaged in the stave and barrel factory near by. When discovered the fire had gained considerable headway, and all efforts to extinguish the flames proved futile. The men lost the greater portion of their effects. The loss upon the building was probably $300 and the insurance was only $100. The fire will in no wise interfere with the work.

Mrs. Yarwood Dead.

ESTIMABLE LADY PASSED AWAY THIS MORNING AFTER SUDDEN AND BRIEF ILLNESS.

One of the most esteemed ladies in this district passed away this morning in the person of Mrs. C. St. George Yarwood.

The late Mrs. Yarwood was born in Belleville and was the eldest daughter of the late Judge Dougall. She married Mr. C. St. George Yarwood, who was a customs officer here, and who afterwards was collector of customs at several of the important border ports on the Niagara and Lake Erie frontier. He predeceased her some twenty years ago. A family of three daughters and four sons survive her, viz., Miss M. C. St. G. Yarwood, M.A., Toronto; Mrs. J. F. Wills and Miss Helen, of Belleville; E. M., barrister, of Nanaimo, B. C.; Stephen, Superintendent on Mexican National Railway; Clare St. G., of Huntingdon, B. C., and Robert J., of Ohio.

The immediate cause of death was angina pectoris. Mrs. Yarwood was only taken ill last evening and passed away very suddenly about half-past seven this morning.

She was a lady very highly respected and beloved by a very large circle of friends, and whose family was devoted to her. We extend to the bereaved ones the deepest sympathy in their affliction.

TO KILL THE DANDRUFF GERM

Is the Only Possible Way of Having An Effective Cure.

If you see a woman or a man with luxuriant glossy hair, you may be sure neither has dandruff to amount to anything. In nearly every case where women and men have thin, brittle hair, they owe it to dandruff. There are hundreds of preparations that "claim" to cure dandruff, but not one but Newbro's Herpicide tells you that dandruff is the result of a germ burrowing into the scalp, and that permanent cure of dandruff and its consequent falling and baldness, can only be had by killing the germ; and there is no other preparation that will destroy that germ but Newbro's Herpicide. "Destroy the cause, and you remove the effect."

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

LADIES WANT CHINAMEN.

Ask the Legislature to Remove the $500 Poll Tax.

In the Chinese immigration question the British Columbia Legislature will, at its coming session, be confronted by one of the hardest problems ever set before a Canadian Provincial Government. Shall Chinamen be admitted to the Province, or shall they continue to be rigorously excluded? That is the question that must be answered by the Government, and right speedily at that; and whichever way it is answered it is bound to entail trouble and dissatisfaction, if not actual suffering.

When some three years ago the Government practically prohibited the immigration of Chinese by imposing a head tax of $500, the measure had the support of the majority of the people of the Province. At that time the only interests involved were those of capital and labor. It was to satisfy the laboring men, who saw the average of their wage rate cut down by the Chinamen, that the law was passed.

Needed As Domestics.

Now the women—the housewives of the Province are agitated over the question. The Chinese make unexcelled domestic servants—as cooks they are not to be surpassed by the best Parisian productions, and so long as immigration was unhampered the homes of British Columbia had at their disposal an unlimited supply of the best servants imaginable. Once the head tax was imposed that supply was cut off, and ever since that time Chinese servants have been growing more and more of a perquisite for the families of the wealthy only. Since 1903 the population of the Province has grown immensely; hundreds of new families have settled in the cities of the coast—Vancouver, Victoria, and New Westminster—and the demand for domestic servants has been growing greater and greater. The number of Chinese servants has, however, remained stationary, or grown less, for with the rise all round in the price of yellow labor many of the servants have preferred to leave their household positions and seek more remunerative employment.

Breaks Up Friendships.

The inevitable result of the increase in demand has of course been an increase in the average wage rate, and to hold a Chinese servant the housewife must now pay as much per week as she was in the habit of paying per month in the good old days. Even then she cannot be sure of holding her servant. Jealously she guards her treasure, hiding him from the prying eyes of neighbors, but, nevertheless, despite all her care, it often happens that by offers of higher pay and shorter hours a neighboring housewife will manage to charm him away. More friendships have been broken in British Columbia during the last year over Chinese servants than over anything else.

English Girls Marry.

Various attempts have been made to fill the deficiency caused by the shortage of Chinamen. Swedish and Norwegian girls have been imported, but beside the deft and silent Chinamen they appear clumsy and stupid. English girls have been sent out by various charitable organizations, but they have always persisted in getting married just as soon as they arrived on the coast. All possible expedients have been given a trial, and now the housewives of the Province are crying out for the Chinamen again.

Louder and more urgent for the past two years, have been growing their demands, but up to a few weeks ago the ladies had been restrained by husbands, brothers, and sons who hated the yellow man, and had no desire for his return. Now have the women of the Province shaken off the control of their lords and masters, and have commenced to work, and to work in earnest, for the abolition of the head tax. The ladies of Victoria have been the first to take the lead. A petition has been prepared, for presentation to the Government, asking that the head tax be taken off, and is even now being signed—a sort of declaration of independence of masculine rule—by hundreds of ladies. Other similar petitions are being circulated in Vancouver, New Westminster, and the other cities of the Province, and the whole will be submitted to the Legislature at its coming session.

Frozen In Solid Ice.

Letters from Ernest Leffingwell, geologist, containing the first news from the Anglo-American polar expedition, headed by Capt. Elmar Mikkelsen, since the expedition left Alaska, have just been received.

The letters were dated Nov. 21 and Nov. 23 and were carried over the icefields to Point Barrow, where they were delivered to the Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Leffingwell states that the ship, the Duchess of Bedford, was frozen in solid ice about 200 miles off Point Barrow and that the preparations at that time were almost completed for starting the expedition into the unknown country lying to the north early this spring.

Leffingwell says that, judging from the tides and from talks with the natives, the conclusion has been reached that a large island exists not far from the mainland. The party, he says, may not return for two years.

The weather was moderate at the time the letters were written. The entire party of 15 were in good health; experiments made by Dr. Howe in the use of vegetable foods demonstrated their inadequacy and the serving of meat to the men had been resumed.

The experiment was made in the belief that vegetable food would decrease the danger of disease.

Leffingwell says the letters may be the last to reach the outside world for two years, unless he succeeds in sending a couple of men next summer.

Hen Beats Sacco.

Mr. Dilworth lost a hen five or six weeks ago at Moulton Sea's End, near Spalding, England. It has been found in a hovel behind some bags, where it was hemmed in. It was still alive, although, judging from its appearance, it had no food during this long period.

MAKE A BLUFF.
(Houston Post.)

If there isn't any pleasure
  Waits for you besides the way,
If there's not a thing to grin at
  In your journey day by day
If you've got excuse for kicking
  And for stirring up a row,
Don't you do it! Don't you do it!
  Just be happy, anyhow,

Just be happy, just be happy:
  Take the fiddle and the bow,
Snuggle it against your shoulder,
  Limber up and let her go.
Till the world is full of music
  And there's joy in every string,
Till you get all outdoors laughing
  And you make the echoes sing.

It's a duty you are owing
  To the world to shake your feet,
And to lift your voice in singin'
  Till the music fills the street;
If the world is dark and gloomy
  And you haven't got a friend,
It's your duty to dissemble,
  It's your duty to pretend,

If you meet the world a-grinnin',
  Then the world will grin at you—
You can laugh the clouds to flinders
  Till the blue sky glimmers through;
If you just pretend you're happy,
  With your whole heart in the bluff,
When, almost before you know it,
  You'll be happy, sure enough!

A RACE OF SEAFARERS.

Some First Impressions of Newfoundland and People.

A feature of Newfoundland which strikes a newcomer wherever he goes about the coasts is the type of sailing craft affected by the inhabitants. All the sailing vessels, almost without exception, are schooners. They vary in size, they vary in finish, but they are all schooners. They are beautiful boats, and are evidently very serviceable. The majority of them are built, I believe, in Newfoundland, though a few may be built in Canada or the States. This is the kind of craft in which a large number of Newfoundlanders live during a big part of the year. They go fishing, they go sealing, they go trading and carrying freight in these boats. The inhabitants of Newfoundland almost all live on the coast; they almost all earn their living from or on the sea, and therefore live near it. Go where you will into the innumerable harbors, big and small, good and bad, and you find the little whitewashed wooden houses near the water's edge, and at the very edge of the water the landing stages built of fir poles, with the sheds on them in which the fish are prepared for export.

Superior Codfish.

When one speaks of fish in Newfoundland only one kind is referred to—that is, the codfish; any other kind of fish requires a specific name—but not cod. And when speaking of codfish I should just like to mention that the codfish caught here is quite superior to the same article in the Old Country. There is not the coarseness to which people there are accustomed. And the June codfish is the fish; then it is at its very best; and I understand that even when salted and dried it does not lose this superiority of flavor; even then, when cooked, it can be noticed that it is better than the fish caught at other times.

You will rarely find a Newfoundlander living inland. They are born and bred for the sea. If they do not go in schooners they go in small boats, and they go big distances and face dirty weather in these same small boats. They have a place for lighting a fire to boil water, etc. It does look somewhat alarming to see a small boat of this size bobbing up and down on the crests of big waves, with two or three men in her, and smoke issuing from somewhere aboard. There is no chimney or anything for the smoke to pass through. This alarming view of such an occurrence is not that of the Newfoundlander, of course. For a good part of the year these people are on the sea. What a nursery for sailors! What a recruiting reserve for our navy! Where in all the Empire have we such a field? When our home supply is exhausted where shall we look? In Newfoundland most men are sailors, and all are loyal and true to the old flag.

Attitude Towards Colonies.

Why is it that in the Old Country the general attitude of a large section of the people towards the various Colonies is one of superiority and patronage; an attitude which would be well expressed in the words, "Just take what you get and be thankful"? Neither governing party is more to blame than the other. Nor need one blame a political party alone. In social and club life at home one finds this same vulgar spirit. Indeed, it may even be that various vexatious and irritating steps taken by different Home Governments have had their origin in this prevalent clubland spirit. In any case, it is not in political relations alone that this attitude of many in the Mother Country finds expression. It is found in other relations. It is keenly resented, wherever found; and small wonder!

Kind and Simple Folk.

The people of Newfoundland are very hospitable and kind, and they are a simple folk. I have been entertained and treated as if I had been known for years to my hosts, instead of having suddenly dropped into their midst, and never before having been heard of by them. This is only one instance, but it is fairly typical. As one goes round the various harbors, one is impressed by the number of religious denominations in evidence, even in communities of small size. In a village of 300 people, young and old, more or less, you may quite likely find Methodists, Episcopalians, Salvation Army followers, and Roman Catholics. In some you may even find a fifth division, Presbyterians; but these latter are not as a rule very numerous, though theirs is quite a respectable total. In a few communities they may be the most numerous, but this is a rare thing to find. Frequently it is found that Roman Catholics are the sole inhabitants in one harbor, while in the next there are only Protestants; or when they both live in the same community, one section of the village is exclusively Protestant while the other is Roman Catholic.

'Possum Scared Elephant.

Size isn't everything, as the 'possum at the Toronto Riverdale Zoo doubtless could state, if its language were translatable. The once popular song had it, "Says the ant to the elephant, who are you shoving?" There was something of this nature at the Zoo recently when the 'possum strayed from its cage and nearly broke up the happy home of the elephant. The 'possum in its midnight ramble, so scared the big specimen of Elephas Africanus that the latter set up a dismal wail, and the dissembling little creature was fain to seek other shelter. This was no less a place than at the feet of the sleeping lioness, and when the keeper discovered the situation the lioness resented the keeper's intrusion on her domestic affairs. She evidently was pleased with the 'possum's trust, and wished to adopt the stranger. However, the 'possum was removed by means of a rake.

Canada's Railway Progress.

Without taking electric railways into account, it is estimated that 3,314 miles of new line are under construction in Canada, to cost approximately £12,400,000. The Great Western Railway Co. of England holds the record for English railway mileage, and its total is only 2,728. Canada opens up in this one year more country than the Great Western has opened up since its initiation over 70 years ago.

LAND OF FARM HOMES.

Census Shows Remarkable Progress In Manitoba and the Northwest.

A census blue book, giving the population of Manitoba and the Northwest Provinces by sexes, and a summary of statistics of field crops and live stock for 1906, as compared with the census of 1901, has just been issued at Ottawa.

In Manitoba the census of last year showed 205,183 males and 160,505 females. Winnipeg has 50,461 males and 39,632 females. Brandon 5,756 males and 4,652 females. Saskatchewan has 152,793 males and 104,970 females. Alberta has 108,281 males and 77,131 females. In all three provinces there are 466,257 males and 342,606 females, leaving a preponderance of 123,651 males.

In 1906 there were in the three provinces 120,439 farms, as compared with 55,625 in 1901, an increase of 65,814. Manitoba now has 35,441 farms, Saskatchewan 54,787, and Alberta 30,211. The increase in the number of farms over 1901 were: Manitoba, 3,629; Saskatchewan, 41,407; Alberta, 20,778.

In 1906 there were 682,919 horses in the three provinces, as compared with 340,329 in 1901; 384,006 milch cows, as compared with 244,216; 1,560,992 other horned cattle as compared with 698,407.

The area of wheat under cultivation last year was 2,422,345 acres for Manitoba, 1,381,921 for Saskatchewan, and 147,921 for Alberta, a total of 3,952,187 acres, as against 2,495,467 in 1901.

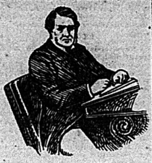
Sugar Taken by Canada.

One of the features of the gathering of Colonial Ministers in London next month will be the mutual congratulations over the ever-increasing bonds of preferential trading between colony and colony. The West Indies, were they represented, could join with Canada in satisfaction over the results of inter-colonial preference, for it is announced that out of a total import of 420,000,000 pounds of raw sugar into Canada last year, 323,000,000 pounds were from the West Indies and British Guiana.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

Veteran Canadian Statesman Receives Portrait of Himself.

This is an age of grand old men. Mr. Gladstone set the happy fashion in the 'eighties, when we saw one who was well past the appertioned three score years and ten conceiving a piece of constructive statesmanship of unprecedented daring, and leading his party unflinchingly through victory and defeat in its behalf. The two grand old men whom all friends of Canada delight to honor are more happily employed in the vigorous evening of their days. Lord Strathcona and Sir Charles Tupper have in their time, and in their several spheres, fought hard battles, political and personal; holding strong views, they were prepared to defend them against all comers.



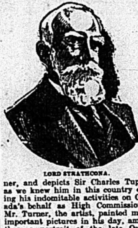
SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

But to-day the conflicts are over and done with; they have become a part of the treasured political and commercial history of Canada's upbuilding, and the tireless gladiators, with their armor still on and their zeal undiminished, are content to forget that they were ever partizans, and remember only that they are Canadians.

These facts are most pleasantly recalled by the recent presentation to Sir Charles Tupper by a few friends of Canada in London of a handsome portrait of himself as a token of their esteem. The subscribers were of both political parties, who united in their appreciation of the strenuous and patriotic labors for Canada which have marked Sir Charles Tupper's long and illustrious career.

Most fittingly, the presentation was made on behalf of the subscribers by Lord Strathcona, and most fittingly, also, it was made at the Westminster Palace Hotel, on the very spot, that is, where the Magna Charta of Canada's nationhood, the British North America Act, was framed in consultation between British Ministers and the delegates of the people of Canada, among whom Sir Charles Tupper is, alas, the sole survivor. The occasion was thus one of peculiar historic interest to all friends of Canada.

The picture is an excellent presentation of the veteran statesman. It was painted by the late Mr. E. J. Turner, and depicts Sir Charles Tupper as we knew him in this country during his indomitable activities on Canada's behalf as High Commissioner. Mr. Turner, the artist, painted many important pictures in his day, among them a portrait of the late Queen Victoria, which Her Majesty herself bought, and another of his mother for King Edward. Mr. Turner also painted portraits of the late Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Connaught, the late Duke of Cambridge (ordered by H. R. H. and now hanging in the King's Military Gallery at St. James's Palace), the late Lord Napier of Magdala, the Earl of Rosebery, and Admiral Lord Charles Beresford.



LORD STRATHCONA.

Lady Minto Ill.

India's trying climate has been too much for Lady Minto, and she sailed recently from Bombay, bound for England, and will spend four or five months recuperating her strength in Europe before returning to India the latter part of the summer. The Mintos have so many friends here, acquired during the term of office of the earl as Governor-General of Canada, that the news of the countess' breakdown will cause much regret. Lady Minto is accompanied on her voyage home by her two older daughters, the Ladies Eileen and Ruby Elliot, while the youngest of the three, Lady Violet, will remain with the viceroy, to do the honors as hostess in the place of her mother during the latter's absence. The Mintos have achieved no end of popularity in India, among the Europeans and natives alike—more so, indeed, than any viceregal family since the Dufferins, and they seem to have given universal satisfaction out in the Orient, as well as at home, by the extremely successful manner in which they have managed the state visit of the ruler of Afghanistan.

Northwest Mounted Police.

The present strength of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police is now 55 officers, 549 non-commissioned officers, and constables, and 80 guides, interpreters, scouts and special constables, making a total of 684, and 576 horses. The total strength of all ranks is 129 less and 30 horses less than last year.

The force is divided as follows: Alberta 227, Saskatchewan 270, Northwest Territories 30, Yukon 141, and Peace Yukon trail 16. The strength in Alberta and Saskatchewan is 497, only three under the number agreed upon.

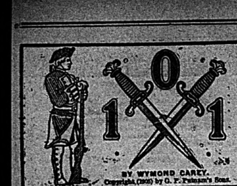
Money a man has spent seldom worries him unless it was spent for something that interferes with his digestive apparatus.—Chicago News.

If a man has a testy temper it is folly to put it to the test.



BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1905) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

be the traitor? And if she was, by what temptation of the devil had she embarked on her awful career? To-night she would be a prisoner; she was doomed to die, but would they ever know her secret—the real secret of "No. 101"? Punish her they could, but the secret the real secret, was beyond their power. Andre clenched his hands. She would baffle them after all. It was the secret that fascinated him, and that was surely destined to perish with her in a felon's grave. "No 101" would be like the man in the iron mask—unknown and unknowable—a perpetual puzzle to the generations to come. Torturing thought.

A mouse squeaked across the floor, the boards creaked. Andre recalled with a curious thrill the grisly warning that all who had ever seen the face of "No. 101" had perished. He recalled the death of Captain Statham, of others. Was he, after all, to share the same fate? In this deathly quiet he felt his blood go cold, his courage ooze and ebb. A longing to crawl away began to master him.

Brave man though he was, he would have obeyed it, when a rustle on the public stairs brought him with a swift spring to his feet. For that was the rustle of a woman's skirt. The door was opening. The rustle again, and a gleam of light from a lamp. A woman, by God! the thief was a woman. The woman!

Yes. The girl at the inn surely, for this was a tall young woman who walked straight forward to the escritoire, a thief who knew no fear, calmly determined to do her business without flinching. Andre wavered as he had in the charcoal-burner's cabin. Should he arrest her there and then or wait? Yes, no? Yes, wait. She must be caught red-handed in the act that he might win his love.

Suddenly the lingering echo of a trumpet floated up into the darkness from the Cour des Princes. Andre started. Again that silvery note. The trumpets—the silver trumpets—of the Chevau-legers de la Garde! Was he dreaming? Was he at Fontenoy? No, no. The King's escort, ha! the King had returned. The great coup had succeeded. The game was his just as he had planned. Fortune, superbly beneficent, had given him all. And then he clutched at the curtain, sick, faint, gasping. For at the second trumpet note the woman had turned to listen, the light fell on her face—Denise! The thief was Denise!

CHAPTER XXVII.

Denise! yes, it was Denise!

The sweat dripped off Andre's face in the agony of that moment. His fingers, his brain, his body, had turned numb. Think, he could not. He was only conscious of one thought, that burned red-hot. Fortune, superby maleficent, had kept her most devilish revenge and punishment to the last. Denise must be ruined by the man who loved her, for Louis, persuaded to return by Madame de Pompadour at the instigation of the Vicomte de Nerac, would be in this room in a few minutes. This, and not the successful theft of the despatch, was the vengeance of "No. 101."

Fascinated by fear, Andre, tongue-tied, watched Denise go straight up to the escritoire, insert a key, open the drawer. And then love swept his horror away, unloosed the paralysis that held him a prisoner, and told him what to do. Denise could yet be saved by instant flight. True, his scheme had failed; the wrath of Madame de Pompadour and the King whom she had deceived would fall on him; Madame would herself probably be ruined. What did it matter, so that he rescued Denise from the awful peril, the wiles which "No. 101" had with such fiendish completeness laid for her? For that it was "No 101's" diabolical plan he had no doubt now. Yvonne had gulled and betrayed him, as from the first.

But just as he wrenched the curtain aside and sprang into the room with a cry of "Denise!" she had tottered back with a low exclamation of horror.

"Denise!"

The candle fell from her hand. In the darkness he heard her sob. "Gone," she muttered feebly. "Gone!"

"Quick, the King is coming! For God's sake, fly. There is the key—the secret staircase. I will—can—explain later."

He hurried her towards the doorway with a terrible yet tender energy of love."

"Andre," she cried, "Andre, it is gone."

"Oh, fly; fly, for God's sake!"

"But it is gone—the secret despatch; it is not there—stolen!" Her voice dropped to a whisper. She was sobbing on his shoulder with fear and horror.

The words acted like a galvanic shock. Gone—stolen already! This was more—much more—than he had dreamed of. The full meaning of the situation was revealed and it stunned him into action. In a second he had the candle alight, and, mastering the faintness that gripped him, dashed at the escritoire. It was perfectly empty. The secret despatch was not in it. Another thief had already secured it—"No. 101"! He put the candle very slowly down on the table and turned to Denise, who was standing in the middle of the room white to the lips.

Andre laughed, as men will laugh when tears and passion are futile. That laugh at his own outwitting by a girl and her English accomplice rang through the room. The traitors had been before him. The secret despatch was already in the hands of the King's enemies, of Madame de Pompadour's enemies, of his. He and she were ruined. Nothing could save them now. In a few hours the English Government could publish the truth, the Court could proclaim Madame by the evidence of her own hand an intriguer against the King, and Denise and he would be found here in the darkness with an empty escritoire by Louis XV. and Madame de Pompadour, to whom its contents were a matter of life and death. Hopeless to struggle now. Love had inspired a plan, but fate was stronger than love. Madame de Pompadour must come, and hear what had happened, from his lips. He had ruined her, ruined himself, ruined Denise. Louis alone could lie. Louis by a lie alone would escape. Andre had matched himself, in his pride, against "No. 101," a girl, and this was the result.

"They told me," Denise began, "it was here. We threw with dice as to who should find it. We were determined to punish and destroy Madame de Pompadour. I took my chance, and ——"

"Yes, yes," he interrupted impatiently, for he had already divined Denise's motives.

"To save you before," Denise went on, "I let her escape and sinned against my conscience, for that woman polluted Versailles, your life and mine. I owed reparation; this was to be my reparation. You were ruined, Andre, dismissed, disgraced. I cared no longer for life—for anything. You I could not save, but her I could punish, for she had broken my heart and shattered your career in her selfishness. That is why I came—willingly, gladly. It was a duty to my cause—to myself."

Andre knew nothing of the scheme of Mont Rouge, of the loaded dice whereby the love of a wicked woman, the Comtesse des Forges, turned to hatred, and a defeated rival's vengeance, had foisted on Denise the task of braving alone the perils and the disgrace and of completing the plot of the Court; but what he did know showed him that the Court, too, like himself, had been the victims of the man and the woman he had spied on at the inn. But, unlike himself, the Court would gain its vengeance.

"I performed a duty," Denise was saying, "and instead, Andre, I have ruined you. Your enemies have stolen the despatch."

Voices at the foot of the stairs. No time for explanation now. But, thank God! Denise did not know the truth nor of Madame de Pompadour's and the King's return. One glance at the agony in her face, the agony of a woman who loved, and Andre was again inspired to a noble decision.

"You are mistaken," he said with perfect calmness. "I was here to watch, I confess, in the interests of His Majesty; we had hoped to catch quite another person, but it is you, Denise, whom my foes have lured into the trap—our trap. I ask you for my sake to leave me to explain all to Madame. Sweetheart"—he was pleading now as he had never pleaded to any woman before—"sweetheart, do not inflict on me the pain of giving you into the hands of Madame. You will not; you cannot do it."

The glorious lie, aided by the power of his love over her, prevailed. Denise took his key, and just in time Andre had drawn the curtain when Madame de Pompadour flung the door open. Face and figure were all aglow with the triumphant victory she had won. She had returned to place her heel on the necks of the defeated, to drink the cup of vengeance to the dregs.

"Mon cher," Madame cried, "I—no, you—have won. The King is mine. I shall never lose him now." Her eyes ran over the room—fell on the open escritoire. "Well, you have the traitor?"

"No, Madame."

"What? They did not dare?" She laughed. "No matter. The King is mine."

"The paper has been stolen," he said quietly, "and the thief has escaped."

Madame put her hand on her breast, tottered back a step or two. Her radiant eyes grew cold. Incredulity and fear made her an old woman. "Stolen? escaped? Do you mean——?"

"They fooled me. The hour was midnight, as I told you. I have been here three times waiting; the thief never came, but the paper is gone."

The meaning of his words trickled into her mind. With a cry of rage she sprang at the escritoire and turned it upside down. Then she hurled it into the centre of the room, and wheeled on Andre. "Ah, miserable, coquin, lache!" the hot, incoherent words tumbled over each other. "You have failed. It is me you have fooled, betrayed. Ah, traitor, you are my foe; gone, Seigneur Jesu, gone; Stolen; then I am ruined; ruined; after all I have done." She burst into tears, racked by rage, terror, despair.

"I am no traitor."

"Bah! I have done with you." She paced up and down. "Ah! that accursed 'No. 101,' accursed; what can I do? Ruined, ruined!" she sank into a chair with a low moan.

Andre watched the candle-light flicker on her hair and breast, on the shimmering folds of the beautiful dress she had so unerringly selected to aid in reconquering Louis. But a woman's beauty, genius, and passion, and ambition had fought in vain, for "No. 101" was stronger than all of these.

Suddenly she rose with an exclamation of vindictive and unholy exultation. She had picked a jewelled pendant from the floor. "Ha!" she cried, "here is proof of the thief you could not catch. Mademoiselle Denise has been here; that jewel is hers and it fell by the escritoire table; it is not 'No. 101' who has stolen the despatch, it is the Marquise de Beau Sejour."

Andre had turned deadly pale. He stared in impotent silence. Yes, the jewel was Denise's; on the back he knew was a fatal D. And it was a pendant that he himself, in a thrice happy hour, had given her.

"The King's honor," Madame said in her cruelly cold voice, "is at stake in that despatch. And he will not spare the thief even if she were of the blood-royal. Nor will I. This is proof enough for me; I promise you it will also be proof enough for His Majesty. I have here a lettre de cachet which the King gave me, already signed. But the name is not filled in. That was to be done to-night with the thief's name. And filled in I swear it shall be. For unless the secret despatch is in my hands by to-morrow morning at ten o'clock the Marquise de Beau Sejour shall go to the Bastile."

"Madame!"

"You cannot deceive me. You are shielding her. It is in your face. She is the thief. I repeat, to-morrow at ten—not one minute longer, and had it not been for our friendship I would have sent her there to-night."

Andre was still silent, striving to think, be calm. If Denise were questioned she was ruined. Denise could not tell a lie. Nor could she save her lover now by a lie. "You can settle it," Madame went on in her icy anger, "with Mademoiselle. I care not how or for what she gives way. Lovers' confessions can be sweet, they say. But my life, my honor, my future, my dreams, my all, are at stake. Think you I will allow a girl, a noble, a woman who has insulted me, conspired against me, a thief of state secrets, to defeat me—me! Then you do not know the woman Antoinette de Pompadour."

And Andre confessed to himself that till that moment he did not.

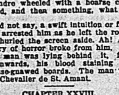
"Madame," he said very quietly, "the Marquise de Beau Sejour has not got the despatch, nor did she steal it. However, I do not choose to discuss that now. I shall return to this room at ten o'clock to-morrow. But if I have the despatch by then I do not promise to give it back to you." Madame had turned her back on him; she wheeled in a flash. "That will depend on some other things. But," he bowed, "if the Marquise de Pompadour imagines that she can call gentlemen cowards and scoundrels with impunity, or that she can so easily ruin the Marquise de Beau Sejour, she does not know me—me, the man Andre de Nerac."

And there he left her stunned into a fearful silence. He was about to pass, he was aware, a night of despairing, futile search, but it would not be such a prolonged agony of torture as this woman, amidst the litter of her humiliation, would endure. One last chance remained. The girl he called "No 101" and George Onslow had arranged to meet at midnight at "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold." That agreement might not prove as false as other things he had overheard and been tricked into believing. If they were there they would not leave the inn alive, for Andre, too, had begun to divine the full meaning of this hellish plot. His enemies at Court had planned with the English traitors that they might ruin him and Denise likewise. To-morrow he would reckon with the Duc de Pontchartrain, the Comte de Mont Rouge, and the Comtesse des Forges, as well as with Madame de Pompadour, but to-night he had an account to settle with "No. 101," with George Onslow, with the Chevalier de St. Amant, with Yvonne.

Only pausing to scribble a couple of orders, which went off to Paris by mounted couriers, warned that their royal master would brook of no delay, he gathered a dozen of his guards and spurred his way to "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold." And as he galloped he knew that in a couple of hours the police of Paris would be sweeping every slum, ransacking every cabaret and tavern, hunting down every suspect, and bribing for information every fille de joie from the Faubourg St. Antoine to the Faubourg St. Germain, from the Barrier of the Hopital St. Louis to the Barriers of Les Gobelins, and the Palais Bourbon.

The inn was plunged in darkness. Not a light to be spied anywhere. Andre set his guards around it and began to explore systematically. The outhouses were empty save for Yvonne's sleek cow contentedly chewing the cud. Not a soul to be seen. Torch in hand he strode into the parlor where he had been so successfully befoiled. There were the chairs, the screen, the tables.

Ha! on the centre table a piece of paper quite large. No writing on it, but instead a mocking sign, two crossed daggers roughly drawn in red and the mystic number:



Blood, human blood! Blood still fresh and scarcely dried. They had been here, the traitors; they had not left long, for blood does not take long to dry, and they had determined to flout their dupe with this ghastly mummery. To Paris! to Paris! They could still be caught before the October dawn was reddening the roofs of the Conciergerie and the battlements of the Bastile.

Andre wheeled with a hoarse command, and then something, what he could not say, a swift intuition or feeling, arrested him as he left the room. He hurled the screen aside. Ah! Ah! A cry of horror broke from him.

A man was lying behind it, face downwards, his blood staining the mouse-gnawed boards. The man was the Chevalier de St. Amant.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Andre saw in a moment from the Chevalier's position as he lay face downwards on the bare boards what had happened. The unhappy boy had been stabbed from behind; and he bore plain signs of having been searched after he had been stabbed, for his clothes were rumpled, his boots wrenched off, his stockings ripped up, his shirt torn open. The searcher had then calmly left him to bleed to death. Had the Chevalier been the robber of the escritoire? If so had the secret despatch been taken from him and the second thief escaped with it? Who could say?

Andre kneeled down and gently lifted the prostrate body on to the sofa.

"Go, two of you, at once to Versailles," he cried to his men, "and bring a doctor. Ride for your lives."

He returned to the couch, but as he did so his boot kicked against something that jingled. An English guinea! George Onslow had been here, then. Andre recognized with the intuition that is stronger than proof that Onslow was the second thief, as well as the man who had stabbed the Chevalier in the back.

The Chevalier was not dead! A low moan from the couch had echoed through the room, and Andre poured brandy down his throat, stanched the wound, and waited with feverish passion, for the Chevalier's lips were moving. His eyes opened—he saw who it was at his side.

"Marie," came the faint words, "Marie—the Carrefour—his head fell back.

Andre waited, overwhelmed by a wave of passion, repentance, remorse. The Chevalier was no foe—he was trying to tell him something, something of vital importance to both of them; would he have the strength to do it? Denise's and his own fate hung on that.

"Marie," trickled the feeble words, "Carrefour de St. Antoine No. 3—" again he swooned, but Andre had learned almost enough. It was time to leave him, cruel as it seemed, for every half hour now would be precious.

"Marie—paper—save her—Onslow," the Chevalier was making a great effort; Andre guessed the rest. But the Chevalier's hand moved pleadingly. He was asking for a promise—"save her," he repeated and his lips ceased to move.

Andre took the young man's hand. He scarcely knew what he was saying, he knew not who Marie was, but in the presence of death, death inflicted by that dastard stab in the back, a man who was inspired by love might well feel a great pity, the desire to forgive and atone.

"I promise," he whispered. "I promise."

Moved by the beautiful peace that those two words brought into the young man's face, Andre kneeled beside him. No doctor could save the Chevalier de St. Amant now, but he, too, had loved Denise; he, too, had charged by the side of the Chevau-legers de la Garde at Fontenoy. And him at least an assassin's dagger had delivered from the justice of the King of France and of Madame de Pompadour.

Sceptic as he was, Andre whispered a brief prayer, and, as Denise would have wished him to do, reverently made the sign of the Cross, commending his soul to the God whose eyes are upon the truth, and whose mercy is infinite.

As he stepped outside, into that clearing where Yvonne had saved his own life, a sharp altercation apparently in the outhouses at the back sent him hurrying thither.

"Curse you, let me go, scum!" were the words he heard, followed by a sharp scuffle.

"Good-evening, Monsieur le Comte," Andre said, with icy sarcasm, "but the scum will not let you go."

Mont Rouge's livid face paled at his rival's voice. De Nerac least of all men had he expected to discover at "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold."

"You will keep Monsieur le Comte de Mont Rouge a prisoner," Andre commanded the guards who had caught the Count, "until I return, and you will answer with your heads for his safety."

"By what right—" Mont Rouge began, savagely.

"That, Monsieur le Comte," Andre interrupted, politely, "you will learn when it suits me. But to-morrow His Majesty will require to know by what right an exiled gentleman is still at Versailles," he paused, "and why a noble of France trades under the title of 'Lui' with traitors in the pay of the English Government."

It was a bold thrust, but it went home. The mingled fear and rage in Mont Rouge's cynical eyes revealed the correctness of Andre's guess.

"His Majesty," Andre continued, "you will be interested to know, has returned to Versailles to take summary vengeance on all traitors."

And as he galloped away he knew that Mont Rouge was unaware of Louis's unexpected return. That Mont Rouge was at the inn at all showed that Onslow and his accomplice had been expected to share the results of their theft with the noble conspirators against Madame de Pompadour.

No. 3 in the deserted Carrefour de St. Antoine was the house where Onslow had made love before, and in that very room, with its barred shutters and tightly drawn curtains, with its thick carpets into which the foot noiselessly sank, and its blazing candles, the woman whom Andre had spied on at "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold" now sat calmly destroying papers. Every now and then she stopped to listen attentively; twice at least she opened the door and peered out, but there was no one, and she placidly resumed her task.

When all the papers were destroyed she surveyed herself in the glass and smiled sadly. To-night her jewels and her patrician virginal beauty gave her no pleasure, yet she was dressed with consummate taste and infinite care, as though she were going to a ball in the Galerie des Glaces.

The clock struck half-past two. She moved behind the curtains and unbarred the shutters, carefully pinning them back, thus leaving the balcony not more than ten feet up from the street quite clear. Then she blew out all the candles but two and waited patiently.

Ten minutes passed. This time when she rose she carefully locked both side doors leading off the salon, and when she returned from the passage she was accompanied by Onslow. Unobserved, she locked that door, too. There was no exit now from the room save by the balcony.

Onslow's sleuth-hound features wore a careworn look, the look of the hunted man; his cloak and boots were splashed with mud; he was breathing quickly, for he had ridden hard.

"I was expecting you," she surprised him by saying quietly. "Why did you not bring the Chevalier with you?"

"The Chevalier was obliged to stay at the inn," was the grim reply. "You forget 'Lui,'" he added hastily, for her penetrating eyes were searching his face. "Some one had to deal with the fool, and," with a laugh, "he will be astonished, will be 'Lui.'"

"He will," she said with such emphasis that Onslow gave a guilty start. "'Lui' I expect at this moment is in the hands of your friend and mine, the Vicomte de Nerac."

AT FIRST SIGHT

By EDITH M. DOANE

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

To begin with, she was easily the prettiest girl at Lake Wabconset inn.

Then, again, she was Mrs. Baker's niece, and Jimmy Marshall had known Mrs. Baker since he was a little boy, for she and his mother were old friends. So it became the natural thing for him to row with her and dance with her and take her on long drives in his touring car; not that he particularly admired her, he assured himself, but he liked to row and dance and motor, and she was company. Besides, she was a nice enough little thing, and it was less trouble to ask her than to hunt up another girl; then, too, it probably pleased Mrs. Baker to have him pay her niece some little attention.

So, considering that all girls bored him and he had no inclination to pay serious attentions to any of them, it is not to be wondered at that he was first amused, then annoyed, when Mrs. Baker, who was a simple, lovable soul, cornered him on the wide porch one morning and asked him if he were in love with Priscilla.

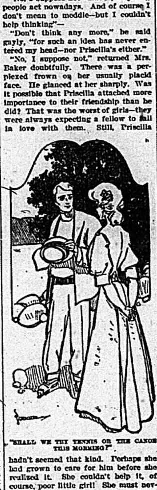
"Certainly not," he answered decidedly. "She's a mighty nice girl, and of course I like her immensely, but as far as being in love with her is concerned I most certainly am not."

He glanced at Mrs. Baker's plump, troubled features. "Whatever put such an idea in your head?" he demanded. "Surely there has been nothing in my actions"—

"No, I suppose not—that is, as young people act nowadays. And of course I don't mean to meddle—but I couldn't help thinking"—

"Don't think any more," he said gayly, "for such an idea has never entered my head—nor Priscilla's either."

"No, I suppose not," returned Mrs. Baker doubtfully. There was a perplexed frown on her usually placid face. He glanced at her sharply. Was it possible that Priscilla attached more importance to their friendship than he did? That was the worst of girls—they were always expecting a fellow to fall in love with them. Still, Priscilla hadn't seemed that kind. Perhaps she had grown to care for him before she realized it. She couldn't help it, of course, poor little girl! She must never know that he suspected her feelings. It would be hard enough for her when she found how indifferent he was without that. And with a troubled face and hands thrust deep in the pockets of his flannels Jimmy Marshall betook himself to the lake.



"SHALL WE TRY TENNIS OR THE CANOE THIS MORNING?"

Mrs. Baker also was troubled. In the workings of her simple mind two and two made four. Jimmy had devoted himself unceasingly to Priscilla. Why should he have done so unless he were in love with her? Besides, young men were always in love with Priscilla. He was proud and would naturally deny it—dear boy! She would speak to Priscilla. Jimmy was the son of her old friend, and Priscilla should not flirt with him so outrageously.

So it was that Priscilla, stopping to speak to her en route to the lake, found her distinctly aggrieved.

"Priscilla," she began, with as near an approach to dignified severity as her 200 pounds would allow, "I desire you to stop flirting with Jimmy Marshall."

"Nonsense!" returned Priscilla.

"You needn't speak to me like that, Priscilla. He is entirely too nice a fellow for you to treat as you do unless—of course if you like him it's different," Mrs. Baker ended mysteriously.

"I suppose I like him well enough," returned Priscilla carelessly. "I never thought much about it. Why, what's the matter?"

"He was just telling me—I don't know that I should repeat it to you," said Mrs. Baker conscientiously.

"Tell me. What did he say?" Priscilla was becoming interested.

"Well, I don't know that he said it in so many words; but, Priscilla, he is in love with you."

"In love with me!" gasped Priscilla, divided between gratification and dismay.

Is your baby thin, weak, fretful?

Make him a Scott's Emulsion baby.

Scott's Emulsion is Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites prepared so that it is easily digested by little folks.

Consequently the baby that is fed on Scott's Emulsion is a sturdy, rosy-cheeked little fellow full of health and vigor.

ALL DRUGGISTS: 50c. AND $1.00.

"Yes, and it's too bad," continued Mrs. Baker, with rising indignation. "Really, Priscilla, it's a shame. It will break his heart, and his mother will blame me, and it's dreadful."

"I don't see what I have done," returned Priscilla crossly. It was a pity that a girl couldn't be decently polite to a man without his going and falling in love with her, spoiling everything! Of course everybody would blame her, she reflected in annoyance as she continued her interrupted way to the lake.

Jimmy Marshall saw her coming and went up the path to meet her. With troubled mind he had thought the matter over and decided it must be broken off at once; not so suddenly as to arouse her suspicions, of course, but gently. He would make a casual remark or so about business, then in a couple of days pretend a sudden business call and leave. Of course she would feel terrible, but it would be easier for her in the end. Dear little girl! He was surprised at the wave of tenderness that swept over him.

"Shall we try tennis or the canoe this morning?" In spite of himself his voice sounded forced and unnatural.

"Whichever you prefer. 'Suppose we say tennis," returned Priscilla, trying to meet his eyes carelessly. Then to her dismay she blushed scarlet while he grew unaccountably red.

How plainly he showed it. How blind she had been, thought Priscilla contritely.

How heartless in him to want to leave her, thought Jimmy, not daring to look at the lovely flushed face.

Jimmy looked very grave during the next few days. It was no little thing to have blighted a young girl's affections, even unconsciously, and when she was such a dainty little thing as Priscilla—so sweet, so sensible, so far above the average in every way—it became a pretty grave proposition. Indeed, he sometimes wondered if he were not in honor bound to marry her anyway.

In the meantime Priscilla, under Mrs. Baker's accusing eye, wilted perceptibly. Probably everybody thought she was glad she had wrought so much mischief. Well, she wasn't. She never dreamed he would take it so to heart. And he was such a big, lovable fellow. Mrs. Baker was right. He was too good to be treated so shabbily.

Jimmy had marshaled his casual remarks about business through two days of painstaking effort and arranged his departure for the third. In order to avoid hurting Priscilla's feelings he asked her to go for a farewell ride on the lake. He would be very friendly, he resolved, and gentle, but he must contrive to let her see that this was the end.

It was while he was wondering just how he should manage it that the accident happened.

They had almost reached the wooded shore opposite when there was a quiver of the boat—a startled cry from Priscilla—an overturned canoe drifting idly on the face of the lake.

"Don't be frightened! We're near shore!" cried Jimmy, shaking the water from his eyes and striking out in her direction. Somehow they reached the opposite bank, he holding her close, while she clung to him half wildly for protection.

"I—I was so frightened!" she said in a wabbly, half hysterical voice, shivering in his arms.

Suddenly at touch of her a strange, sweet madness seized him, and he covered her face with kisses, holding her tight, while she, bewildered by a new, shy happiness, lay passive in his arms.

It was some months later that a matron said in Mrs. Baker's hearing, "Jimmy Marshall and his wife seem desperately in love with each other."

"Yes," responded that lady placidly. "It was a case of love at first sight. I know of what I speak, because I was with them when they met. Indeed, I may say that I saw it from the first," she added, with bland conviction.

Power of Imagination.

It is conceded by scientists that imagination has much power as a curative agent. A concrete example occurred in the experience of Sir Humphry Davy. A man went to him suffering from paralysis to be treated by electricity. When the patient had seated himself Davy, as a preliminary, placed a small glass thermometer beneath his tongue to take his temperature. The sick man thought that this was the instrument for curing him and declared that he felt it run through all his system. Davy, curious to see what lasting effect the imagination would exert, did not undeceive the man, but sent him away, telling him to return daily to have the treatment repeated. The man did as he was told and returned daily to sit in a chair with the end of a little thermometer tucked beneath his tongue. In a few days the paralysis was completely cured by the patient's own imagination.

A Floating Furnace.

Many a mysterious disappearance at sea is believed to have been caused by fire in the coal bunkers, the discovery coming too late to admit of the fire being mastered. For instance, fire broke out on the Ada Iredale, a vessel engaged in the China trade, which many years ago set sail from a Scottish port for San Francisco, carrying a cargo of coal. When the vessel was some 2,000 miles from the Marquesas islands, in the Pacific ocean, the cargo was found to be on fire. All efforts to extinguish the conflagration were fruitless, and the crew was driven to the boats. The ship, by this time a floating furnace, was left to its fate and drifted, still burning, a distance of 2,420 miles, to Tahiti. Finally taken in tow, she was conveyed safely into port, where for more than a year her cargo still smoldered.

A Caustic Rejoinder.

A physician who had for fifteen years been one of the doctors of the Actors' fund and who attended hundreds of actors with no compensation whatever, wrote to a prominent manager and asked for some theater tickets. His request was refused, the manager asking what the doctor had ever done that he should be entitled to receive theater tickets gratis. The physician immediately replied. His letter contained a brief recital of his services to theatrical people. In conclusion he said: "Despite my services, as named above, I should not have thought of asking you for tickets had it not been that upon the occasion of the death of Mr. Blank you assured me that if you could ever serve me in any way whatever you would consider it a favor if I would call upon you. However, I bear you no ill will on account of your present action. I was very glad to attend Mr. Blank when he died in your box office, and I should be happy to do as much for you at any time."

Tom Corwin's Education.

The father of Tom Corwin, the famous Kentucky statesman, orator and wit, felt that he was too poor to make a scholar of more than one child of his large family, and so the elder brother, Matthias, was kept at school and Thomas placed at hard work on the farm. The breaking of a leg proved a happy incident in the life of the boy, as the enforced confinement gave him time for devotion to his beloved books, and he committed a Latin grammar to memory. Upon his recovery he again importuned his father to send him to school and, meeting a refusal, deliberately broke his leg the second time that he might have leisure to study. His heroic determination to learn resulted in his being placed in the same institution attended by his brother, where his natural ability and great industry gathered a thorough knowledge of the best English literature and a fair acquaintance with the Latin classics.—Ohio Magazine.

Why Horses Shy.

The horse shied at a piece of white paper, and the rider tumbled off into the mud.

"It is well for the world," said an automobilist, smiling, "that it is ceasing to use the horse for a servant. The horse is a half blind giant, with the mind of a baby. No wonder, then, that when we trust out lives in his keeping he is apt to go back on us.

"His main trouble is his eyes. So poor is the horse's sight that he mistakes a bank of snow for a fierce white beast. A mud puddle at his feet is a yawning chasm. A shadow flung across his path is a black terror seeking his life; hence the weakminded, nearsighted, powerful horse goes through life beside himself with fear. He is no more to be trusted than a maniac, and, like a maniac, he sees a monster awaiting him at every corner. Yet we get on his back, fools that we are."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

An Easier Trip.

"The president of this road," remarked the man in the corner of the smoking compartment, "is one of those old fashioned railroaders. He began as a brakeman. Instead of riding over the line in a private car to inspect it he walks over it." "I don't blame him," declared the man who was making his first trip on the road.—Cleveland Press.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

FEATHERED FRIENDS.

Were the birds all killed the farmer would be defeated in advance in his warfare against insects. It pays to consider the farmer's friends, the birds, and to take such measures as will encourage the best of them to become near neighbors. Bird boxes are an excellent investment. To be sure, if the farmer is a grower of small fruits he may feel that he is doing more than his share to support his allies in the insect war, but his neighbors, who raise no cherries or strawberries, should be correspondingly grateful for the scarcity of many kinds of insects in the neighborhood.

Robins have shown ability to make way with three hundred earthworms each in a single way, while a single chickadee has put down seven thousand cankerworms in the same period. The grosbeak is a voracious bug eater and can easily consume a quart daily. One variety of the grosbeak is about the only bird which makes a specialty of killing the Colorado potato beetle. Other active insect eaters are the cowbird, the cardinal, the purple finch, the pigeon, the goldfinch, the swallow, the flicker, the cedar-bird, and cat-bird, all common farm neighbors, and very energetic crop savers at nothing a day.

The swallows may be easily persuaded to live near the home, requiring nothing but mud for them to build into houses. Boxes for martins, if placed on poles beyond the reach of cats, are soon occupied with lively tenants. Boxes for wrens should have openings not more than one inch in diameter to keep out the troublesome sparrows, which otherwise are liable to drive out more desirable tenants. Bluebirds are very pleasant neighbors, and may be attracted if the same precautions are taken in making the openings sparrow-proof. Bluebirds are among the very best insect birds, seeking out quantities of destructive pests in places not usually searched by other birds.

The crow is commonly defended by the statement that he does more good than harm. But it would be hard to convince most farmers that the scarcity of these black-coated fellows, as noticed some seasons, is not a blessing. They may eat a great many insects, but so do other birds, which do not also scratch up the seed corn. The crow seems like an employee who works at times, but who slyly helps himself to the goods. The farmer naturally prefers a helper that works but doesn't steal. So the crows when numerous are coldly welcomed, and when scarce are but lightly missed, even by those who recognize whatever good qualities they have.

THE BUSINESS FARMER.

To keep up with the times the farmer must be a business man. He will unite method and system with farm training. He may, or may not, keep a formal account or practice a system of bookkeeping, but at least he will know just what he is doing, and how and why. If his business is or is not paying he will find out just where the results are coming from, or will discover where the leak is before the sheriff comes.

The way in which this is done will depend upon the training. Many successful farmers have never been accustomed to keep accounts, and do not feel its necessity. They have worked their plan of farming into a system, which is about the same year after year, and after having once figured out cost and profits in certain lines which are of chief importance they are able to tell very closely where they stand at any time. They know the cost of a quart of milk, a dozen of eggs or a bushel of potatoes under usual conditions, and are able to quickly figure out the changes brought about by new market conditions. Very likely such farmers would meet surprises should they actually keep a system of books, reckoning everything at the start, according to market value, including all charges for labor, taxes, living expenses, seeds, manure, fertilizers, tools and other incidentals, and balancing this account with the various itemized receipts from all sources, including an allowance for the farm improvements.

Whether the account system is complete or not, many hints and valuable items for reference may be obtained simply by keeping a pocket diary and jotting down the things most likely to be needed for reference.

HORTICULTURAL.

Garden Strawberries.

Just at this time the owner of a small garden is looking forward to the first crop of fruit which spring will bestow upon him. Strawberries, the rubies of the field, however, need attention in order to produce the best results.

With favorable conditions after the plants start in the spring they grow fast, soon blossom, and rapidly develop their fruit, thus requiring in a short time relatively large amounts of immediately available nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash, and these elements must be in the soil in abundance to meet this demand if the best results are to be obtained.

Well-rotted barnyard manure is the fertilizer most generally used and recommended by the experiment stations for strawberries. It should never be used fresh. If not well rotted, it is generally foul with weed seeds and fungous diseases, and conduces to a rank growth of vine, and a fruit of poor quality. To supplement the barnyard manure, which is often of poor quality, from fifty to one hundred bushels per acre of unleached ashes are recommended.

In some localities the high cost of barnyard manure is an argument against its use, and where the soil can be supplied with humus from other sources, as by turning under green manure crops, like clover and cowpeas, commercial fertilizers are profitably used. At the Maryland Station a carload of stable manure costing $31 was tried in comparison with commercial fertilizers costing but $7, with the advantage of growth of vines and early maturity of fruit decidedly in favor of the commercial mixture.

Where barnyard manure is not available, or its high cost makes its use unwise, ashes and ground bone may be used to supplement green manuring. The green crops should be plowed under in the fall, and the bone and ashes applied broadcast in the spring, and lightly harrowed in. This plan has given quite general satisfaction among strawberry growers.

AGRICULTURAL.

Profit from Milk and Vegetables.

A prominent milk and truck farmer, producing for the wholesale market of Pawtucket, R. I., is F. A. Bliss, of the nearby town of Rehoboth, Mass., says a writer in the American Cultivator. Mr. Bliss was well known to our readers several years ago as a producer of small fruit, particularly strawberries, in which he was successful, also various lines of vegetable products; but of late years the resources of the farm have been more and more directed toward milk production.

The land is a heavy loam, naturally adapted for grass. In fact, the possibility of dairying was first suggested by the ease with which the strawberry fields came into grass. A little neglect after fruiting season would turn the strawberry field into a heavy piece of mowing. Acting on this hint, the heavy lands of the farm have been devoted to grass production and they yield four or five tons to the acre, two crops a year.

The farm comprises about 150 acres, of which forty acres are woodland and fifty or sixty acres pasturage, and keeps fifty cows. The crop system is one well adapted to the conditions and somewhat original. The land is left in grass four to five years, after which the yield decreases and the land is plowed after hay season and sown to rutabaga turnips, some fertilizer being used to increase the yield.

The turnips afford a good crop in addition to the three tons or so of hay already harvested the same season. Mr. Bliss raises his own turnip seed, and after twelve or fifteen years of systematic effort in breeding a very high type of turnip has been secured, both in quality, early maturity and shape. This has been accomplished by very careful selection, of turnips for seed, thorough cultivation, and proper fertilization of both turnips for seed and the main crop. Care has been taken to set the turnips for seed and seed for the main crop at just the right time. Careful attention to the above principles establishes a habit of quick growth, which is the secret of good quality. Last year's turnip crop was two thousand bushels.

The following spring the land is planted to corn, the manure supply of the farm being used not on the corn, but as top-dressing for the grass, and the growth of the corn being assisted by fertilizers. After the cultivation season for the corn is over the land is sowed to turnips and grass. When the corn is harvested some of the turnips are, of course injured, but plenty are left to produce fifty to seventy-five bushels to the acre, and after these are removed, the land is still in grass and ready to produce a big yield the following year.

In this way only one year's crop of grass is lost in renewing the mowings, and in that year is obtained a crop of corn, a crop of turnips and the newly seeded field of grass. The mowings are seeded to about the usual mixture of timothy, redtop and clover. The barn cellar is cleared out about once in two months, and the manure applied to the mowings with the aid of a manure spreader.

Great care is taken to save all the fertility by good care of the manure, and here is one of the important points of Mr. Bliss' system. An abundance of bedding and absorbent is used. A fine sort of cotton waste is obtained from the mills. It is in such a condition that it does not bunch up and does not interfere with the manure spreader. This material is used freely in the stable gutters as an absorbent, taking up all the liquid matter. In addition, enough fine wood shaving are used as bedding to make things comfortable for the cows. As large quantities of grain are fed, it is considered important to save all the rich fertility to be used on the farm. The large herd of cattle with all the fertility saved has rapidly improved the condition of the farm, and the naturally good grass land has become extremely productive.

Even the second crop of grass would be considered a good yield on many farms, amounting to about two tons of rowen per acre in a fairly good season. This heavy yield of rowen is obtained in part by top-dressing immediately after the first cutting, using two hundred pounds of nitrate of soda per acre. This dressing at a cost of about $5 fully doubles the second crop and is considered a paying operation.

THE HORSE.

A Talk by the Horse.

The following "Dont's" which the horse gives to his owner are well worth heeding. We reproduce them direct from the Farm Journal:

Don't leave me hitched in my stall at night with a big cob right where I must lie down. I am tied and I can't select a smooth place.

Don't compel me to eat more salt than I want by mixing it with my oats. I know better than any other animal how much I need.

Don't think because I go free under the whip I don't get tired. You would move up if under the whip.

Don't think because I am a horse that weeds and briars won't hurt my hay.

Don't whip me when I get frightened along the road, or I will expect it next time and maybe make trouble.

Don't trot me up hill, for I have to carry you and the truck and myself, too. Try it yourself sometime. Run up hill with a big load.

Don't keep my stable very dark, for when I go out into the light my eyes are injured.

Don't say "whoa" unless you mean it.

Teach me to stop at the word. It may check me if the lines break and save a runaway and smashup.

Don't forget to file my teeth when they get jagged and I cannot chew my food.

When I get lean it may be a sign my teeth want filing.

Don't run me down a steep hill, for if anything should give way, I might break your neck.

Don't be so careless of my harness as to find a great sore on me before you attend to it.

Don't forget the old book that is a friend of all the oppressed that says: "A merciful man is merciful to his beast."

BREEDING GOOD STOCK.

Good feeding must go with good breeding.

Select the best for breeding purposes.

Like produces like, or the likeness of an ancestor.

The longer the pedigree the better, if it is the right kind.

Avoid strongly opposite tendencies in the parents, as tending to weaken the hereditary tendency in the young. If violent crosses are made, do not breed from the crossbreds.

Those who know nothing about inbreeding should avoid it. Practise it only between individuals as nearly perfect as possible. It tends to fix and increase all characteristics, both good and bad.

In crossing and grading up, always use a thoroughbred male. Never use a poor grade, no matter how well he looks. He cannot be depended upon to breed true.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Smoked ceilings may be cleaned by washing with cloths wrung out of water in which a small piece of washing soda has been dissolved.

Have a set of paint brushes for your work about the kitchen. Use one to blacken the range, its gets into all the ornamental work beautifully; use one to grease the bread tins and cake pans, another for your griddle, it distributes your fat evenly, and in each case protects the hands. Get the ten and fifteen-cent kinds, and it is no great expense to replace them.

Vegetables should be washed in cold water and cooked until soft in boiling salted water. If cooked in any uncovered vessel their color is better kept. For peas and beans add salt to water last half hour of cooking.

Half a saucer of chloride of zinc, moistened with an equal mixture of vinegar and water, a few drops at a time only, will purify a sick room in a few minutes!

It is a strain on the hair to be curled and coiffed in devious ways all the winter, and many fashionable women are giving their locks a rest just now by dressing them very simply.

Rubber must be kept away from all gold and silver. Rubber bands around boxes in which silver is kept will cause the articles to tarnish.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Boiled Rice Pudding.

Wash two teacupfuls of rice, and soak it in water for half an hour; then turn off the water, and mix the rice with half a pound of raisins, stoned and cut in halves; add a little salt; tie the whole in a cloth, leaving room for the rice to swell to twice its natural size, and boil two hours in plenty of water; serve with wine sauce.

Apple Omelette.

Six large Pippins, three eggs, a tablespoonful of butter, six tablespoonfuls of sugar, nutmeg and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Pare, core and stew the apples as for apple sauce. Beat smooth, add the butter while hot, also the nutmeg and sugar. When cold the beaten yolks of eggs are added, and the vanilla; the last thing stir in the stiffly beaten whites of eggs, pour into a pudding dish which is warmed and buttered. Bake in a moderate oven a light brown. Serve warm for tea, or it is good with cream for dessert.

Fish Croquettes.

To two cups cold flaked halibut or salmon add one cup thick white sauce. Season with salt and pepper, and spread on a plate to cool. Shape, roll in crumbs, egg, and crumbs, and fry in deep fat; drain, arrange on hot dish for serving, and garnish with parsley. If salmon is used add lemon juice and finely chopped parsley.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found it at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me — ELDER JOHN T. Larder Lake Goldfields

As stated in my news letters last summer I then began investigating the Larder Lake district north of Cobalt. I have done so thoroughly, and from personal investigation on the ground, the employment of reliable engineers and a corps of experienced prospectors, I and my associates have now ample proof of the great value of this field.

We know so surely what is there (and what immense probabilities there are as well) that we have already put nearly $150,000.00 cash into the field.

Our employees on the ground number nearly two hundred and our stamp mill will very soon be in operation.

I am a practical mining man, and I need hardly say that we would not put in such money and work unless fully justified.

The width of the veins or reefs in sight, and the values they bear when such width is considered, is extraordinary. In Africa such reefs are profitably mined when bearing but a few pennyweights of gold to the ton—at Larder Lake average assays from across many reefs run ounces of gold to the ton. An ounce is equal to $20, and the cost of mining and milling should not exceed $2.50.

I and my associates see many millions of dollars of clean legitimate profits before us in these goldfields.

By forming a company, putting up our hard cash, as stated above, and getting in first, we have secured thirty-seven forty acre claims, which we believe to be the cream of the Larder Lake Goldfields.

Our present stamp mill is a small one. We want a larger mill—from 100 to 200 stamps—and we must spend money in opening up our large acreage.

We have to put in considerable money, and, indeed, would carry the whole thing ourselves but that, like everything else, we have other interests as well to take care of.

We are therefore affording others the opportunity of joining us and sharing with us the large profits we are going to make—profits from dividends, and also from the increase of market value in our stock.

Our Company is known as the LARDER LAKE PROPRIETARY GOLDFIELDS, LIMITED, and among the directors and gentlemen identified with it are the following: Col. G. Sterling Ryerson, ex-M.P.P.; Senator L. V. Ulrey; Lieut.-Col. A. N. Worthington, Member Dominion Parliament; T. Herbert Lennox, Member Provincial Parliament; Chas. H. Waterous, ex-Mayor of Brantford; E. P. Burke, of "Granby" fame; Dr. D. H. Piper, of London; P. Kirkgaarde, M.E., Member National Geographical Society; Sylvester Jenckes, President Jenckes Machine Company; William Farwell, President Eastern Townships Bank; C. P. Brown, of Toronto; Dr. Preston, Member Provincial Parliament, and others of like standing.

For the purposes mentioned above a limited amount of stock is offered by the underwriters (Canada Mines, Limited) at their first ground floor price of $1.00 per share. This is being subscribed for rapidly and the next allotment will be at a materially advanced price. The stock will then be listed on the exchanges and placed on the New York and Boston curbs, when, as in every proposition I have been connected with, it will, without doubt, command a legitimate market at a still higher price.

THIS OPPORTUNITY WILL NOT LAST LONG.

MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve, the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

Hotel Quinte By-law Passed Last Night.

Grants Fixed Rate of $10,000 For Fifteen Years and Water For Same Period At $100 Per Year--Speeches For and Against the Measure, Which Passed By Six to Two--Agreement Was Signed and By-law Is Now Operative--House-Moving Matters Give Rise to Vivid Oratory--Tax Collector Appointed--Notes Of a Long Session.

The City Council had a four hours session last night, the most important business transacted being the passage of the by-law granting Mr. J. V. Jenkins the fixed rate of assessment on Hotel Quinte, and the one hundred dollar water rate authorized by the Legislature. There seemed to be something momentous in the air before the Mayor rang his bell, and the City Fathers conversed together privately with mysterious looks and a general air of profound wisdom. The Quinte by-law was passed with but two dissenting voices, those of Ald. Panter and Vermilyea. The question of the old house now on Albert street took up a lot of time, and was the cause of much conversation. If the venerable edifice could be moved by hot air the Council would probably have it in its place in no time. Quite a good-sized crowd was in the back benches, and the debate on the Hotel Quinte by-law was intently listened to.

Ald. Marsh was the only absentee.

TELEPHONE MATTERS.

Mr. Sherwood C. Scott wrote asking permission to erect telephone poles and wires on the streets of Belleville to connect with different parts of Hastings County.

A company, the name of which was not mentioned, wrote in a similar strain.

Both communications were referred without discussion.

THE HOTEL QUINTE BILL.

City Clerk Mikel announced that he had received official notification of the passage of the private bill re Hotel Quinte by the Legislature.

Mr. R. J. Graham wrote claiming that he had signed the first petition re Hotel Quinte under misrepresentations. He had been told that the water to be furnished for one hundred dollars per year was not to be used for power purposes. He now found out that he had been misinformed, and asked that his name be erased from the petition.

A form of agreement was submitted, which it was proposed should be entered into by the city and Mr. Jenkins. It provided that, according to the terms of the private bill passed by the Legislature the assessment should be fixed at $10,000 for fifteen years with a fixed water rate at $100 per year.

A petition was presented, signed by many ratepayers, objecting to the ten-year clause and particularly the water rate.

The petition presented to the Legislature, which protested against the granting of the prayer of the by-law, was also read.

The Mayor pointed out that the last petition had gone to the Legislature. With that the Council had no business.

Ald. Butler asked if any of those who signed the protesting petition were present ready to back up their views.

Deep silence reigned.

Ald. Panter said the signers of the petition might not know the matter was coming up to-night.

The Mayor said the Council might first take up the proposed agreement with Mr. Jenkins.

Evidently if this agreement were agreed to, there would be no need to discuss the various letters, petitions, etc.

The Mayor moved that the proposed agreement with Mr. Jenkins be adopted He said that most of the people who signed the petitions objected most to the water clause. There were rumors on the street that Mr. Jenkins intended to use water to generate electricity for his new hotel, and for power purposes. This was not so. The Mayor said he would favor the adoption of a clause providing that water be used for domestic purposes only.

Ald. Panter said that, unless the water clause were changed he would oppose the agreement. The Water department of this city was not in a position to grant Mr. Jenkins unlimited water at $100 a year.

Ald. Vermilyea said he knew that four-fifths of the ratepayers were against the water clause. He was also strongly against it himself. The city was not in a position to accept the terms of that clause.

Someone asked what was meant by the Mayor's term, "water for domestic purposes." Did that include water for running the elevator?

Ald. Butler and the City Clerk said no.

The Mayor said it should. He said that, outside of the elevator, the Quinte had used less water than the Anglo, which paid only $75 per year.

Ald. Vermilyea said the Balmoral paid $125 per year for water and had no elevator, while the Ritchie Company paid $180 for water for their elevator alone.

Ald. Green asked if any change in the agreement had been made since the petition had been prepared to present to the Legislature. The terms of that petition had been agreed to by the Council. Why the necessity for discussion now. The matter, he submitted had been settled by the Council before.

Ald. Butler in a very clear and pithy speech threw considerable light on the matter. When the matter was before the Council, before being submitted to the Legislature, they were told that the owners of more than half the assessed value of the city were in favor of a fixed assessment of $10,000 for fifteen years, and a fixed water rate of $100 per year for the same period. The Council had accepted the situation, endorsed the petition and sent it on to the Legislature, where there was no opposition offered to it. The Council asked the Legislature to pass the Act, which was done. Ald. Butler claimed the Council must now pass the by-law endorsed by the Legislature or leave it severely alone, they could not amend it without incurring personal liability. He had looked up the law in this matter and must support the agreement as it stood, though he regretted to do so.

SOME OUTSIDE VIEWS.

Ex-Mayor Johnson, who was in the audience, was called on by the chairman and addressed the Council. He said Ald. Butler's statement was unanswerable, the Council had put its hand to the plough and must not turn back. He was sure that many other places would willingly give $400 a year, which was what the reduced water rate meant to the city to obtain a hotel like the Quinte. In conclusion Mr. Johnson said he did not see the use of a discussion under the circumstances.

Col. Lazier was also heard. He said Ald. Butler was right in his interpretation of the law. They must accept the Act in its entirety, and could not vary it. The speaker said that, when passing the petition around he had never told anyone that the water clause would not be insisted on. Those who did not read the petition on signing it, were distinctly told what it contained.

Mr. Walter Alford said he was at first opposed to the terms of the proposed agreement, but had changed his views, He was willing to bear his share of the cost, but thought the amount of water to be used should be defined.

Police Magistrate Masson said it would only be legal for the new Quinte to use water as before used. Mr. Jenkins was willing to have such a clause inserted in the agreement.

The clause suggested by Mr. Masson was interpolated on motion of Ald. Starling, who spoke in favor of adopting the agreement. He claimed that under the circumstances the Council could do nothing but pass the by-law as originally submitted to the Legislature.

Ald. Panter said it appeared that many who signed the first petition also signed the petition against it, thus showing they were mistaken in their first views. He thought the Council should not pass the by-law without giving its opponents a chance to be heard. The vote might be postponed.

Ald. Burrows thought this matter had been settled long ago, when the Council sent the by-law to the Legislature. How could the Council go back on what it did before? Why were the opponents of the by-law not here? He intended to vote for the bill.

Ald. Panter said the water clause was a most unfair thing and if the Council passed it, the city would some day regret it. He thought the Quinte should only get water for domestic purposes. It was not business to give any man unlimited water for fifteen years. Such actions as this in the past had given the city such a big uncontrollable expenditure to-day.

Ald. Starling said Ald. Panter did not seem satisfied with his motion defining the quantity of water to be used. In that case he would withdraw the motion.

The Mayor moved that the agreement be accepted as drafted without change.

Ald. Panter again warmly said that he thought the water should be for domestic purposes only.

Ald. Butler said the agreement provided only for ordinary consumption of water. The Council should not tinker with the Act, or the first thing they knew they would give away something valuable. "Let the agreement go as drafted," said the chairman of Parks.

Vote was then taken and resulted this way.

In favor of agreement—The Mayor, Aldermen Green, Burrows, Butler, McCrodan, Thompson, Starling.

Against agreement — Ald. Panter and Vermilyea.

Ald. Ackerman was in the chair.

Mr. J. V. Jenkins was called inside the railing to sign the agreement, and when that operation was concluded the crowd in the back benches went home.

THE COMMITTEE REPORTS.

The reports of the various standing committees were adopted with but little discussion.

In the Public Works Committee's report there was a clause recommending that, in future, a man and team be employed to repair streets which have been left in bad condition after excavating, and that one-third of the cost be borne by the Public Works, Gas and Water Committees respectively.

Ald. Green and Vermilyea objected strenuously. Their committees had no appropriations. The clause was an injustice.

The recommendation prevailed, however, but Ald. Green and Vermilyea successfully introduced motions to the effect that whatever repairs were made to streets by either of their committees should be done under the management of such committees.

The matter took up a lot of time, and many aldermen expressed the opinion that the streets had in the past been spoiled by too much excavating.

TEAMSTERS AND WAGES.

The recommendation of the Public Works Committee, that the request of the city teamsters for an increase of pay be not granted, was, on motion of Ald. Butler, referred back for further consideration.

The following accounts were passed:

Parks pay sheet	$15.75
McIntosh Bros.	3.90
U. Roblin	64.00

MUSIC ON THE PARK.

Geo. Ashley, manager of the Fifteenth Band, wrote asking that the said organization be given half the concerts on Victoria Park this summer. The Band was a local organization, and in an efficient condition.

The manager of the I.O.O.F. Band wrote asking that the above band be given the contract for playing twelve concerts on the park at $200. The Band was in efficient shape. Should the Council desire more than twelve concerts the Band would furnish them at $20 per.

Both communications were referred to the Parks Committee.

SEWERAGE WANTED ON DUNBAR STREET.

Mr. E. Guss Porter, M. P., wrote setting forth that a sewer was badly needed on Dunbar St.

A petition was also presented from ratepayers living on that street, asking that a sewer be installed.

Both letter and petition were referred to the Public Works Committee.

BAD FACING ON GRANOLITHIC WALK.

Mr. John Williams wrote stating that about fifty feet of granolithic walk in front of his residence on Charles St. needed to be re-surfaced. He had paid in full his share of building the said walk, and now the

H. P. Kennedy reported the same prices as last week, $6.50 for selects and $6.25 for lights and fats.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 22.—(Special.)—Cables from Liverpool and London on Canadian cattle were weaker and prices show a decline of ½c to 1c per lb. compared with a week ago, and sales were made at 11½c to 12c per lb. Owing to the near approach of the opening of navigation, there has been a little more life in local export live stock circles, and some business has been done in ocean freight space. The Liverpool space from Portland for May has been let at 27s 6d to Americans for 300 each boat.

At the Montreal Stock Yards' West End Market the receipts of live stock for the week ending April 20 were 4007 cattle, 33 sheep and lambs, 2200 hogs and 1611 calves, and the offerings for local consumers today were 1000 cattle, 647 hogs and 38 calves. A feature of the trade to-day was the stronger undertone to the market for cattle. This was due to the fact that higher figures have had to be paid by dealers for cattle throut the country, owing to the fact that the competition between buyers for home consumption and those for export account, has been keener of late for supplies. There was little or no demand for exporters this morning, which to some extent was due to the weak cables from Liverpool on Saturday, noting a decline in prices for both American and Canadian cattle of ¾c to 1c per lb., as compared with those realized a week ago. Owing to this, coupled with higher prices demanded here, exporters showed no disposition to operate. Another feature of the market was the demand from several leading butchers of Quebec, who bought three or four carloads of cows and bulls. In addition there was a large attendance of local butchers, but trade during the early part of the morning was rather slow, as buyers did not feel disposed to pay the above advance noted; but, as supplies were somewhat smaller than a week ago, sellers were firm in their views, and later in the day trade became more active and a clearance was made. Choice beeves sold at 5¼c to 5¾c; good at 5c to 5¼c; fair at 4½c to 4¾c, and lower grades at 3½c to 4¼c per lb.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for hogs, prices today being steady at the decline noted last Wednesday. Supplies were smaller than they have been during the past three weeks on Mondays, and this no doubt tended to check the recent downward tendency of values. The demand from local dealers was fairly good, but packers were not in the market for supplies, as they bought freely in the west last week; however, a steady trade was done with sales of selected lots at $7 to $7.25 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars. There was no improvement in cable advices on Saturday on Canadian bacon; in fact, those from Liverpool and Bristol were easier than a week ago. Supplies of calves were smaller, and trade in this line was not so large, but the demand was good for all offerings, and sales of good to choice stock were made at $8 to $10, and lower grades at $2 to $6 each. The scarcity of sheep and lambs continues as bad as ever and prices rule firm. Sheep are quoted at 5½c to 6c, and lambs at 6½c to 7c per lb., with spring lambs selling at $4 to $6 each.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, April 22.—Cattle—Receipts, 4200 head; active and 10c to 15c higher; prime steers, $5.75 to $6.25; shipping, $5.25 to $5.75; butchers', $4.75 to $5.65; heifers, $4.25 to $5.50; cows, $3.50 to $4.75; bulls, $3.50 to $5; stockers and feeders, $3.50 to $4.75; stock heifers, $3 to $3.75; fresh cows and springers, steady to $2 higher; $20 to $57.

Veals—Receipts, 3000 head; active and steady; $5 to $7.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 17,000 head; active and 5c to 10c lower; heavy, $6.85 to $6.90; mixed and yorkers, $6.90 to $6.95; pigs, $6.85 to $6.90; roughs, $5.90 to $6; stags, $4.75 to $5.00.

New York Live Stock.

NEW YORK, April 22.—Beeves—Receipts, 4201; steers, slow to 10c lower; bulls, firm; bologna and common cows, steady; others, 5c to 10c lower; steers, $5.25 to $6.37½; bulls, $3.50 to $4.75; cows, $2.20 to $4.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 14,191; market lower at $7.15 to $7.25.

Japs Peace Proposals.

Tokio, April 23.—According to The Japan Mail, the Japanese delegates at The Hague peace conference will present a series of independent propositions, among them being the conclusion of conventions for the conduct of battle on land and at sea, the use of mines in commercial routes, the use of wireless telegraphy between besieged fortresses and points in neutral territory, the use of neutral ports for belligerent purposes, methods for declaring the opening of hostilities, and the limitation of armaments.

Peace Not Yet.

Washington, April 23.—Advices received here yesterday from Central America are to the effect that the peace negotiations, which have been in progress for the past few days at Aanpala, have come to a deadlock, and it is feared that a renewal of hostilities is impending.

The difficulty appears to lie in the Nicaraguan demand that Salvador shall be held responsible for what has occurred.

Black Handers On Trial.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., April 23.—More than a score of foreigners, charged with being members of the "Black Hand" Society, and responsible for many crimes in this vicinity, were placed on trial here yesterday. Thirteen cases of shooting with attempt to kill, 13 of conspiracy, six of dynamiting, and two of robbery by threats and menaces are charged.

Engineer Electrocuted.

Rochester, N.Y., April 23.—John Yerger, one of the oldest engineers in the employ of the Erie Railroad, was electrocuted while standing on the roof of his cab yesterday.

Yerger climbed to the roof of his cab to fix the whistle, which was out of order. The back of his shoulder near the neck came into contact with the trolley wire.

Village Fire Swept.

Ballston, N.Y., April 23.—Fire yesterday destroyed the business section of Middlegrove, a village twelve miles from here. The village is without fire protection. The loss will aggregate $30,000.

Second Trial In New York.

New York, April 23.—District Attorney Wm. T. Jerome said last night that he had no intention of either asking for or consenting to a change of venue for the next trial of Harry K. Thaw.

WAS AGAINST COUNCIL

Sir Wilfrid Afraid Trouble Might Be Caused in Canada.

Says There Are "Firebrands" Here—Laurier Wanted Imperial Council—Confederation In South Africa—Long Chapter of Dissatisfaction—Ministers Have Kick—Not Allowed to Talk.

London, April 23.—(C. A. P.)—Premier Laurier, interviewed by the Canadian Associated Press, said. "It is well known my views were against the imperial council. I was against it, as I did not wish that resolutions might be passed over here that might cause trouble in Canada, for, you know," said Sir Wilfrid with a smile, "we have some firebrands in Canada, Bourassa and others.

Wanted Imperial Council.

"I wanted an imperial council committee, to be under the supervision of the Colonial Office, so that in any dispute which might arise we would have a responsible Minister to deal with. I pointed to the difficulty we had in Canada when the war with South Africa broke out, when there were some misgivings on the part of the French-Canadians, but they were finally brought around.

"In New Zealand and Australia, where they have all one nationality, such matters are made easier."

To the suggestion that the result of the present conference will only be that the representatives of the different parts of the empire will become better acquainted, Sir Wilfrid replied that the fact that Botha and Jameson, two men who fought against each other, were members of the conference, would tend greatly towards the confederation of South Africa.

Position Unsatisfactory.

A Sydney cable says Premier Deakin's attempt to get rid of a colonial official intervention is exciting keen interest, now it is understood the history of the relations of the Colonial Office and the Australian Colonies being one long chapter of dissatisfaction.

The position of the Ministers accompanying the Premiers continues unsatisfactory. On the opening day Sir William Lyne threatened Lord Elgin he would leave the country within 24 hours if not allowed to participate in the conference. It now transpires that one of the Ministers who sits behind the Premiers "felt so like a child sitting with its finger in its mouth keeping good," that he lost patience and broke the silence, wanting to know who he was, what he was and why he was not sitting alongside his own Prime Minister.

The Canadian Associated Press understands Lord Elgin looked hard and Winston Churchill glared disapproval, without, however, overawing the delinquent.

Deplore Bryce's Absence.

London, April 23.—The representation, or lack of it, of the British Government at the inauguration of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg two weeks ago was referred to in the House of Commons yesterday. It was stated that the invitations had not official character and that Ambassador Bryce had "to attend the peace conference in New York."

In the House of Lords, Lord Leith of Fyvie, complaining of the Ambassador's absence, said that Great Britain had stood aloof and it would be most disappointing to see the late Lord Fauncefote's great work of re-establishing a good understanding between the United States and Great Britain ended by an act of indifferences, which might be misconstrued into something stronger.

Seven Buildings Burned.

Tweed, April 23.—Fire last night, at Stoco, which is three miles from Tweed, across the lake, destroyed an hotel and seven other buildings at a loss of $8,000.

The village has no fire protection, but the Tweed firemen went across and rendered valuable service.

The buildings burned are: L. Allore's store, Hinch's Hotel, Anson Canniff's brick dwelling and barn, Hayes' store and barn, John Muironey's residence and blacksmith shop, M. Dolan's residence and A. Courtney's residence.

Fast Ballooning.

Matteawan, N. J., April 23.—A balloon which left Philadelphia at 12.41 o'clock yesterday afternoon landed here at 2.15, having covered the sixty miles in an hour and a half.

In the balloon were A. R. Hawley, a New York broker, and Arthur T. Atherholl of Philadelphia.

The balloon reached an altitude of 12,000 feet. The fear that the strong wind might carry it out to sea caused the determination to land.

A Painful Drive.

Fort William, April 23.—J. Williams, Hudson Bay factor at Osanburg, two or three hundred miles north of Ignace, had his feet frozen a month or so ago and drove his dog team to Ignace, and from there was brought in to Fort William General Hospital. The trip by dog sleigh took three weeks to accomplish. Portions of the feet were amputated.

Thirty-Nine Were Drowned.

St. Petersburg, April 23.—It was learned yesterday that 39 persons lost their lives through the foundering of the ferry steamer Archanglesk, while crossing the Neva Saturday night.

The old ferry boats have been replaced by larger vessels, and the owner of the line will be prosecuted for gross negligence.

Canning Factory Burned.

Lubec, Maine, April 23.—The entire plant of the Sea Coast Canning Company was burned yesterday. Estimated loss $200,000.

Church Burned.

Sharbot Lake, April 23.—The Roman Catholic Church in this place was burned yesterday.

RADIAL BILL MUST WAIT

Warm Debate in House of Commons Yesterday.

Archie Campbell Champions Poor Women Who Are Dumped Off Cars—Not For General Advantage of Canada—Calls It Distinct Injustice—Mr. Borden's Criticism—Hamilton Bill Sandbagged.

Ottawa, April 23.—The bill to declare the Hamilton Radial Electric Co. a work for the general advantage of Canada, and to give that company right of extending its system to Windsor, to the Niagara frontier, and to the city of Toronto, was called in the Commons yesterday, and was the occasion of an exceedingly warm debate on this matter, similar to those which followed before the Railway Committee.

The leader of the Opposition objected at the outset to coupling the term "for the general advantage of Canada" with local undertakings like the present. The fact that this had been done in the past was no reason why it should be continued hereafter. What reason, he asked, could be advanced for terming this "for the general advantage of Canada?"

Archie Campbell replied that the Hamilton Radial Co.'s lines were to extend both to Niagara and to Detroit, and that it had necessarily therefore to come under Dominion control. To his mind, the action of the Railway Committee in refusing this company right to enter the city of Toronto was a distinct injustice to the residents of the neighboring municipalities, and an injustice also to the people of Toronto themselves, who wanted all the railway facilities that they could get.

A Crying Shame.

"The district around Toronto had contributed largely toward the upbuilding of the metropolis, and it was a crying shame that women and children on their way to market instead of being able to continue their journey down to the centre of the city, should be dumped at the sacred civic line, without even shelter, till the street railway carried them the rest of the way to their journey's end. The people of Toronto want these obstructions removed, and accommodation given to those who wanted to get in and out of the city.

Mr. Borden considered that Mr. Campbell's remarks were no answer at all to his inquiry.

Mr. Armstrong (East Lambton) expressed his surprise that after its campaign in 1896 that the Liberal party should be lined up last night against provincial rights.

One-Sided Debate.

W. H. Bennett (East Simcoe) commented upon the jug-handled character of the debate. Evidently the Government supporters were ashamed of their position and found it impossible to be defended. This Federal Parliament should disabuse the province of the idea of that it was possible for a company to come here and by inserting certain words implying an extension, obtain federal powers overriding its provincial charter. In a few months Parliament would meet again when the company could come before the House and show that it was really extending towards the boundary, and not merely resorting to a subterfuge to avoid provincial responsibility, then the company's case would receive consideration on its tested merits.

Mr. Fielding then moved that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Thus have provincial rights gained a great victory.

The Hamilton Radial is doomed beyond resurrection.

The Coal Strike.

Ottawa, April 23.—At the opening of the House yesterday morning Mr. Borden asked Mr. Lemieux what was the news from the western labor trouble.

Mr. Lemieux stated that Mr. Sherman, president of District Union No. 18, had sent him a telegram, dated April 20, in the course of which Mr. Sherman said that he was trying to persuade the men to accept a temporary arrangement, and return to the mines pending an investigation, but that he so far had failed.

The companies would do nothing pending the return of G. G. S. Lindsey, who was expected to reach Fernie yesterday.

Rockefeller's Latest.

Louisville, Ky., April 23.—Rev. Carter Helm Jones, pastor of the Broadway Baptist Church, and a close friend of John D. Rockefeller, announced during a mission sermon that plans for a forthcoming princely gift by Rockefeller are almost complete.

"I can say to you," said Rev. Mr. Jones, "that the greatest benefactor of the Baptist Church has about completed the arrangements for a gift of $50,000,000 for the education of the Chinese."

Errors on Both Sides.

Bremen, April 23.—The verdict of the Bremen Admiralty Court on the collision, Nov. 21 last, between the North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse and the British Royal Mail Line steamer Orinoco, off Cherbourg, is that the accident was "due to excusable errors on both sides."

The British Admiralty Court on Dec. 18, decided that the North German Line steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse was alone blamable."

Lord Haliburton Dead.

London, April 22.—Lord Arthur Laurence Haliburton, for a number of years under Secretary of State for War, is dead. He was born in Windsor, N. S., Sept. 26, 1832.

Jap Gun Shoots 8,500 Yards.

Tokio, April 23.—The new field gun, with which the Japanese artillery is being armed; has an effective range of about 8,500 yards. Each gun costs $5,000.

LONG BATTLE WITH FIRE

Four Men Dead and Many Injured—250 Horses Killed.

Fierce Fight With Flames In New York City—Fire Engines In Collision With Street Cars—Overturned and Wrecked—Many Thrilling Escapes From Blazing Buildings—Property Loss $200,000.

New York, April 24.—Four men burned to death; two hundred and fifty horses killed; twelve firemen injured, two of them seriously; two engines overturned and wreck by collisions with street cars, several thrilling escapes from burning buildings, and a property loss of $200,000—that is the story of the fire department's work for the seven hours following Monday midnight.

Six fires on the upper east side on Broadway, in the middle east side, and a big stable fire at Christopher and Barrow streets, kept the firemen constantly at work.

The dead are four Italians whose bodies, burned beyond recognition, were found in the ruins of the Despatch stables, in the block bounded by Christopher, Barrom, West and Washington streets. It was only after most desperate efforts that the firemen saved the big adjoining tenements and the Palace and Knickerbocker Hotels. Two hundred and fifty horses were burned.

Another serious fire started in the Madison Laundry in East 73rd street and swept up through the five-storey building, several of the upper floors of which were occupied as tenements. Families in the upper part were rescued by firemen.

It was a high building in Wooster street that most of the firemen were injured. They had dragged hose up the stairs when the "back draught" swept over them. A dozen of the men were blown down a flight of stairs.

The repair shops of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad in the Melrose yards, near 156th street, were burned yesterday with a loss of $100,000.

Four Go Over Falls.

Raleigh, N. C., April 24.—Swept over the falls, four men were drowned in Cape Fear River yesterday at Buckhorn Falls, 30 miles from Raleigh.

The men were in a scow, trying with poles to force it from the river bank, with purpose of reaching a lower landing. The scow was caught by the current. One was to have been married here next Sunday.

Wreck on Great Northern.

Minot, N. D., April 24.—Twelve persons were seriously injured and a dozen or more were badly hurt in the wreck of a Great Northern passenger train near Blaisdell Monday night.

The wreck was caused by a broken rail.

PASS TORTURE CHAMBER.

Prisoners Beaten With Rods and Their Hair Pulled Out.

St. Petersburg, April 24.—In the Lower House of Parliament yesterday, M. Pergament, Constitutional Democrat, read the reports of the interpellation committee regarding charges that prisoners had been tortured in order to obtain confessions. Details of some seventy cases were given.

They were beaten on sensitive parts of their bodies with Cossacks' whips and rubber rods, and their finger-nails and hair were pulled out. The tortures in many cases were prolonged for eight to ten days. One man, who was only 22 years old, looked like an old man after having been tortured.

The reports added that it was difficult to determine exactly the number of victims, but it could safely be assumed that all who were sentenced by drum-head court-martial, or who overpowered the prison officials at Riga on April 13, passed through the torture chamber.

M. Makaroff detailed the results of the official investigation into the charges brought against the prison officials of Riga in March last, which were shown to be well-founded. The prisoners were clubbed by the police at the time of their arrest, and in the course of their examination in attempts to force confessions from them, the complete illegality of which was admitted by the Government authorities, resulting in Premier Stolypin ordering that proceedings be commenced against the guilty persons.

Continuing, M. Makaroff assured the House that the Government had no intention of overlooking crimes committed by officials, and added that the prosecution of the guilty persons had already begun. M. Lutvi defended the prison guards for killing prisoners who attempted to escape from custody.

Student Condemned to Mines.

Tver, Russia, April 24.—A court-martial Monday sentenced a student named Illinsky, the assassin of Gen. Count Alexis F. Ignotief, to 11 years' imprisonment in the mines and condemned Tselslovsky, an accomplice of the murderer, to deportation for life.

Farmer Lost His Wad.

St. Catharines, April 24.—William Crawford, a Niagara Township farmer, engaged John Armstrong, an immigrant, for a farm hand. The two went out to the barns to hitch up the horses, where Armstrong is said to have seen Crawford take a thick roll of bills from his pocket. The farmer was struck a blow over the head, and when he came to the money was gone. Armstrong was arrested.

Mrs. Perkins Is Now Free.

Jury Acquit Her After Four Hours and a Half Deliberation.

Trial Lasted Eight Days--Doctors Gave Emphatic Evidence for Defence--Said Death Was Due to Kidney Disease Not Strychnine--No Adequate Motive Shown--Alleged Immoral Acts Not Proven.

Cayuga, April 24.—Mrs. Mattie Perkins is free. After four and one-half hours' deliberation a jury of her own countrymen pronounced her innocent of the charge of murdering her husband by giving him strychnine. The verdict was received at 11 p. m. The trial lasted eight days.

During the closing sittings, Justice Mabee relaxed his decision against admitting the general public, and a large gathering of townspeople waited in the court to hear the verdict. There was no demonstration. The acting sheriff stated previous to his lordship's entrance that any offenders in this respect would be punished by his lordship.

His lordship said: "After a very long and patient consideration the jury has taken a humane and merciful view of this evidence. Your counsel in a very able and eloquent appeal said that the truth of the matter was known only to you and to your Maker. I sincerely hope, for your own peace of mind, and for the sake of your soul, that the verdict of not guilty is true in deed and in fact. You are now discharged."

The jury made an application for extra payment for the night sittings. The judge said he would make an order to that effect.

The closing evidence for the defence accentuated the conflict of expert medical testimony.

Drs. Graham Chambers and Walter McKeown were both at variance with the conclusions of the doctors who conducted the autopsy, and efforts to break their testimony produced the intest wrangles of the whole trial. There was not a single thing to prove strychnine poisoning, Dr. McKeown swore.

"Medicine is not an exact science," said witness, in explanation of the difference between experts.

Dr. W. Taylor of Toronto Junction agreed with the findings of Dr. Bauer, but came to different conclusions.

Detective Greer was called by the crown for re-examination. He denied that he had used pressure to obtain the statements from Mrs. McDonald and her son, his only object being to find the truth.

E. F. B. Johnstone, K.C., leading counsel for the defence, made a strong appeal to the sympathies of the jury in an address of three and a half hours. Some of the jurors did not disguise their emotions during his portrayal of the life and hopes of the unhappy woman at the bar. He insisted over and over again that the jury must give a verdict upon the evidence alone.

Mr. Arnoldi reviewed the crown's evidence in an hour's address, dwelling on the proof that the prisoner had strychnine in her possession, that Perkins had died from strychnine poisoning, and that the probabilities were that the prisoner had administered it.

Justice Mabee gave dignified and imparital summing of evidence. He said it seemed unlikely that crown officers, who at first said there was no poisoning and one of whom stated in evidence that he hoped the prisoner would be acquitted, would do so fearful a thing as fabricate evidence. His lordship spoke for nearly an hour and a half. The prisoner sat unmoved. The case went to the jury at 6.30 p.m.

An Appeal to the Jury.

"Standing upon the threshold this woman makes her last appeal through me to you. It is not the appeal of one advanced in years, but a woman with all the hopes and fear of one who, in all probability, had many years to live," said Mr. Johnston, in beginning his address to the jury. "By your decision you will decide whether that life shall be taken or left, whether she shall suffer expiation on the gallows or return shattered and broken to that life which still is so sweet."

With great pathos Mr. Johnston sketched the emotions of a condemned person awaiting execution.

"Will you let it go down in the annals of Haldimand County that 12 men of the county sent a woman to the gallows upon the poisoned tongue of some slanderers?"

No Motive Shown.

"There was no motive. They were an affectionate husband and wife. Struggling on together, she working with her needle at home and he at Welland, to provide for their declining years, she lost by his death not only the protecting arm of her husband, but even the little property of hers which, in her confidence and love she had placed in his name. Had she contemplated his death would she not have obtained the will, and not let her property sink into the hands of John Perkins and the people who have been working up this case against her?"

The crown had outlined lust as a motive, but Dr. Kerr had shown in his evidence that this was impossible, and not a single witness had proved an immoral act between her and any man. Mrs. Perkins was a "woman of mercy" to all Canfield. It was she who took Mrs. Johnston's child back to the father when the mother refused to have any more to do with it.

Tom MacDonald was subpoenaed by the crown, but they dared not put him in the box, said Mr. Johnston. Fred. Gowling had practically admitted that his evidence was the result of an animus against MacDonald.

Death was due to kidney disease, not to strychnine. Dr. Kerr had intended to give strychnine, and could not now swear that he did not give strychnine.

Mr. Johnston spoke for over three and one-half hours.

The Evidence Against.

Mr. Arnoldi said none appreciated more than he the splendid speech for the defence made by the very able advocate, but it was the duty of the crown to protect the lives of the community. It was a practice for the defence to villify crown officers. Where the woman got the strychnine was immaterial. The box was evidence that the woman had obtained the poison. He questioned the motives of Mrs. Perkins and her relatives in searching the house, and insisted that the symptoms disclosed were all suggestive of death caused by the strychnine found in the body. It made no difference if he had uraemia or not. It was as wicked to poison a dying man as a well man.

He denied that it was any part of the crown's duty to call Tom MacDonald. He was one of the implicated parties, yet the defence had not dared to call him to rebute the crown's evidence of the prisoner's connection with him.

His lordship, in summing up, said there were two bold issues standing out. First, was Mr. Perkins' death caused by strychnine poison? and, secondly, was the poison administered by the prisoner, and with felonious intent? Four crown doctors had given evidence that deceased had died from strychnine poison, two of whom had given opinion evidence, which had always to be received with care.

He reviewed Dr. Graham Chambers evidence at length, and contrasted his opinions with the evidence of the deathbed witnesses.

Cause of Death.

"If you find a man after death with his body filled with buckshot in the vital parts, you might have considerable difficulty in concluding that he died from anything else; and if you find the body of a dead man filled with sufficient strychnine to kill him, you will also have considerable doubt in concluding that he died of something else," he said.

The letters appeared to convey all the affection which a woman should feel towards her husband, but was it possible that, while this woman was penning these letters, she was harboring murder in her heart? What was the objects of her statements about her husband's physical condition? Were they intended to aid her to conceal the effects of a murderous intention, or were they the exaggerated fears of a woman, whose husband was away from home?

Was the conversation with Mrs. Carter of innocent intention? The talk about rats and gardens did not precede the enquiry for strychnine, but followed the enquiry for the poison. Her husband's name was mentioned in that conversation. Had she him in mind when she asked for the drug, and why should a man "go crazy" because strychnine was in the house.

A Strange Occurrence.

A few days before Christmas her husband returned, feeling in excellent health. He visits his farm, and is there taken very ill. It was a strange occurrence. Suppose that when Dr. Kerr called on the Monday, and that, by mistake, he had left strychnine tablets, though he swears he did not leave any. The tablets were to be taken one every three or four hours. By what set of circumstances could the man have got the whole of them into his system by Tuesday morning? There was no one else attending him but the prisoner.

Justice pleaseth few in their own house.—Herbert.

Kingston is at present up against the street paving problem about as seriously as Belleville, and the Whig makes some exceedingly timely remarks on the matter, which may be of interest to Belleville people also. Our esteemed contemporary says:

"That something should be done to end the system of putting down stone one year and scraping it off in a pulverized condition the next, or in mud which covers the streets and crossings to the depth of several inches, goes without saying.

"Next to the question of how the scheme is to be financed is the question of how the paving is to be done. There are differences of opinion as to the merits of the work. Tar-macadam — ordinary limestone and ordinary tar—will not do. That has been tried in some cities, unsuccessfully. Asphalt is expensive and a failure, under certain circumstances. It must be well drained, with water escapes at frequent intervals, or it will rot. Hamilton, Montreal and Ottawa, can give evidence upon this point.

"Mr. Ker, Ottawa's engineer, is one of the highest authorities on street paving, and he should be consulted. The city has waited long for an experiment, and if the people vote the money for the pavement it should be with the feeling that no mistake is being made in the manner and quality of the service, and that it will be permanent indeed."

It may fairly be taken for granted that the advice given by Mr. Ker to Kingston would apply with almost equal force to Belleville. Conditions are much the same in the two cities, and the limestone available is almost identical.

WINDSOR SALT—because it's pure, fine, clean, dry, piquant —is used by most people all the time.

One of the worst features about the military parades on the Hospital lot is the pimply-faced young man, with banged hair and a voice which sounds like the filing of a saw. He walks up and down the sidewalks, smokes coffin nails, of course, and puffs his smoke in the faces of ladies, at the same time keeping up a running fire of profanity and idiotic "cheap wit." It is possible, of course, that some day this young fellow may be a gentleman, but a surgical operation may first be necessary.

The suggestion made at the Imperial Club's banquet last night, for the re-organization of the old St. George's Society, was an excellent one. Besides keeping alive national sentiment, the Belleville branch in the old days did much good in the way of aiding the needy and assisting immigrants who had not yet "found their feet." There seems to be room for such a society to-day as formerly. Old England's glories are just as great, and as to the charitable work, well, you know what the Good Book says, "The poor ye have always with you."

His wife and children are cocaine fiends and prowl about the neighborhood in rags, seeking for food, shelter and cocaine."

Respected Sidney Man Passes Away.

GEO. M. KETCHESON.

In the death of Mr. George Macauley Ketcheson, which occurred last night, the Township of Sidney lost one of its oldest, most respected and most successful yeomen. Deceased had been in failing health for some time, having about a year ago been the victim of a paralytic stroke, from which he never fully recovered.

Mr. Ketcheson, who was in his 82nd year, was born in the Township of Sidney, where he resided all his life. He was one of the most progressive farmers of that township, and a man who was esteemed by all who knew him. Through his demise a friend to many has passed away. In early life the deceased took an active part in militia matters, and for a number of years was captain of No. 3 company of the Hastings Rifles and subsequently the Forty-ninth Regiment. Although he did not go to the front during the troublous times in this country, he was ever ready to do so.

The deceased was a member of the Methodist church, and always took an active part in church work. In politics he was a staunch supporter of the Conservative party.

An aged widow and a family of five sons and one daughter survive. The latter is Mrs. Chas. Rose, of Sidney, and the sons are Tom, who occupies the position of governor of the County jail; Charles, William G., Daniel and Bleecker, all of Sidney. To the bereaved ones will be extended the sincere sympathy of a large circle of relatives and friends, in which The Intelligencer joins.

Monk Said "Skidoo" To Britain's King.

Naples, April 23. — The King and Queen of England, who are here on the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, spent the day in sightseeing. They visited various points of interest in the city.

Their Majesties approached the Church of Santa Chiara, with the intention of visiting it, but found it closed, as the monks in charge were taking their midday meal. A member of the Royal party knocked on the door for admittance. A monk came to the door, and, thinking those outside were beggars, did not trouble to open it, but called out so that they might hear: "Begone in peace; there is nothing for you here."

This remark amused King Edward immensely, and he laughed heartily. The visitors then knocked again and explained their desire to visit the church, but the sacristan, irritated at their persistence, shouted out: "Don't bother me: this is no time for sightseeing. The brothers are at lunch."

A Quiet Wedding

Mr. Edward McIntosh, of Thurlow and Miss Ethel McCoy, of this city, were on Monday evening united in marriage. The wedding took place at St. Andrew's church manse, and was performed by Rev. R. S. Laidlaw. The couple were unattended. They have taken up their residence in Thurlow.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

MISCALLED "HAIR TONICS."

Most Hair Preparations Are Merely Scalp Irritants, of No Value.

Most hair preparations are merely scalp irritants, miscalled hair tonics. When hair is brittle, lusterless and begins to fall out, the dandruff germ is getting in its deadly work at the root, sapping the vitality. Since science discovered that dandruff is a germ disease there has been only one preparation put on the market that will actually destroy the dandruff germ, and that is Newbro's Herpicide. It quickly reduces scalp fever, destroys the germ; and the falling hair stops, and hair grows luxuriantly. Ask your druggist for Herpicide. It allays itching instantly, and permits the hair to grow. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Australia and the Conference.

That Sir Wilfrid Laurier may have shown wisdom in declining to become too closely entangled with the representatives of Australia and New Zealand in their views of Imperial policy, is thought by the London Free Press. If all the nations are really to meet at Jerusalem, they must come by different routes, and so with the countries of the British Empire which, for want of a more "blessed word," pass by the name of "colonies."

So far as Canada is concerned, there is no question outstanding with the Mother Country if we leave aside that of commercial preference. We are purely self-governed. We have no disturbing issues with any country other than possibly the United States, and these are subject to amicable adjustment as affecting a class of persons or a locality.

Australia and New Zealand are also self-governing communities, but both have on their hands national issues with which Canada has no present concern, and should keep as far as possible aloof from.

Premier Deakin appears to have attempted to set the heather on fire by a speech at the Pilgrims' Club banquet in London, by claiming that "the colonies should be independent nations." He said Australia had problems which were not the problems of England, and in their solution she meant to take her own measures. He had reference especially to what is understood in Australia as the "yellow peril." Mr. Deakin is in power mainly on the question of labor, which question has been and threatens to be for years to come the paramount issue, as well as colonial handicap of Australia. The sugar belt in the south has been hindered by the rejection of yellow men from New Guinea. It must lie fallow because white workmen can no more endure the climate than they can that of Louisiana. On the north fierce dread of the Japanese sits like a nightmare, doubtless encouraged by jingo advocates who seek advancement by playing upon the prejudices of labor.

But if there is fear of a Jap invasion now, while England and Japan are on terms of complete amity, what would it be in the absence of such a treaty? Could Australia with its two or three million people thrust back a warlike nation of 45,000,000 bent on aggression? At this distance the treaty of alliance seems to be Australia's safeguard from that quarter.

But Mr. Deakin looks farther ahead. In his prophetic eye looms up a clash of arms for control of the Pacific, say in a hundred years' time, and that with Germany and Japan. He feels greatly grieved that Great Britain allowed other nations of the world to get a vantage ground in the Pacific Ocean: France in Guinea; Germany in Samoa, and the United States in the Sandwich Isles. He forgets that the "weary Titan" disclaims monopoly as too great a burden, and ignores the acknowledgment that there are other peoples entitled to a share of the world. Nor does he realize that in assisting the American Republic to create of itself a far-reaching power in the Pacific, Great Britain brought to her side an ally of greater puissance than Germany and Asia combined. The astuteness of the move which openly declared itself in the harbor of Manila after Dewey's victory has apparently not yet dawned upon the Australian mind.

Sir Wilfrid may have done well to keep his tinder away from the Australian "flint and steel," while ready to drop in with whatever proposals seem to the general purpose of the conference.

"Tainted Politicians."

The Sydney, C.B., Daily Post, in an article dealing with what it calls "Tainted Politicians," made this statement

"It must not be forgotten that quite a number of these politicians are growing rich at the public expense. Let us cite a few cases. The Robins Irrigation deal, which gives the public land to some supporters of Laurier at $1 an acre, has netted the recipients $850,000 so far. Mr. Bourassa, M. P., Sifton's brother-in-law, is now wealthy. He owns 478 square miles of timber lands, which he acquired during the reign of his relative in the Department of the Interior."

Mr. Bourassa, the member for Labelle, not relishing this use of his name, rose in the House of Commons and said. We quote from the official report of the debates:

"I need not say that I have neither the honor nor the advantage to be connected in any way with the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), nor have I the advantage of possessing 478 square miles or any square miles or square acres of timber lands in the Northwest or in the East. I had a few acres a few years ago, but since I have been in politics, NOT BEING CONNECTED WITH A MINISTER OF THE CROWN, they are all gone."

The intimation of Mr. Bourassa that had he been a "CONNECTION" of a Minister of the Crown, it might have been better with him, is the general opinion which prevails both in and out of Parliament. "A sad state of affairs!

Kingston Man Forged A Post Office Order.

The Kingston News gives the following particulars of a case which is worthy of note because of the rarity of the offence. The News says;

"One of Kingston's residents was caught on Saturday at a scheme that if pushed against him would mean a serious case against him. A young man in London, Ont., enclosed a post-office order in a letter and forwarded to a Kingstonian in payment of dues connected with an institution here. The gentleman to whom the money was sent unfortunately lost the letter, but immediately notified the post office authorities to hold up the order if presented. After waiting a few days and receiving no information he wrote to London asking the sender for the number of the order and his end of the slip, which was forwarded at once.

"Upon receiving this he took the number of the order to the post office and was informed that the order had been cashed but that it did not bear his name when presented.

"The Kingstonian thought he was out his money, but the post office authorities told him to wait and they would write to Ottawa and get the order back. They got the order, and also a department official to look up the case. He started to work on Saturday morning to find the man who had changed the name on the order. He found his man living on Montreal street, and on being confronted with the changed order, the guilty one tried to squirm out of it but later owned up to changing and cashing the paper. The culprit begged for mercy saying he would refund the money if they did not prosecute him. The money was refunded to the rightful owner and it is not likely the man will be prosecuted.

"When the schemer found the order bearing another name he changed it to his own."

"WE ARE FACING A TREMENDOUS PROBLEM"

"WE CANNOT AFFORD TO BE LONGER INDIFFERENT OR INACTIVE IN SO IMPORTANT A MATTER."

These are the words used by an influential member of the Ontario Legislature on the floor of the House regarding legislation to aid in saving thousands of lives that are very needlessly sacrificed every year. In an earnest speech he further said; "We must stem the terrible tide of this plague in our province. We must determine what public measures can most effectually be taken in this matter, independent of economic and financial considerations." And he is right! Five million people die annually of consumption. The majority of these lives could be saved, even after they have developed lung trouble, by the use of Psychine. Ninety per cent. of the cases could be absolutely prevented from ever reaching the consumption stage by using Psychine. It is the most remarkable remedy of to-day for the cure of la grippe, colds, coughs, catarrh, chills, pneumonia, stomach trouble and all run-down and wasted conditions. These are invariably the forerunners of consumption, and this is the absolutely safe stage in which to stop this disease. Build up your system by the use of Psychine, the greatest system builder and blood purifier known to medical science.

"I think there is no medicine like Psychine. I had a hacking cough, and when I would draw a breath, a wheezing noise in my lungs. I seemed to be getting worse till I was threatened with consumption. Then I started to use Psychine, and after using one bottle I breathe much easier and the wheezing noise is almost gone, I cannot praise Psychine too highly.

Kingston is to have a Marathon race, in which Bellevillians will be eligible to enter. Get busy, boys. The Whig says: "A large number of citizens, interested in sport, are talking of a Marathon race to take place not later than Labor Day. A prominent citizen told the Whig, to-day, that he would head the list with a subscription of $25, if a race could be arranged. There are a number of societies and athletic clubs in the city and each could enter any number of men in the race and, it is proposed, to be open to residents of Ontario, from Belleville to Brockville. A race of this kind would undoubtedly awaken considerable interest and might bring out runners who could successfully compete with the big ones at Toronto and Hamilton. The scheme is meeting with approval wherever mentioned.

The Eastern League baseball season opens to-day. Toronto's hired Yankees, as usual, will probably capture the cellar championship.

In both the National and American Leagues, New York and Chicago are running away ahead of their field. The race appears to be between the two big cities.

A Kingston Wedding

A quiet wedding was solemnized in St. James' Church, Kingston, Monday, when Miss Mabel King, fifth daughter of George King, Alice St. was married to Edward Herbert Pense, only son of E. J. B. Pense, M. P. P., by Archdeacon MacMorine. Only the closest relatives attended. The church was prettily decorated with flowers. The bride was given away by her father, and wore her travelling suit of navy blue chiffon broadcloth, with pipings and applique of Alice blue. The blouse was of hand embroidered lawn, and the smart hat of tuscan straw, trimmed with blue velvet, shaded brown flowers and grass. A pretty white feather boa completed the bride's costume. Her bouquet was of white roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Kathleen Kirkpatrick, wore white Panama cloth with white hat trimmed with blue tulle and pink roses, and her bouquet was of pink roses. The best man was Paul Whitney, of Ottawa. Mr. and Mrs. Pense left directly after the ceremony for Baltimore and Washington, going via Montreal. They will live in Toronto.

PUBLIC NOTICE

TO THE PEOPLE OF BELLEVILLE.

All persons in Belleville must hold themselves responsible for any weakness or suffering caused from old age, chronic coughs, or colds, bronchitis, weak lungs, run-down, conditions, stomach troubles, nervousness or poor blood when we are willing to sell them the real cod liver preparation, Vinol, and return their money if it does not benefit.

The reason Vinol is so successful in is because it contains in addition to tonic iron all the medicinal elements of cod liver oil actually taken from fresh cods' livers, but without oil or grease to upset the stomach and retard its work.

Unlike old-fashioned cod liver oil and emulsions, it is deliciously palatable, agreeable to the weakest stomach, therefore, unequalled as a strength creator and tonic reconstructor.

Our local druggist, J. S. McKeown, says: "It is because we know so well of what Vinol is made that we ask every rundown, nervous, debilitated, aged or weak person in Belleville, and every person suffering from stubborn colds, hanging-on coughs, bronchitis or incipient consumption to try Vinol on our guarantee." — J. S. McKeown.

What To Do In the Gentle Springtime.

(By George J. Fisher, M. D.)

Each spring season, with the first warm days, men become infected with that state of mind and body commonly referred to as the tired feeling. This feeling of inertia is expected as a matter of course. It is looked upon popularly as an essential condition of spring in the same sense a child to be healthy in later life must have measles, whooping cough and the mumps.

So when spring approaches every one gets physically ready to experience a slump in enthusiasm, energy, and initiative.

The fundamental cause of the stuffy, stifling, stupid-feelings of springtime is overeating and injudicious eating. Many persons eat just as heavily in the spring and summer as they do in the fall and winter, whereas the body does not need as much. There certainly is not so much bodily dissipation of heat in the warmer months and yet the tendency is to continue eating ravenously of heat-producing foods.

To be physically fit to enjoy the changing seasons of the year — eat less. Cut down feasting on fish, fowl and flesh. Ease up on peas and beans. Slow down on cheese. These foods give up energy quickly, but their effects do not last long. Their stimulating effect is followed by depression and enervation. They demand too much work of the assimilation organs and tax the heart and lungs with extra effort. Cut this form of your present diet down to one-third the amount—at least one-half—and an immediate favorable result will be experienced. In other words, ease up your internal organs. Many never do. Summer vacations are spent where there are the greatest ease-producing conveniences and the best cuisine.

Coincidently increase the exercise of your internal organs. Use your muscles. You have a great many of them. Just half of you, judged by weight, is made up of muscle tissue. Invariably in these days of city life these muscles are lamentably underworked. Walking will help. Hill climbing is fine. Each community has its natural physical features which offer opportunity for informal physical expression. Take advantage of them and life will be sweeter.

The correction of the depressing feelings of spring-time is largely a matter of personal hygiene. In addition to reducing your diet of proteids, dress seasonably, change underclothing frequently, bathe daily — these will add the feeling of cleanliness and coolness and will be factors in developing a refreshing state of mind.

To the business or professional man who has worked incessantly during the winter months the cause of that tired feeling is mental fatigue, nervous exhaustion. Many men who are in a condition of fatigue are not aware of it and yet their tissues are filled with fatigue products. When we are fatigued we are not ourselves, we have lost something. Self-control is at low ebb. The smallest annoyances are enough to make one lose his temper. The only thing to do with fatigue is to get rid of it as soon as possible. A change in the method of work will frequently do this. Therefore my springtime specific is eat less — exercise more — adjust conditions or work so as to dissipate fatigue.—Association Men.

A New Anaesthetic

A new anaesthetic which may be, and probably will be, of the greatest importance to surgery has been in use in England for some months, and some most remarkable operations have been conducted by its aid, says The Daily Graphic. The anaesthetic, which is called "stovaine," is not applied in the usual way by inspiration into the lungs, but is injected into the spinal column. It produces paralysis of the body below the point of injection, and removes all sensation from the limbs, so that it has been found possible to amputate a man's leg while the patient retained consciousness, and could, had he been allowed to do so, have even witnessed the operation. The patient could feel no pain; and after the operation, and when sensation returned, experienced nothing but the sense of bruising, which is one of the sequels of grave operations. For some time experiences with "stovaine" were confined to hospital cases; but we believe we are correct in saying that over a hundred cases have now been treated in private practice. The anaesthetic is, of course, of the greatest use in minor operations and in those where, owing to the patient's age or heart weakness, the administration of chloroform would be dangerous. It has been used in several gynaecological cases, and there is no evidence that any danger attends its use, or that, given proper administration, any prejudicial factors accompany or follow its use. It is, however, a drug of great potency, and demands the most skilful administrations so that for a time, at any rate, its application will be restricted to skilled operators. The curious name of the anaesthetic, "stovaine," is due to its discoverer, M. Fourneau. M. Fourneau was anxious to perpetuate his own name in connection with it, but as the anaesthetic was of the nature of cocaine, and no compound resembling that could be contrived out of "Fourneau," he translated the name into its English equivalent of "stove," and added the necessary termination.

ON EASY STREET.

(Chicago News.)

Pray, tell me where is Easy street,
That boulevard so bright,
Where life flows like a silvery song,
A dream of deep delight?
The present would seem grand and sweet,
The future without fear,
If I could live on Easy street
For six months in the year.

The gas man never threatens there,
His rent no landlord seeks;
The butcher or the milkman ne'er
Above a whisper speaks.
The cook is full of sweet good will
And always loves to stay;
The coal man dares not send his bill
Till folks may choose to pay.

But yet that favored street we see
On both sides, up and down,
To death's black camel open free
As any street in town;
And when before some darkening door
He takes his stubborn place,
Small heed has he of velvet floor,
Of purple or fine lace.

Alas, while good, bad, foul and fair
In every place are found,
There's no such street as Easy street
In all the world around.
But yet we feel that fate we'd meet
Without reproach or fear,
Could we but live on Easy street
For six months in the year.

Father Bernard Vaughan, the chastiser of the sins of society, discussing Justice Plowden's statement that women's nature is undergoing very considerable qualifications, and not for the better, said one thing was certain — women were daily becoming not only less religious, but more unreligious. The danger was that, owing to the entente cordiale, they may become like some of their French sisters, irreligious. Archdeacon Sinclair, of London, ascribed the degeneracy of women chiefly to drinking, especially secret drinking.

Among the centenarians recently discovered, is William Kingsley, an Irish-American, who is said to be 124 years old and who not only saw Nelson, but fought under him at the battle of Trafalgar, and was present at the famous admiral's death. Kingsley is probably the oldest person living, and he is undoubtedly the most remarkable centenarian alive. He was born in Cork in 1783, during the reign of George III. and he lived under five different sovereigns. Kingsley is now living at Stoddart, Miss.

The Boston Herald makes this comment on the outcome of the Thaw trial; "How any juror, mindful of his oath, and with intelligence enough to follow the admitted facts in this case, and to understand the Judge's charge, could refuse to convict the slayer of Stanford White of some degree of crime or to recommend his confinement in an asylum for the insane, it is difficult for ordinary minds to understand. But, as an experienced lawyer once said; 'The ways of a petit jury, like the ways of Providence are past finding out.'"

How Clouds and Fogs Differ.

Clouds are bodies of moisture evaporated from the earth and again partially condensed in the upper regions of the air. Fogs differ from clouds only in one respect—they come in contact with the surface of the earth, while clouds are elevated above our heads. When the surface of the earth is warmer than the lower air the vapor of the earth, being condensed by the chill air, becomes mist or fog. But when the lower air is warmer than the earth the vapor rises through the air and becomes cloud. Fog and mist differ in this respect—that mist is a fine rain, while fog is vapor not sufficiently condensed to allow of its precipitation in drops.

The Fata Morgana.

The most singular aerial phenomenon is the fata morgana, a sea mirage seen off the coast of Calabria and between Italy and Sicily. It presents the phantoms of cities, houses, temples, palaces and ships, sometimes in their proper position, sometimes inverted, occasionally at an angle. The phenomenon has been known for many ages and formerly occasioned great and widespread alarm, being regarded as an evil omen that betokened some general and severe calamity.

Curious Effects of Frost.

An egg expands when it is frozen so much that the increased bulk breaks the shell. Apples, on the contrary, contract to such an extent that a full barrel will shrink until the top layer will be a foot below the chime. When the frost has been slowly and carefully drawn out they again assume their normal size and appearance. Apples can be transported when the mercury is 20 degrees below zero. Potatoes once touched by frost are ruined.

A Lasting Impression.

"Well, Bertha, I hear you met Mr. Cooke yesterday. Did you like him?"

"Do you know, dear, he made an impression upon me that nothing will obliterate."

"Really! How—what did he say?"

"It wasn't what he said; it was what he did. He spilled a cup of tea over my new white silk dress."

Succeeded.

"She married him to reform him."

"Did she succeed?"

"Sure! He used to be a spendthrift and now he has nothing to spend."—Houston Post.

London's Rainfall.

If all the rain that falls in London in a year could be gathered and collected, the supply would amount to 40 tons of water for each person.

The French Census.

The French census, taken on March 4 last year, shows that the total population of France was 39,252,267, an increase over 1901 of 290,322.

The Girl Child.

Course we'd figured on a boy child, same as people always does.
Baby girls is jest th' uselessest they is or ever was;
Helpless when they're kids an' helpless when they're middle aged or old,
All th' fambly turns pertecter f'r th' ewe lamb in th' fold.
Dassent ever pop th' question even though she's lost in love;
Has to set an' wait till some one labels 'er his turtledove.
Yit it wan't a boy, by gracious, when it come th' other day!
But we've kind o' got a notion that we'll keep it anyway.

Course 'twas dretful disapp'intin' that she couldn't been a boy,
An' th' tears we shed—er swallered—wan't no sparklin' tears o' joy;
Still, she's small an' mighty dawncey, an' she cuddles up so sweet,
With 'er fists like velvet rosebuds an' her teenty, wrinkled feet,
Clingin' clost, jest like th' tendrils of th' mornin' glory vine
As it clambers up th' porch posts on a piece o' cotton twine.
She do'no' but what she's welcome as th' flowers is in May;
So we've somehow got th' notion that we'll keep 'er anyway.

Then ag'in I thought o' mother—she was onct a baby girl.
Ain't no tellin' jest which eyester is th' one that holds th' pearl.
Who could tell when she was little that she'd grow to be so great
An' would make my dear old daddy such a stiddy runnin' mate?
Then th' one that lays an' snuggles with that bran' new baby hyer—
Would my life be worth th' livin' if it hadn't been fer her?
She was jest as pink an' helpless as this new one is one day;
So it's middlin' easy guessin' that we'll keep 'er anyway.

Sell Father.

Thomas Ryan, in the course of an amusing address to a gathering of Acton cabmen in Acton priory schools, Central hall, told an anecdote of a costermonger who, after hard drinking, signed the pledge and prospered.

"The first money he saved from knocking off the bottle he spent in getting his hair cut. This kind of extravagance went on till they'd saved enough to buy a 'moke.' Oh, she was a daisy. Jinny they called her, and they kept her in the parlor downstairs—yes, that's the fact—while they lived overhead. The kids just doted on Jinny. But one morning when they came downstairs Jinny was gone. They asked their mother about her.

"'Jinny's sold,' she said sorrowfully. 'Your father's broke the pledge and is drinking again!'

"'But, mother,' cried the kids, 'Jinny didn't do it. Why don't you sell father?'"—London Daily Mail.

"I reckon not," replied the farmer, "but if you're a-going to make me unconscious I'd jest like to see how I stand."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Money a man has spent seldom worries him unless it was spent for something that interferes with his digestive apparatus.—Chicago News.

If a man has a testy temper it is folly to put it to the test.

BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1905) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

The oath that came from Onslow's lips as he whipped out a pistol, the look that accompanied it, were more eloquent than an hour's speech.

"De Nerac, I warned you, was an abler head than yours, my friend; he was concealed in the room when you and I arranged our little plan."

"What?" Onslow sat down in consternation.

"It is as I say. Yvonne, the wench, was his accomplice. She fooled you, that peasant girl; that is why our program was so suddenly altered."

She walked away with her swinging, graceful carriage of head and body. Had Onslow seen her eyes at that moment it would not have relieved the fears that haunted his face. But when she turned again she was smiling seductively.

"You want the paper," she said. "Here it is. I keep my word, you see." She quietly handed him the secret despatch and he pounced on it as a hungry vulture pounces on carrion.

"But how did you get it?" he demanded.

"I was at the Palace when the Chevalier stole it. Stealing it was not an easy task, for the Vicomte de Nerac was on the watch, but when I had got it I came straight here. The Chevalier went back to the inn. It would have been better," she added carelessly, watching him closely, "if he, too, had come here."

"Perhaps."

The girl stooped and fastened her shoe, for she knew that she could not always control her eyes. The shoe fastened she was smiling again at Onslow's trembling fingers.

"There is blood upon your boot," she remarked pleasantly, "you have been stepping in blood. Whose, I wonder?" She moved towards the curtain, and listened attentively, while she affected to pull the string.

"So De Nerac knew of the plan?" Onslow growled out. "That explains a good deal, but not all."

"You are right. If De Nerac meets the Chevalier at the inn he may know more," was the calm response. She had begun to take off her jewels and was packing them one by one into a leather case.

"What do you mean?"

"This. The game is up for you, my friend, and for me. There will be no more richly paid treachery for some time in our lives. The Chevalier loves me, loves me as his own soul. To save me he will probably betray what De Nerac does not already know——"

Onslow had risen. He buttoned up his coat over the despatch, while his eyes glowed with the unholy lust that was corroding his mind and body.

"And," she continued, "the Chevalier knows that I love him, love him more dearly than any man. I shall be grateful to his love if it saves him and saves me, as I think it will. But it cannot save you, I fear."

"Ah!" his breath came quick. His eyes went round and round like those of a beast tracked by dogs to its lair.

"Yes, I hope he will confess all." She faced him. "I tell you now that he went to the inn to confess all—all."

"Then," Onslow answered in a thick voice of brutal exultation, "he will not do it. He is dead, your Chevalier, your lover—dead."

She suppressed the cry of horror, of agony, that was wrung from her. But her great blue eyes fixed on him. "You killed him?" she asked in a whisper.

"I did."

She sank into a chair and covered her face with her hands. She was not crying. This was a sorrow too deep for tears.

Suddenly Onslow darted forward. The girl, too, sprang up. A horse's hoofs, several horses' hoofs, clattering furiously on the stones of the deserted Carrefour could be heard distinctly for those who had ears to hear.

"Miserable libertine!" she cried, in a terrible voice, "assassin! Your hour has come as I told you it would. You will not leave this house alive, and I am glad, very glad. Stand back!" she said peremptorily, and she had whipped out a pistol. The doors are locked, all of them. Dear God! I could slay you with my own hands, but it is not necessary."

She had swiftly stolen behind the curtains. There was a moment's pause while Onslow in vain tried to force the door by which he had entered. There was a crash, a wrench, and then the curtains were drawn back.

"Monsieur le Vicomte de Nerac—Monsieur George Onslow," the girl said quietly, as if she were introducing two gentlemen in a lady's salon. She had flung the window open and Andre, sword in hand, was standing in the room, looking about him half dazed but triumphant.

"That man there," she proceeded in her tearless voice, pointing at Onslow, "is an English spy. In his pocket is the secret despatch of Madame de Pompadour which you seek. He is the assassin, by his own confession, of the Chevalier de St. Amant, and he has also a valuable letter in the handwriting of the Comte de Mont Rouge. Monsieur le Vicomte, you will deal with him as and how you please, but if you have any pity for the blood of the man who sent you to this place you will have no mercy for a coward, a libertine, and an assassin. Adieu!"

She had swiftly unlocked one of the side doors, glided through it, and relocked it from the other side, leaving Onslow and Andre face to face.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Onslow had the advantage of Andre in his intimate knowledge of the essential facts of the situation; and he had not been for ten years an agent of the secret service, in daily peril of his life, in hourly need of having to decide at once on a course of action, without learning all that an able and desperate man can learn from pitting his wits against the wits of men and women as unscrupulous and desperate as himself.

"Good-evening, Vicomte," he now said, bowing politely. "I could not have wished for a more opportune meeting. As a proof, there are my pistols," he tossed them ostentatiously on to the table.

Andre drew the curtains behind him, threw off his cloak, and advanced into the centre of the room.

"You killed the Chevalier?" he demanded briefly.

"Certainly. Shall I tell you why? Because he had betrayed me; because, rather, he was the lover of the woman who betrayed me. That woman is the 'No. 101' you have sought for so long, who has baffled you before and has baffled you again to-night. She is a liar as well as a wanton."

Andre quietly shrugged his shoulders.

"Let us come to business," Onslow said coolly. "The secret despatch, I regret to say, is not in my possession. It would have been in ten minutes, but it is still in the keeping of the charming spy, who is probably now on her way to the frontier. Madame de Pompadour will hear more of it before long, but that does not concern you. What does," he held out a paper, "is this letter in the handwriting of the Comte de Mont Rouge."

Onslow's tone had the calmness of conviction, and if he spoke the truth Andre knew he had failed miserably. It was more than probable that "No. 101" had again baffled him. For the despatch was more important to her than to Onslow.

"Well?" Andre said to gain time for his mind to work.

"If you have this letter, Vicomte, you can ruin your enemies to-morrow. Let me tell you that Mademoiselle Denise was by loaded dice, the device of another beautiful wanton and her accomplice, the writer of this letter," he held it out, "yes, Mademoiselle Denise was chosen to steal the despatch in order that she, as well as you, might be destroyed. I see you did not know that. It is worth having, that letter."

Onslow recognized at once he had struck the right chord. Andre's face would have terrified the Comtesse des Forges, and it surprised himself as he caught a glimpse of it in the glass. Men in the white heat of wrath and baffled revenge so seldom see what their faces express.

"You can kill me, of course," Onslow went on easily. "I am an English spy. But you will not get the letter nor the despatch in that way. Why? Because I haven't the one, and before you can run me through the letter will be in the fire."

"Stop!" Andre commanded, for Onslow was very near the stove and the letter was very precious.

"For five minutes only," Onslow retorted. "Give me your word of honor that you will let me go free and you shall have the letter—or I destroy it and fight for my life as best I can. Make up your mind, Vicomte."

The clock ticked very loud and clear while Andre weighed the issues. The letter was precious; it was there, which the despatch was not; time was more precious still, for there remained "No. 101" to be dealt with. Onslow's life was of no value to Denise or himself. Andre studied the secret agent's calm face for three silent minutes.

"Give me the letter," he said at last, "you shall go free, on my word of honor."

"I thank you. But you have decided wisely." Onslow placed the letter on the table. "And now," he buttoned up his cloak, "kindly write me a pass, for I must leave your accursed city before dawn."

"The password at the Barrier of the Hospital of St. Louis is, 'La sante du Roi,'" Andre answered. "That will take you through in safety."

Onslow bowed. "My compliments, Vicomte; your precautions devised at such short notice do you infinite credit. I fancy we shall meet again, but not in the salon of 'the Princess' either in Paris or London."

Andre had moved towards the writing-table. "I had better write you a pass after all," he said, very politely, "the police are not so scrupulous as I am about a pledge of honor."

Onslow fell into the trap. Like many clever men who find a lie succeed beyond their expectations, he wholly misunderstood the motives that had persuaded the other to accept for truth what he feared was untrue. Andre had turned his back to write, but he had hardly scrawled three words when he wheeled with incredible swiftness.

"No!" he cried, "you don't stab two men in the back unawares in one night, traitor and spy."

For that was what Onslow had, dagger in hand, stealthily crept up to do, inspired by the sight of Andre's apparently defenceless position at the writing-table and by the desire to wipe out a long score. But a chair hurled with terrible force met him full in the stomach, and when he had recovered he was facing the sword point of the finest swordsman in Paris. He had lost his pistols, and the death his lies had averted so skillfully was at hand.

"I will tell you where you can find the secret despatch," the spy pleaded, "if you will let me go."

"I am not going to kill you," Andre answered. "A De Nerac's sword is not to be soiled with the carrion blood of an English hireling and assassin. The public executioner will deal with you, not I."

He whistled sharply. Three of the guards swung themselves in by the balcony.

"Disarm and bind that scoundrel," was the brief order, and in three minutes a wounded prisoner had been securely tied hand and foot. Five minutes later George Onslow was on his way to a police cell, and Andre was standing alone in the beautiful salon, with the secret despatch and Mont Rouge's damning letter in his possession.

He walked up and down trying to believe that his amazing good fortune was really true. The terrible strain of the last twelve hours had at last begun to tell, and, instead of the triumphant joy that he had imagined would be his should he achieve the impossible and recover the despatch, he was only conscious of complete mental and physical exhaustion, of a strange and utter weariness. The power of his mind seemed broken. His ambition had melted away. He had no doubt saved Madame de Pompadour, the King's secret would remain a secret, and Denise would emerge scathless from the awful ordeal into which she had been plunged. The love for which he had plotted, schemed, and worked would be his now. Yes, he had gained all of which ambition had inspired him to dream, more than all, for he had only to put into Madame de Pompadour's hands that guilty letter, and the men and women who had dabbled in treason to sate their jealousy and their lust for vengeance would be condemned to pass from the Salon de Venus and the Oeil de Boeuf to the scaffold.

Success! a Croix de St. Louis, a Cordon Bleu already! To-morrow he might be Minister for War, in the years to come he might share with the bourgeoise mistress of his Sovereign the rule of France. But at what a cost? As Madame de Pompadour had done and must always do, by sleepless intrigue and scheming, by playing on the fears and fancies, the bigotry and animal passions of the King, by checkmating or degrading the noblesse into an odious and reluctant submission. He had won power so far by such ways. It could only be kept at Versailles by the same hateful, sordid scuffling, and he, the man, must daily train himself to keep his place by trading on the weakness of women, from the kitchen wenches to the mistress of the robes, by trafficking in the selfish plans of gamblers as ambitious and unscrupulous as himself. Versailles was there, the King was there; Louis was what he would always be, an impenetrable sensualist and the despot of France. More bitter still, the life of the Court as he and she knew it was what he must ask Denise now to share and to lead. The first offering of their marriage feast would be the disgrace, perhaps the blood, of the men of his own order who had been his friends, by whose side he had fought for France, and of the women to whom—. Bah! it was a revolting thought. Little, indeed, had he foreseen when he rode down the hill from the Castle of Beau Sejour, and swore that at all costs and by all means he would win Denise, what success might and did mean. Well, ah well! he had learned it at last.

Ah! in this bitter hour, if it had not been for Denise, he would have flung despatch and letter into the fire, and left Paris to cast its mystic spell of tears and laughter on other men, and let him go free, deaf to the siren song of the ambitions of their mother, the enchantress of cities.

Success! Yet had he succeeded after all? Surely not. "No. 101" had escaped. Futile to seek her now. Her papers had been destroyed. She was doubtless provided with a pass. Proof against her there was none. And the mystery with which his search had begun was as great as it had ever been. Yvonne had vanished, the Chevalier de St. Amant was dead, and the woman herself had passed triumphantly into the moonlit autumn night. How strange and puzzling it all was. Yet, had not indeed the Chevalier put him on the track, had she herself not delivered that assassin and spy into his power? In a few days not even Onslow—and who would believe Onslow?—would be able to reveal what he knew. The secret whose fascination lured men to their ruin would remain a secret and the little he had discovered would be buried in the tombs of the De Neracs. This girl had matched herself against all the brains and resources of a great government and had defeated King, mistress, and ministers, not once, but every time. Worse, far worse, what she had done in the past she could repeat in the future. That eternal struggle for power at Versailles which was to be his and Denise's life from to-day would be haunted and poisoned, perhaps thwarted and brought to ruin, by the same strange treachery. The blood of the Chevalier would taint the life of Denise and himself and of Madame de Pompadour and the King for ever.

The clock on the mantelpiece chimed out four. Andre stopped his pacing. He must return to Versailles, but as he crossed the room he caught a glimpse of his haggard, sleepless face and burning eyes in the mirror, and he halted and with trembling fingers turned the clock sharply round. He had spied the reflection of a familiar crest on the reverse of the timepiece. "Dieu Le Vengeur!" He had not been wrong. The words were written round the crest. "Dieu Le Vengeur!"

Andre drew a deep breath, he looked all round the room with a shiver. What did it— A rustle of a woman's dress. The great curtains were quickly drawn aside. The Princess, as he had seen her first in London with the blood-red flowers on her breast, was watching him, pale and beautiful.

"Why should the clock not be there?" she asked, as if she were continuing a conversation. "Are you so ignorant of Paris, Vicomte, as not to know that the salon in which you stand once belonged to the owners of the clock? It is a fine motto and truer than most. 'Amour fait tout,' for example." She had smilingly selected the motto of the De Neracs. "You don't agree?"

"I did not come here," Andre answered, "to discuss mottoes."

The appearance of this woman had awakened all his latent anger, his sense of defeat. She should not escape him again.

"No, but to do my business," she retorted. "I see you have won your despatch and your letter"—they were lying on the table—"and I gladly infer that you have given a scoundrel his deserts. For that I thank you from the bottom of my heart. One libertine and traitor less in the world is a blessing even to women such as I am."

Her perfect calm, the complete absence of fear, the extraordinary strangeness of their meeting, the crest and motto on the clock, had reduced Andre to impotent silence. The Princess and crystal-gazer quietly sat down. "One question before you go," she said in a changed tone—"did Onslow tell the truth when he said that the Chevalier de St. Amant was dead?"

"Yes."

She stretched her arms,—the gesture was curiously familiar to Andre,—but she said nothing for some minutes. "It is fate," was her comment in a tearless voice when she spoke at last. "Fate!" she rose, "fate, dear God!" She was staring with knitted fingers into the cold shadows cast by the four flickering candles. And Andre was more moved by the sight of her stern, impassive self-restraint than if she had wept. Surely she had loved the dead man, for he was in the company of a sorrow too sacred to be fathomed even by herself.

"Why did you come back," he asked bitterly, "why did you come back?"

She awoke from her reverie. "Where could I go?" she answered. "To 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold'?" She shivered. "To 'The Gallows and the Three Crows,' where your police are now? To the Barriers that are guarded by your men? I had not the password. The man who would have given it to me, had I chose to ask it, I have sent to his account. No, my friend, I prefer to be arrested by a gentleman who will do his duty like a gentleman, and will not chaffer with me as if I were a street-walker."

Andre wiped the perspiration from his brow. The woman smiled and approached him.

"Come, Vicomte," she said. "It is disagreeable, perhaps, for Andre de Nerac to arrest a beautiful woman, but you have kept your men waiting quite long enough in the Carrefour out there. Onslow has gone to the Bastile? Yes? Then do me the favor of sending me to Vincennes. I cannot share the same prison as that miscreant murderer." She walked towards the curtains. Andre guessed she was about to signal to the square.

"Stop," he cried, in sharp despair, "stop!"

"You have no choice," she said. "Are you aware that I have been tracked to this house; that it is known to your police, warned by yourself four hours ago, that I have not left it? Do you doubt my word? Then look." She cautiously drew back a curtain on the panelled wall which covered a small window. Andre, with the curtain behind him shutting out the light, stared into the moonlit court at the back. When he let the curtain fall his face wore almost the look of the hunted felon.
